IT is diſputed among the learned of the Jews, what ſhould be the occaſion of burnt-offerings, and whereupon they became due. And I find the debate concluding in this reſolution, that either they were to expiate for the evil thoughts of the heart, as ſin-offerings, and treſpaſs-offerings were to do for evil actions: or to expiate for the breach of affirmative precepts, as thoſe did for negative. (a) Rabbi Akibah queſtioned, For what doth a burnt-offering expiate? For matters whereupon there is a penalty, &c. or concerning affirmative precepts, and concerning negative precepts, whereunto ſome affirmative precept doth refer. And (b) the body of the Beaſt (ſaith Aben Ezra) that is offered to expiate for that that comes up into the heart, is called עולה as the offering for a ſin, or a treſpaſs, is called חטאת & אשם To which ſenſe the Chaldee paraphraſe of Jonathan alſo ſpeaketh, when rendring thoſe words in *Lev.*6.9. This is the Law of the burnt offering; &c. he gloſſeth thus, This is the Law of the burnt offering, which cometh to expiate for the thoughts of the heart; upon which the Hebrew marginal gloſs giveth this explanation; It is ſo written in Vajikrah Rabbah, that a burnt-offering cometh not, but for the thoughts of the heart: and there is an intimation of this in theſe words, העולה על רוחכם היה לא תהיה That that is come up into your heart ſhall in no wiſe come to paſs.

(b) Aben Ezra in Lev. 1.

Burnt-offerings were of any of the five living Creatures named, and the manner of their offering was thus:

(c) Id. ibid.

If his burnt offering were a Bullock, he might take him (c) from eight days old and upward, and ſo alſo might he do by a Lamb or Kid: And it muſt be a male, becauſe the burnt offering being the nobleſt offering ſaith Aben Ezra, it required the nobleſt of the kind that was, to be offered.

1. He was to bring it into the Court, for the law was expreſs that he muſt preſent his offering before the Lord, *Lev.*1.3. Now this Phraſe, before the Lord, was underſtood (d) from the gate of Nicanor and inward; and the bringing of the Sacrifice into the Court was of ſo ſtrict and an inviolable obligation, (e) that women, who otherwiſe were abſolutely forbidden to come into the Court, yet if they brought a Sacrifice they were bound and neceſſitated to go in thither, as was touched but even now.

the tenth and the Paſſover. This laying on of hands, was a Rite of tranſmiſſion as it were, of the mans ſin unto the Sacrifice that was to dye for him, and in his death which was now ready, he acknowledged his own deſert to dye, and ſo it was a figure of the laying of our ſins upon Chriſt, and an emblem of repentance.

About the laying on of the hands, they had theſe divers Traditions, as 1. That it was to be in the Court; and if he laid his hands on him before he came into the Court, he muſt do it there again; and if the offerer of the Sacrifice ſtood without the Court, and put his hands within, and laid it on the head of the Beaſt within, it ſerved the turn: as is obſerved elſewhere about the Leper in the gate of Nicanor. 2. The owner of the beaſt muſt lay on his hands himſelf, and might not do it by proxy; which is to be underſtood in reference to particular mens ſacrifice, for ſome of the Sacrifices of the whole Congregation had their Deputies or Proxies to lay their hands on them, as was obſerved even now. 3. If divers men joined in one Sacrifice [(f) as divers might] every one was to lay on his hand particularly one after another. 4. There is ſome diſpute among the Hebrew Doctors whether they laid on one hand or both, and there are aſſertors on both ſides, but all conclude in this, that whether one or both, he muſt lay them on with all his ſtrength, and all the ſtreſs he can. And ſo the Targum of Jonathan (which holds for one hand only) ſaith, He ſhall lay on his right hand with all his force: and Maimonides (which holds for both the hands) ſaith, he was to lay on both his hands and that with all his might. 5. The place where he ſtood to lay on his hands, was ordinarily the place where the Sacrifices were ſlain at the place of the rings, and ſo upon this occaſion an Iſraelite might and muſt come within the Court of the Prieſts. 6. The manner was thus; * the Sacrifice was ſo ſet, as that the offerer, ſtanding with his face towards the Weſt, laid his two hands between his horns, and confeſſed his ſin over a ſin offering, and his treſpaſs over a treſpaſs offering, and over a burnt offering he confeſſeth his tranſgreſſion both againſt affirmative and negative precepts, and his confeſſion was in this wiſe; I have ſinned, I have done perverſly, I have rebelled and done thus and thus; but I return by repentance before thee, and let this be my expiation: And preſently after this his confeſſion, was the beaſt to be ſlain.

(f) Id. ibid. & R. Sol. in Lev. 1.

* Toſaph in Menachoth per. 10. & Maym. ubi ſupr.

3. The killing of the Sacrifice was regularly and ordinarily the Prieſts work and office, yet might it upon occaſion be done by another: or if it were done by another, it was allowable: For whereas the Law ſaith, And he ſhall kill the bullock before the Lord, and the ſons of Aaron the Prieſts ſhall bring the blood and ſprinkle it, Levit. 1.5. as making a diſtinction betwixt the he that killed the bullock, and the Prieſts that took the blood, the Hebrew Doctors have obſerved not impertinently from hence, that שחיטת הקדשים כשירה בזרים אפי׳ קדשי הקדשים (g) The killing of the Sacrifices was lawful by ſtrangers, yea of the moſt holy ſacrifices, were they the ſacrifices of a particular perſon, or of the whole Congregation: And upon theſe words, And the ſons of Aaron the Prieſts ſhall bring the blood: it is a received tradition, that from thence moſt properly did begin the Prieſts office more peculiarly, ſee 2 Chron. 30. 16, 17.

(g) Maym. in Biath Mikdaſh per. 9. & in Corbonoth per. 5 & R. Sol. in Lev. 1.

4. The fleaing of the ſlain Sacrifice was not ſo inſeparably the Prieſts office, but that a ſtranger, or one that was not a Prieſt might do it. And ſo Maimonedes aſſerteth in the place cited above, that the fleaing of the ſacrifice, and the dividing of it into pieces, and bringing wood to the Altar done by ſtrangers, was lawful. This they did eſpecially at the Paſſover and other feſtival times when the Paſchal Lambs, and the other offerings were ſo many that the Prieſts could not ſerve to kill and flea them; but whoſoever killed or flead, the Prieſts ever ſprinkled the blood, and none elſe might do it.

When the number of the beaſts to be flead were not too many for that receipt, they hung him by the legs upon the hooks that were faſtned in the lower pillars, (which we have deſcribed elſewhere) and in the tranſom over them for that purpoſe; (i) but at Paſſover when there were more Lambs than that room would admit, two men took a ſtaff or bar, (divers of which ſtaves ſtood there for that end) and laying it upon their ſhoulders, they hung the Lamb upon it, and as he hung thus between them, they flead him. Rabbi Eliezer ſaith, if the Paſſover fell on the Sabbath (on which day they might not meddle ſo well with carrying of Staves) a man laid his hand upon his fellows ſhoulder, and his fellow laid his hand upon his ſhoulder, and upon their arms they hanged up the Lamb, and ſo flead him. All the skins of the moſt holy ſacrifices, that is, burnt offerings, ſin offerings, and treſpaſs offerings, fell to the Prieſts, and the Prieſts of the Courſe ſalted them all week, and on the eve of the Sabbath divided them; but the ſkins of the other ſacrifices, fell to the offerers, or owners themſelves.

(i) Ibid. Sect. 9.

5. The ſprinkling of the blood, was to be before the ſacrifice was flead, for this was the rule, and that agreeable to the Law אין מפשיטין אותן עד שיזרק הדם They flead them not till one had ſprinkled the blood; for in the Law there is mention of the ſprinkling the blood, before there is mention of fleaing, Lev. 1.5,6. The manner of their ſprinkling of the blood upon the Altar, and the circumſtances about that, were very various; we will take up the chiefeſt of them in their order.

Firſt,

First, The blood that was to be ſprinkled, was to be taken in a diſh or veſſel of the ſervice, and not in a common veſſel of a mans own; and that is a conſtant and rational maxim קבול דמן בכלי שרת (k) That the taking of the blood of the Sacrifices muſt be in a veſſel hallowed for the ſervice.

(k) Vid. Zevac. per. 5. per totum.

Secondly, (l) Theſe ſeveral ſorts of people might not take the blood to ſprinkle it, and if they did it was polluted. 1. A ſtranger, or one that was not a Prieſt. 2. A Prieſt a mourner, אונן that is, he that had one dead in his family that day; for (m) whoſoever had one dead in his houſe, all that day of the parties death, he was called a mourner אונן 3. He that had been unclean, ſo that he was to waſh that day, and his Sun was not yet down. 4. He that had been under a longer uncleanneſs, and his atonement not yet made. 5. A Prieſt that had not all the holy garments on that he ought to wear. 6. One uncircumciſed. 7. One that was unclean. 8. One that ſate, or ſtood on any thing whileſt he took the blood, but on the very pavement of the Court; for in the ſervice they might not ſtand upon any veſſel, or beaſt, or hide, or on his neighbours foot, but on the bare pavement. 9. He that took the blood with the left hand, ſome held it unlawful, but others were of another mind.

(l) Ibid. per. 2. ab initio.

(m) Gloſſe in Miſnajo. b, ibid.

Thirdly, (n) Whereas there was a red line about the Altar juſt in the middle between the bottom and the top, the blood of ſome ſacrifices were to be ſprinkled beneath that line, and ſome above, and if that that was to be ſprinkled below, was ſprinkled above; and if that that was to be ſprinkled above, was ſprinkled below, it was unlawful.

(n) Zevech. ib.

Fourthly, (o) The ſprinkling of the blood of burnt offerings, and treſpaſs offerings, and peace offerings, went all by one rule and manner, and it was thus; The Prieſt bringing it to the Altar, was to ſprinkle it below the red line, and he was to ſprinkle it into the faſhion of the Greek Gamma, or into this form ⌐; for ſo is the tradition in the Gemara of (p) the Treatiſe Zevachim cited ere while; and ſo is the meaning of Maymony, when he ſaith it was to be כמין גם Now the meaning of the thing is this; He was to go (as the margin of the Talmud gloſſeth) to a corner of the Altar, and to caſt the blood out of the veſſel ſo, as that it ſhould ſpread to two ſides of the Altar at once; which my laſt named Author gives more plainly thus, and more at large. (q) He was to ſprinkle it out of the veſſel, but two ſprinklings upon two ſides of the Altar, namely, at the North-eaſt corner and at the South-weſt corner; and he muſt take care to ſprinkle the blood at the corner, ſo as that it may go on both the ſides of the Altar, like a Gamma (thus ⌐,) ſo that the blood at the two ſprinklings may be found upon all the four ſides of the Altar. Their meaning is this, that as he ſtood on the Eaſt ſide of the Altar, near to the North-eaſt corner, he muſt caſt the blood out of the veſſel with ſuch a compaſſed and kembo caſt, that part of it may light on the Eaſt ſide, on which he ſtands, and part of it on the North ſide. And the like was he to do ſtanding on the Weſt ſide, near the South-weſt corner, that part of it might light on the Weſt ſide, on which he ſtood, and part of it on the South. And thus they accounted that they anſwered the command, which did enjoyn them that they ſhould ſprinkle the blood round about, upon the Altar, Lev. 1. 5. & 3, 8. And the reſt of the blood they poured upon the foundation of the Altar on the Southſide. By this may that difficult expreſſion be underſtood, which occurreth exceeding frequently in the Jewiſh writers, when they are ſpeaking about ſprinkling the blood of the Sacrifices, that ſuch and ſuch Sacrifices blood דמן טעון שתי מתנות שהן ארבע is to have two ſprinklings, which are four. The diſpoſal of the blood in ſprinkling they call מתנה a giving; and ſome bloods were to have ארבע מתנות four givings, or ſprinklings, namely, on the four corners of the Altar, and others were to have but two, as theſe mentioned at the two corners of the Altar: but theſe two proved as much as four, becauſe they ſprinkled all the four ſides of it, after the manner deſcribed.

(o) Maym. in Corbanoth per. 5

(p) Zevach. per 5. fol. 53.

(q) Maim. ubi ſup.

The ſprinkling of the blood upon the horns of the Altar, (as the blood of the ſin offerings was uſed) ſhall be obſerved by and by, and ſo ſhall the extraordinary conveyance of the blood of the Paſchal Lambs to the Altar, be obſerved when we come to Treat of the Paſsover.

6. (f) The Lamb to be ſlain (for of the daily Sacrifice we will take an example) was bound his forelegs and hinder legs together, and laid thus bound with his head toward the South, and his face toward the Weſt, and he that killed him ſtood on the Eaſt ſide of him with his face Weſtward. He killed him, and one took the blood and ſprinkled it, and then he hanged him up upon ſome of the hooks in the low pillars, and began to flea him: He flead till he came down to the breaſt, and when he was gone ſo far, he cut off his head, and gave it to him that was alotted to take it, and carry it to the Altar; he cut off the legs and gave them to another, and ſo he goes on and fleas him out; he then cuts open the heart and brings out the blood there; cuts out the two ſhoulders and gives them to him that was alotted for their carriage; cuts off the right leg and with it the ſtones; opens him quite, and takes out the fat, and lays it at the ſlaughter place; he takes out the bowels and gives them ſome to waſh, who firſt waſhed them well in the waſhing room, and then waſhed them a little again on the marble tables; then takes he the knife and parts between the lights and the liver, but takes them not out yet; he takes off the breaſt and gives it to him that was to carry it, and ſo goes along the right ſide and cuts that out, and goes down to the ſpine bones, and there cuts out the loins, and ſo proceeds in other parcels; the manner how is at large related in the Treatiſe and Chapter cited above in the margin, but not ſo very material or neceſſary to our preſent purſuit, as to ſpend much time and labour thereupon: the learned Reader will peruſe it there; and the unlearned, would think it too tedious to peruſe it here.

7. The ſeveral Prieſts with the ſeveral parts of the divided Sacrifice in their hands, come to the riſe of the Altar (t) and there they lay them down and ſalt them. For this, the Law was very ſtrict, Lev. 2.13. With all thine offerings thou ſhalt offer Salt; and their obſervance of it was anſwerably ſtrict alſo, for * nothing came on the Altar unſalted, but only the wine of the drink offering, the blood ſprinkled, and the wood of the fire: and in three places they uſed ſalt; in the chamber of the ſalt they ſalted the skins of the Sacrifices; upon the riſe of the Altar they ſalted the parts of the Sacrifices; and on the top of the Altar they ſalted the handful of flour and oil, and the frankincenſe, Lev. 2.2. and the moſt offerings that were to be burnt, and the burnt offerings of birds. This Typical Law, our Saviour raiſeth, to ſignifie the ſeaſoning of every man with the Word of God, which he calleth ſalting with fire, Mark 9.49. for the word is called fire, *Deut.*33.2. Jer,5.14. & 20.9. & 23.29. 1 *Cor.*3.13, &c. And when he ſaith, Every one ſhall be ſalted with fire, (u) Non prædicit aliquid futurum, ſed oſtendit quid ab omnibus requiratur, nempe ut verbo incorrupto conditi ſeſe Deo conſecrent.

(t) Maym. in Corban. per.6.

* Id. in Iſſure Mizbeahh. per.5

(u) Erra in loc

The parts of the Sacrifice being ſalted, the Prieſt that was to offer them, took them up, carried them up to the Altar, and threw them confuſedly into the fire; he firſt cut out the ſinew that ſhrank, and threw it among the aſhes, and then he caſt all the pieces on an heap into the fire without any order. For though the Law injoined that the pieces ſhould be laid in order upon the fire, Lev. 1.8. and although their manner was to lay the beaſt on the fire, as like to his poſture whileſt he was alive as they could, namely, his head before, and his ſhoulders and foreparts next, and the reſt in order; yet at the firſt laying of them on, they thought they found ſome colour in the Law of injunction, that they ſhould ſcatter the fleſh as well as ſprinkle the blood, and therefore they threw them on at the firſt without any order, or diſtinction, and then they ordered them, and ſo let them lie to burn.

SECT. II.

Sin offerings. חטאת.

THE Law concerning Sin offerings, doth particularize no more about the occaſion of them, but only thus, that they were to be offered for ſins ignorantly committed againſt any of the Commandments of the Lord, concerning things which ought not to be done, Lev. 4.2, 13,22,27. that is, that they were offered for ſins of ignorance, againſt negative precepts: But the Hebrew Doctors do generally confine them to thoſe ſins done ignorantly againſt negative precepts, that if they had been done wittingly, had deſerved cutting off, אין חטאת באה אלא על שורנו לאו וכרת ושגגתו חטאת (a) A ſin offering was not offered (ſaith Rabbi Solomon) but for a matter which if wittingly done againſt a negative command, deſerved cutting off; but being ignorantly done, it required a ſin offering. And ſo the Talmudick Treatiſe Kerithuth, when it had reckoned up the ſix and thirty offences againſt ſuch precepts that bring under the liableneſs of being cut off; it concludeth thus, כל אלו חייבין על זדונם כרת ועל שגגתן חטאת (b) Any of theſe committed wilfully, deſerve cutting off, but if ignorantly done, they require a ſin offering. (c) And whoſoever (ſaith Maymony) tranſgreſſeth ignorantly againſt any of the negative precepts, in which there is an action, for which men become liable to cutting off; he is bound to bring a ſin offering, and it is an affirmative command that he offer a ſin offering for his errour: and every tranſgreſſion, for the doing of which wilfully, a man deſerves cutting off; for the doing of it ignorantly he is to bring a ſin offering. Aben Ezra goeth yet a little further, but for ought I find, he goeth alone; for he defineth a ſin offering to be (d) for a ſin of ignorance againſt a negative precept, which if wilfully committed, deſerved cutting off, or whipping. In the addition of this laſt word whipping, I find not the reſt of his Nation to agree with him; for divers offences againſt prohibitions of the Law fell under whipping, that fell not under cutting off; and the Jews do moſt unanimouſly apply a ſin offering to a ſin of ignorance only, whoſe wilfulneſs had incurred cutting off. And the reaſon of this their limitation, is in regard of the nature of the tranſgreſſion, or offence; for whereas (e) they number 365 negative precepts, according to the number of the days in the year, yet do they bring the number of ſin offerings (f) only in reference to three and forty of them; meeting meeting thoſe ſins of ignorance only with ſin offerings, which were moſt near a kin to thoſe of the higheſt danger, but that ignorance did mitigate, and make the qualification.

It is true indeed, that there are ſome ſin offerings appointed by name, which cannot exactly be brought under this predicament, of which we are ſpeaking; as was the ſin offering of Aaron upon his conſecration, *Lev.*9.2. the ſin offering of the woman at her purification, *Lev.*12.6. and of the Leper at his cleanſing, Lev. 14. 19. for we can hardly aſcribe theſe, as offered for ſome particular ſin of ignorance againſt ſome negative precept, the wilful violation of which, had deſerved cutting off; But they ſeem rather to be offered, that they might make ſure work to meet with that danger or offence, that it was poſſible, they might lye under, and not know of it; and ſo they were very near the nature of treſpaſs offerings, as a ſin offering is alſo called, Lev. 5. 6. But where the Law doth give the rules for ſin offerings, it nameth not any particular offence, but only this general, that they were to be preſented, in reference to the ignorant offending againſt a negative command, and therefore to reduce them to particulars, it was moſt pertinent to allot them to that ignorant offending, which if it had proved wilfulneſs, had made the foreſt breach betwixt God and Man; the reconciling of whom was the end of Sacrifice. Let us take one or two examples for the better underſtanding of what hath been ſpoken, and then we will look after the ſin offerings in their ſeveral kinds.

It was a negative precept, the wilful and witting violation of which deſerved cutting off; Thou ſhalt do no work on the ſeventh day. (g) And what is a man liable to for working on the Sabbath? If he did it of his own will preſumptuouſly, he is liable to cutting off; and if witneſſes and evidence of it came in, he was to be ſtoned; but if he did it ignorantly, he was to bring the appointed ſin offering, when he knew what he had done. And all along the Treatiſe of the Sabbath (they are the words of Maymony) whereſoever it is ſaid he that doth ſuch or ſuch things, is חייב כרת Guilty; it meaneth he is liable to cutting off; and if there be witneſs and evidence, he is liable to be ſtoned; but if he did it ignorantly, he is חייב חטאת bound to bring a ſin offering.

(g) Id. in Sabbath per.1.

Another offence that deſerved cutting off, was going into Sanctuary in uncleanneſs, which was contrary to that frequent prohibition, that no unclean perſon ſhould come there. And if any unclean perſon did wittingly and preſumptuouſly go in thither in his uncleanneſs, he became liable to cutting off; if witneſs came in, that he had done this preſumingly and knowingly, he was to be whipt or mauled with the rebels beating, as hath been obſerved; and if he did it ignorantly, he was to bring his offering: which offering in ſomething indeed differed from the ſin offerings in other caſes, (for whereas every one of them was חטאת קבעות an appointed ſin offering of ſome beaſt or other, this was קרבן עולה ויורד (h) an offering aſcending, or deſcending, (i) that is, of a higher or lower value according to the perſons ability that did offer it; if he were rich, he brought ſome Beaſt, but if he were poor, two Turtles, or Pigeons, or a tenth deal of flower,) yet was the riſe or occaſion of this his offering ſuitable to all the other. By theſe examples may eaſily be apprehended the like proceeding in the reſt of the ſix and thirty, or three and forty, (for into ſo many the ſix and thirty do branch themſelves) but concerning the committing the thing wilfully and ſuffering for it; or ignorantly, and offering for it.

(h) Kerithuth. per.1.
(i) Gloſſ. ibid.

Now (for the diſtinguiſhing of ſin offerings) they were either ſin offerings of the whole Congregation, or ſin offerings of particular perſons, *Lev.*4. 3, 13, 22, &c. But when we ſpeak of the ſin offerings of the whole Congregation, the words admit ſome ſcrupling, whether it mean the whole body of the people, or the Sanhedrin only, who were their repreſentatives: And we muſt anſwer, that it meaneth both: For,

1. There was the ſin offering Goat, which was offered on the day of expiation; it was an offering for the whole Congregation *Lev.*16.15. (the diſpoſal of which, we ſhall obſerve afterward) and this we may take for the whole body of the people undividedly.

2. There was the ſin offering Bullock for the whole Congregation, whereof mention is made, Lev. 4. 13, &c. which by the Jews is commonly called in their writings העלם דבר The Bullock for the thing hid, becauſe it is ſaid in the Text alledged, And the thing he hid from the eyes of the Aſſembly: In this matter, both the Sanhedrin and the people were included; and ſo included, that the Sanhedrin was the firſt tranſgreſſor ignorantly, and the people tranſgreſſed alſo by their errour. Rabbi Solomon explains it thus, (k) By the Congregation of Iſrael is meant the Sanhedrin; and by the thing being hid, is meant, that they have erred in teaching concerning any of the cuttings off in the law, that ſuch or ſuch a thing is free, and the Aſſembly have done according to their determination. But Maymony more largely, and more clearly thus, (l) In any thing for which being ignorantly committed, men were bound to bring the ſin offering appointed, if the great Sanhedrin erred in their determinations, and taught to looſe what was bound; and the people erred by their determination, and did the thing relying upon their determination, and afterward it comes to the knowledge of the Sanhedrin that they have erred; Behold the Sanhedrin is bound to bring a ſin offering for their errour in their determination, although they themſelves did not the thing it ſelf; becauſe the actions of the Sanhedrin are not looked after whether they do ſo, or do not ſo, but it is looked after how they determine: And as for the reſt of the people, they are quit from an offering, becauſe they relied upon the Sanhedrins decree: Now what offering was it that they brought? If they had erred about any of the cuttings off (except Idolatry) every Tribe was to bring a Bullock: and ſo particular perſons were acquitted, and one Bullock for every Tribe atoned both for the Tribes, and for the Sanhedrin, who were their repreſentatives. And ſomething to this ſenſe looketh the Targum of Jonathan when he rendreth the fifteenth verſe of that fourth chapter of Leviticus thus: * And twelve Elders of the Congregation that are ſet as Rulers over the twelve Tribes, ſhall lay their hands on the head of the Bullock: where his Hebrew marginal gloſſary takes Rab and Rabbi Solomon to task for holding a leſs number of perſons laying on of their hands upon his head. || I am not of opinion (ſaith he) either with Rab or Rabbi Solomon, the one whereof, ſaith that three, and the other, that five laid on their hands. For the matter is plain from what is written: [and the Elders of the Congregation ſhall lay on their hands] that it meaneth Elders of all the Congregation: and it appeareth alſo from this, becauſe all the Congregation have ſinned, and why ſhould three or five only lay on their hands? But they were twelve, namely of every Tribe one: where though he ſeem to hold that there was but one Bullock, and the Targumiſt upon whom he comments, ſpeak but of one neither, yet is it apparent by other writers of their Nation, that the Bullocks were twelve, and upon what ground they brought them to that number whereas the Text ſpeaketh but of one, ſhall be obſerved within a few lines.

3. If the Sanhedrin erred about the matter of Idolatry and determined concerning it, what was not right, and the people upon their determination did practice accordingly, and erred alſo, then was there a Bullock and a Goat to be brought for every Tribe for a ſin offering when the errour came to be known and taken notice of, and this they collect from Numb. 15.24. by this manner of Logick; whereas it is there ſaid * [If ye have erred and have not obſerved all theſe Commandments:] what ſin is that that breaketh all the Commandments? That is Idolatry, It breaketh the yoak, violateth the covenant, and diſcovereth the face, or is impudent in evil. And whereas it is ſaid at Levit. 4.14. Then the Congregation ſhall offer הקריבו חקהל they conſtrue it diſtributively both in this caſe and in that laſt before, || Every Congregation ſhall offer, that is, every one of the Tribes, and ſo there were twelve Bullocks in the caſe before, and twelve Bullocks and twelve Goats in this caſe in hand. Theſe Goats are commonly called in Jewiſh writers שעירי עו The Goats for Idolatry, and שעירים נשרפים The burned Goats, and the Bullocks, called the burned Bullocks. Not but that the Bullocks that were offered in reference to other matters, than Idolatry, were burnt alſo, but becauſe by this means a diſtinction is made between פר פרים נשרפים העלם דבר הצבור The Bullocks of the Congregation for the matter hid, and The Bullocks of the Congregation for the matter of Idolatry.

* R. Sol. in Numb. 15.

The blood of theſe Bullocks, that referred both to the one matter and to the other, was brought within the holy place, and there the Prieſt dipping his finger into it, ſprinkled of it ſeven times before the Vail. And then he came out and put ſome of it upon the horns of the Altar, and the reſt he poured upon the Altar foundation. The fat he burnt upon the Altar, but his skin, fleſh, head, legs, inwards, and dung, he burnt without the Camp. * And ſo alſo diſpoſed he of the Goats.

* Toſaph. in Corbanoth per. 6.

Chriſt our Sacrifice, who offered himſelf for an atonement for ſin, is moſt commonly by the Scripture reſembled to the Sacrifice of the Congregation, becauſe he died for all his people, and to the Sacrifice of a ſin offering, becauſe he died to prevent a curſe, and cutting off: He is called the Lamb of God, Joh. 1.29. in alluſion to the Lamb of the daily Sacrifice which was an offering of the whole Congregation; and he is ſaid to be made ſin for us, that is, a ſin offering, though himſelf knew no ſin, 2 Cor. 5.21. And to reſemble thoſe Sacrifices whoſe blood was brought within the Sanctuary for ſin, and whoſe bodies were burnt without the Camp, Heb. 13.11. This burning of their bodies without the Camp, was not only a figure of his ſuffering without the Gate, as the Apoſtle there applies it; but both that, and his ſuffering without the Gate, was in token of his dying for his people among the Gentiles, who were on the outſide of Iſrael's Camp: and the bringing of the blood into the holy place, denoted the appearing and preſenting of the merit of his blood continually before the Lord, for the atonement for the ſins of his Congregation.

The ſin-offerings of particular perſons, were theſe.

1. The High-prieſts ſin offering Bullock, on the day of expiation, Levit. 16.6. whoſe blood was brought within the Vail, verſ. 14. and his fleſh burnt without the Camp, verſ. 27.

2. The High-prieſts Bullock, for ignorantly committing ſomething that ſhould not be done, Levit. 4.3. the blood of this Bullock was brought within the holy place, and his fleſh and skin, &c. burnt without the Camp, verſ. 11. This Bullock is called by the Hebrew writers פר הבא על כל המצוות * The Bullock that was offered in reference to all the

* Maym. ubi ſupr.

|| Ab. Ezra in Levit.4. the Commandments. || And there are ſome that ſay, that he was to offer ſuch a ſin offering once every year: which as it was for an atonement for himſelf, ſo (as Baal Turim applies it) it was for incouragement to others to confeſs their ſins. * The Law commands (ſaith he) that the ſin offering of the High-prieſt be burnt publickly in the place of the aſhes, that no man might be aſhamed to confeſs his ſin, for lo the High-prieſt ſinned, and confeſſed his ſin, and brought his ſin offering.

* Baal Tur. in Levit.4.

3. There was the ſin offering of the Ruler, *Levit.*4.22. this was to be a male Kid, verſ. 23. his blood put on the horns of the Altar, his fat burnt on the Altar, and the fleſh eaten, *verſ.*25. &c.

4. There was alſo the ſin offering of any particular private perſon, Lev. 4.27. this was to be a Lamb or Kid, but females, the blood put on the horns of the Altar, the fat burnt, and the fleſh eaten by the Prieſts.

Theſe were the ſeveral ſin offerings that were to be offered, ſome upon expreſs and ſingular command, and ſome upon the general rule of ſeeking atonement upon diſcovery of a ſin unwittingly committed. Now for the more compleat underſtanding of the manner of the managing and diſpoſing of theſe ſin offerings we may obſerve theſe ſeveral particulars and circumſtances about them.

1. That the place and manner of preſenting, killing, and laying hands upon the ſin offering, was the ſame with the place and manner of theſe things with the burnt offering.

2. That the blood of thoſe that was brought into the holy place was thus diſpoſed.

* Toſaph. ubi ſupr. * The Bullocks that were burnt and the Goats that were burnt without the Camp, between the time of their killing and ſprinkling of their blood (upon the Altar of burnt offering) the Prieſt went in and ſtood between the Golden Altar and the Candleſtick: the Altar was before him, he dipt in his finger, and ſprinkled the blood ſeven times towards the moſt holy place, and at every dipping and ſprinkling he alſo put the blood upon a horn of the Altar.

3. The blood that was not brought within the holy place, was put upon the horns of the burnt offering Altar, and ſo was ſome of the blood alſo that was brought out of the holy place again, and the manner of that rite was thus.

(a) *Malm. ubi ſupr. ver.*5. *Talm. in Zevac. per.*5. (a) The Prieſt went up the riſe or bridge of the Altar, and went off on the right hand to the circuit of the Altar, and firſt to the South-eaſt horn of it; he dipped his foremoſt finger of his right hand in the blood which was in the veſſel, and dropt it, or ſprinkled it upon the horn, and then wiped his finger on the ſide of the diſh, and got off the blood that remained on it: then went he to the North-eaſt horn, and did after the very ſame manner; and ſo at the North-weſt corner, and likewiſe at the South-weſt. And this was the blood that was beſtowed above the red line that went about the Altar juſt in the middle: and only the blood of ſin offerings was ſprinkled with the finger.

4. Whereas it is ſaid that the reſt of the blood he poured at the bottom of the Altar, it is to be underſtood upon the foundation, and either upon the South or Weſt ſide, becauſe in the South-weſt corner of it were the two holes into which the blood ſunk; of which we have ſpoken in the deſcription of the Altar. Some diſtinguiſh the pouring of the blood, thus, that which had been in the holy place was poured on the Weſt

(b) Toſaph. ubi ante. ſide, and that which had not been there was poured on the South; (b) but Rabbi Simeon ſaith, both the one and the other were poured on the Weſt ſide; and they fell into an underground channel, and they were conveyed into the valley of Kidron, and ſold to the Gardiners to fatten their grounds. But R. Meir aſſerteth that the wiſe men ſaid, that they were not put to any uſe at all.

(c) *Maym. ubi ſupr. per.*1. 5. (c) Thoſe Goats and Bullocks that were burnt without the Camp, were cut into pieces skins and all upon them, and caſt into the fire, even as the burnt offering was laid on the fire upon the Altar.

6. Theſe ſin offerings that were not ſo burnt without the Camp, were eaten by the Prieſts, after the fat was offered upon the Altar, Levit. 6. 25, 26. & 10. 17. and the eating of them was in the Court. And in corrupt times it is charged upon the Prieſts, that in their ſervice they regarded not devotion, but only to fill their own bellies, making thoſe their God. They eat up the ſin [that is, the ſin offerings] of my people, and ſet their heart on their iniquity, Hoſ. 4. 8.

SECT. III.

Treſpaſs Offerings. אשם

TReſpaſs Offerings (as to the cauſe and occaſion of their offering up) were ſo like to ſin offerings, as that they ſeem brethren, and it is ſomething nice and intricate to diſtinguiſh betwixt them. For as Sin-offerings came for offences againſt negative precepts, ſo did theſe; and as thoſe were offered for ſuch offences ignorantly committed, ſo likewiſe were theſe: and as thoſe had a reference to the danger of cutting off, ſo had theſe alſo; and yet a difference is betwixt them, but ſuch a difference, as that theſe Treſpaſs offerings were but in order to the other.

Now Treſpaſs-offerings were of theſe two kinds; there was אשם תלוי (a) a doubtful treſpaſs offering, and אשם ודאי a treſpaſs offering undoubted: and theſe were ſo called, not in regard that there was any doubt in the offering, whether it were an offering or no, when it was preſented, but becauſe there was ſome doubtfulneſs, or there was undoubtedneſs in the cauſe of its Offering. (a) Mayh. in Corban. per. 9.

The אשם תלוי Doubtful or Suſpenſive Offering (for ſo the word moſt properly ſignifieth) is conceived by ſome of the Jewiſh Writers to be ſo called, becauſe it ſuſpended the party that had committed a Treſpaſs from that penalty that was due to him for it, or לפי שיהלה ומנין עליו מן היסורין (b) Becauſe it ſuſpendeth and feneeth him againſt the due caſtigations: Which though indeed it carrieth a truth with it, yet is the Etymology of the Phraſe more generally given to be, becauſe there is a ſuſpence and doubtfulneſs in and about the matter, concerning which it was to be offered. There is a ſtory in the Treatiſe Kerithuth concerning Baba Ben Bota, (c) that he offered one of theſe ſuſpenſive treſpaſs offerings every day in the year, but only on the next day after the day of expiation: And one day he ſaid, By this Temple, if they had let me alone, I had brought ſuch an Offering on that day alſo, but they ſaid to me, ſtay till thou come into ſome doubtfulneſs: And the wiſe men ſay, they bring not a ſuſpenſive treſpaſs offering אשם תלוי, but for ſuch an offence, as which wittingly committed, deſerveth cutting off, and unwittingly committed claimeth a ſin offering. (b) Gloſſ. in Mijuajoth in 8. (c) Kerithuth, per. 6. ſect. 3.

Agreeable to theſe laſt words there is a paſſage in another place of the ſame Treatiſe, where having reckoned the ſix and thirty tranſgreſſions that deſerve cutting off, it concludeth that (d) any of theſe committed wittingly, deſerve cutting off, and if unwittingly, a ſin offering, and if it be not known, then a ſuſpenſive, or doubtful treſpaſs offering. (d) Ibid. per. 11 ſect. 2.

By both which teſtimonies it is apparent, that ſin offerings, and theſe ſuſpenſive treſpaſs offerings were ſo near a kin, that the latter is not accounted due, unleſs there be a poſſibility of the dueneſs of the other, and the one is offered for a thing committed unwittingly, and the other for a thing committed unwittingly and unknown. The main difference of them lay in this; a ſin offering was for a thing done indeed unwittingly againſt one of the negative precepts, and now known to be certainly done: but a treſpaſs offering was for a thing done indeed, but doubtful whether a precept was violated by the action; and the party is not yet knowing whether he treſpaſſed or not; yet was he to bring a treſpaſs offering, which (as was ſaid before) might fence him againſt the penalty of cutting off; and if he once came to know that he did offend againſt a Commandment in the action, then he was to bring a ſin offering: The Talmudiſts give theſe examples in the caſe.

(e) He that eats fat (namely that fat of the inwards, which in any Sacrifice was to be offered up) if he did it wittingly, he was to be cut off; if he did it unwittingly, he was to bring a ſin offering as ſoon as he knew what he had done: But our caſe in hand is this, A man is at a Table where there is that fat that might not be eaten, and another fat that might (for they might eat fat Beef, or Mutton, though they might not eat the fat of the inwards,) he eateth one of theſe fats, he knoweth not whether; he ſuppoſeth he eateth the fat that was lawful to be eaten, but it is poſſible he eateth that that is unlawful: for this poſſibility or probability that he may be under a guilt, he is to bring a treſpaſs offering ſuſpenſive אשם תלוי though he knew not whether he offended yet or no. (e) Ibid. per. 3. Toſaphot. in Kerithuth. per. 2.

He that wittingly lay with his ſiſter, was to be cut off; he that he did it unwittingly, was to bring a ſin offering aſſoon as he knew what he had done. But here is the caſe we are about; (f) A mans Wife and his Siſter are both in one bed, he lieth with one of them ſuppoſing it to be his Wife, it is poſſible it was his Siſter, for this he is to bring a doubtful or ſuſpenſive treſpaſs offering, becauſe it is doubtful whether he be not under a tranſgreſſion. And this kind of Offering was in this regard called doubtful or ſuſpenſive, becauſe it was in ſuſpence whether he were guilty or no, and it did alſo ſuſpend that guilt and penalty which did lie, or might light upon him. (f) Gloſſ. in Mijuajoth ubi ante.

Divers ſuch particular examples might be produced, we ſhall only add one or two more in the words of the Author of Toſaphta. (g) There are two men together, and the one of them offends, but it is not known which of them, Rabbi Joſi ſaith, that both the one and the (g) Toſaphi ubi ſupr.

the other muſt bring a ſuſpenſive treſpaſs offering, and make confeſſion. He that eateth the quantity of an olive of fat, or the quantity of an olive of fleſh that hath lain ſo long before it be ſacrificed that it ſtinketh, or the quantity of an olive of what is left of the Sacrifice, or the quantity of an olive of what is unclean, unwittingly, he is to bring a ſin offering; but if it is doubtful whether he eat it, or eat it not, then he is to bring a treſpaſs offering. He that lyeth with his Siſter, or his Fathers Siſter, or his Mothers Siſter, or his Wifes Siſter, or his Brothers Wife, or his Fathers Brothers Wife, or a Woman in her ſeparation, he is to bring a ſin-offering, ספק בא ספק לא בא מביא אשם תלוי But if it be doubtful whether he lay with them or no, he is to bring a ſuſpenſive or doubtful treſpaſs offering. A mans Wife and his Siſter are together, and he lyeth with one of them, but he knoweth not whether: He hath two Wives, the one is in her Separation, and the other is not; he lyeth with one of them, but he knoweth not whether: There is before him fat, and ſomething left of the Sacrifice, he eateth of the one, but he knows not whether: There is the Sabbath and the day of Expiation, he worketh on the one of them, but he knows not whether: Rabbi Eliezer adjudged him to bring a ſin offering: But Rabbi Joſhua acquitted him: Now Rabbi Joſi ſaith, although that Rabbi Joſhua acquitted him from a ſin offering, yet he adjudged him to a treſpaſs offering ſuſpenſive.

By theſe examples it is reaſonably well apparent, of what nature אשם תלוי, the ſuſpenſive treſpaſs offering was in the repute of the Hebrew Doctors; but for the greater clearing of it, we may yet go with them one ſtep further; A man finds himſelf in this poſſibility of having offended, though it be utterly uncertain to him, whether he have offended or no, yet in Conſcience was he bound to bring this his ſuſpenſive treſpaſs offering, becauſe it is poſſible he is in the offence, this is the caſe in the examples given: But this is not the utmoſt, there comes in witneſs that he did undoubtedly eat of the fat that was forbidden, that it was his Wife in her ſeparation that he lay withal, or that it was his ſiſter, or the like; he is not yet convinced that it was ſo, but yet is doubtful, and in ſuſpence he is to bring his ſuſpenſive treſpaſs offering, becauſe though it be certain in it ſelf that he hath offended, yet is it not ſo as yet to him: But whenſoever he ſhall be convinced that he did commit the offence indeed, then is he to bring his ſin offering. And thus was the ſuſpenſive treſpaſs offering in order to a ſin offering, and in reference to thoſe precepts whoſe violation deſerved cutting off, but it being doubtful whether the offence was committed, this doubtful and ſuſpenſive offering was to be offered, to keep off the cutting off, the danger of which it is poſſible he lay under, See *Lev.*5.17.

אשם ידאי The certain or apparent treſpaſs offering, is ſo called, becauſe the Law doth punctually and determinatively appoint as what is to be offered, ſo by what perſons, and upon what occaſions it was to be offered, and thoſe are five.

(b) Toſaphtubi Jupr. Tal. in Zevachin per. 5. Maym. in Shegag. per. 9.

1. אשם גזולה (b) The treſpaſs offering for a thing ſtolen, or unjuſtly gotten, or detained, of which is mention Leviticus 6.2,3,6.

2. אשם מעילה The treſpaſs offering for ſacriledge, of which there is mention, Levit. 5.16.

3. אשם שפחה חרופה The treſpaſs offering concerning a bond maid, about which the Law is given, *Lev.*19.20,21.

4. אשם נזיר The treſpaſs offering of the Nazarite, Numbers 6.12.

5. אשם מצורע The treſpaſs offering of the Leper, Levit. 14.12.

(i) Maym: in Corban.per.9.

(i) Now the manner of diſpoſing of theſe Sacrifices when they came to be offered, was according to the diſpoſal of the ſin offering: They were killed, flead, the inwards taken out, waſhed, ſalted, and burnt like that, and the fleſh eaten by the Males of the Prieſts in the Court: Only about the ſprinkling of their bloud there was ſome difference; (k) for whereas the bloud of the ſin offering was put upon the horns of the Altar, the bloud of theſe, was ſprinkled with that ſprinkling which was called שתי מחנות שהן ארבע the two ſprinklings, which were four, that is, at two corners of the Altar forementioned, and into the faſhion of the Letter Gamma; thoſe were ſprinkled above the red line that went about the middle of the Altar, and theſe below, as was the bloud of the burnt offering. And among all the reſt, the Nazarites Ram of treſpaſs offering was accounted one of the leſſer Sacrifices or קדשים קלים whereas all the reſt went in the rank of קדשי קדשים The moſt holy offerings; and whereas thoſe were ſlain on the North ſide of the Court, this was on the South, and thoſe were eaten only by the Males of the Prieſts, and in the Court, but this might be eaten by others, and in the City.

(k) Zevach.ubi ſupr.

The eating of the moſt holy offerings in the Court, is very commonly called by the Jews אכילת לפנים מן הקלעים the eating within the Curtains, in which expreſſion they allude to the Court of the Tabernacle, incompaſſed with Curtains round about. For as within thoſe Curtains, there was that ſpace which was called the Camp of the Lord (the Camp of Levi being pitcht without) ſo from the Gate of Nicanor inward only, was reputed the Lords Camp, (the Camp of the Levites being that without to the Gate of the Mountain of the Temple.) Now it was an expreſs Command, that every oblation, meat offering, ſin offering, treſpaſs offering, ſhould be holy for the Prieſts, and for their ſons, and ſhould be eaten in the moſt holy place, that is, in the Court, Numb. 18. 10. Ezek. 42. 13. David Kimchi upon the latter place cited, hath theſe words, (l) The moſt holy offerings were eaten within the Court of Iſrael more innerly, and that was called Emphatically the Court: and that was the holy place for the eating of the moſt holy things, if they were ſo minded: But in the Court of the Prieſts, which was within the Court of Iſrael, there were Chambers of the Prieſts, and there they eat their holy things. In which paſſage, he both reduceth the eating of the moſt holy offerings into a narrower compaſs than either was needful, or than the reſt of his Nation do, and alſo he findeth Buildings and Chambers for the Prieſts within the Court of the Prieſts, which unleſs they were thoſe Chambers joyning to the body of the Temple, are not imaginable, nor have been diſcovered by any hitherto. As the Command confined the Prieſts within the Compaſs of the Court, whilſt they were eating theſe things, ſo it may well be ſuppoſed that the place of their eating of them, was according to the ſeaſon and the beſt conveniency, in warm Weather under the Cloyſters in open Air, and in colder ſeaſons in ſome of the Chambers that ſtood within the Court, as Gazith, Mokadh, Nitſots, or what if in ſome of the Rooms joyning to the Temple.

(l) Kimchi in Ezek 42.

It appeareth by the Tradition concerning their eating of theſe things, that they fell not aboard with them till towards the Evening, and made them not their dinner at any time, but their ſupper, באכלים עד חצות. Hence is the common ſaying of the Talmudiſts, They might eat of them till midnight, but after that it was unlawful: And in the Treatiſe Beracoth, this is ſet as it were the Clock, to fix the time for the evening rehearſal of their Phylacteries. (m) From what time (ſay they) do they ſay over their Phylacteries at even? and it is anſwered, from the time that the Prieſts go in to eat their Offerings, &c. Whether the Prieſts faſted all day till this time or no: and whether the Chriſtian Ἀγάπαι did any whit follow this Copy of their Temple Feaſts, and whether this their feaſting before the Lord, were not a reſemblance of the bleſſed ſociety of the glorified in the Preſence of God, we ſhall not argue, but refer it to the Reader.

(m) Beracheth per. 1. Sect. 1.

Among theſe Offerings that we have mentioned of Bullocks, Goats, Rams, and Lambs, we muſt not forget that there were the like Offerings of Birds; and of all Birds there were only two kinds allowed, and theſe were Turtles and young Pigeons, and they were ever offered by Couples. In the Talmud Language they are called קינים or neſts, of which Title, and upon which ſubject there is a Treatiſe in that Code, and they were ordinarily ſold in the Temple, Joh. 2. 14. and Women eſpecially (though not only) dealt in this kind of Offering of all other: For the caſes concerning their uncleanneſs, iſſues, births, abortions (beſides their vows and free gifts) were ſo many, that they multiplied theſe Offerings to an incredible number; Let one Example give evidence concerning the reſt.

A woman [n] ſaith the Treatiſe Kerithuth] that hath the doubtfulneſs of five births (together) and five fluxes, ſhe is to bring one offering, and ſhe may eat of the Sacrifices, and there is no further offering due from her; Hath ſhe five Births certain, and five fluxes certain, ſhe is to bring one Offering, and ſhe may eat of the Sacrifice; but there is a due from her for the reſt. There was this paſſage, (o) Doves ſtood one day in Jeruſalem at a Denarius of Gold. Rabban Simeon the ſon of Gamaliel ſaid, By this Temple, I will not ſleep this night till they be at a Denarius of ſilver; he went into the Sanhedrin, and determined thus; A Woman that hath five apparent births, and five apparent fluxes, is to bring one Offering, and ſhe may eat of the Sacrifices, and there is no more due from her upon the reſt. And thus Doves came that day to half a Denarius.

(o) Juchaſin fol. 66.

The manner of offering of theſe Birds was thus: (p) If they came for a Burnt Offering, the Prieſt went up the riſe of the Altar, and turned off to the circuit, and there at the South-eaſt corner he wrung off their heads, opened them, wrung out their bloud upon the ſide of the Altar, ſalted the head where it was wrung off, and caſt it into the fire, took out the inwards, and caſt them to the heap of Aſhes, ſalted the Birds, and caſt them into the fire. And if they came for a ſin offering, he wrung off their heads, ſprinkled the bloud on the ſide of the Altar, and ſqueezeth out the reſt of the bloud at the foundation, and there was no more to be done, but the Prieſt to take the birds for his own to eat. Only in the ſprinkling of the bloud of theſe birds either being for burnt offering, or ſin offering, the manner was clean different and contrary to the ſprinkling of the bloud of Beaſts; (q) for the bloud of beaſts in burnt offerings was ſprinkled beneath on the Altar below the red line that went about it, and the bloud of ſin offerings above: but as for thoſe birds, their bloud when they were offered for burnt offerings was ſprinkled above, and when for ſin offerings, it was ſprinkled beneath.

SECT. IV.

Peace Offerings, שלמים.

WE need not to go very far to find out the reaſon and notation of Peace Offerings, (as ſome have done, concluding that they were ſo called (a) becauſe they made peace in the World, peace for the Altar, peace for the Prieſts, and peace for the owners) but do but ſet them in Antitheſis and oppoſition to thoſe Offerings that have been ſpoken of already, and their name and nature will ſhew it ſelf; Burnt Offerings, Sin Offerings, and Treſpaſs Offerings, were preſented and offered up under the notion of ſome offence committed, and ſome guilt that he that brought them, either did or might lie under; but Peace Offerings came not under any ſuch liableneſs, offenſiveneſs or ſuſpition, but were preſented in reference to the parties more comfortable, and more unguilty condition, as being offered either by way of thankſgiving for good obtained, or by way of Vow or free Devotion.

(a) R. Sol. in Levit. 3.

And this ſenſe (it may be) the Septuagint looked after when they tranſlate Peace Offerings Θυσίας σωτηρίου, Sacrifices of deliverance or ſalvation.

The word שלום from whence שלמים, which ſignifieth peace offerings, is derived, doth ſignifie, as it is well known, either peace or proſperity, and the peace offerings accordingly may be conceived to have relation to this double ſignification: For ſome peace offerings were offered in way of devotion, as free will offerings to continue or to compaſs peace with God: Some in way of thankſgiving, and theſe were for proſperity or good obtained already; and ſome by way of vows, and theſe were offered that proſperity or good might be obtained for the future. For this diviſion of peace offerings into thanks offerings, free will offerings, and offerings for Vows, is held out by the Law, *Levit.*7.

We will firſt begin with ſome peace offerings that were of an extraordinary quality, and Heteroclites from the common rule; and theſe were the peace offerings of the Heathen, which even they offered at the Temple. The Mountain of the Houſe is very commonly called by Chriſtian Writers The Court of the Gentiles, as hath been ſaid before, for into that might even Heathens come, and they might bring offerings with them, and thoſe offerings were offered up, even as were the Sacrifices of the Iſraelites. And in alluſion to this it is that in the Revelation, when the Angel is meaſuring the Temple, he is bidden not to meaſure the outer Court, but to leave that out, for that was given to the Gentiles, *Rev.*11.2. Concerning theſe Sacrifices preſented by the Heathen, Maymonides gives us this teſtimony and Tradition. (b) They receive not of the Heathen but burnt Offerings only, becauſe it is ſaid, From the hand of the ſon of a ſtranger, ye ſhall not offer the bread of your God: They receive even burnt offerings of birds from an Heathen, yea though he be an Idolater: But they receive not from them peace offerings, nor meat offerings, nor ſin offerings, nor treſpaſs offerings: And likewiſe for burnt offerings, they receive them not from the Heathen, if they come not by way of free will offering, or by way of Vow. A Heathen that bringeth peace offerings, they offer them as burnt offerings, becauſe the Heathens mind is towards Heaven; Doth he vow peace offerings and gives them to Iſrael that Iſrael may be atoned for, the Iſraelites eat them as if they were the peace offerings of Iſraelites; and if he give them to the Prieſt, the Prieſt eateth them. An Apoſtate Jew that is fallen to Idolatry, and that prophaneth the Sabbath preſumptuouſly (בפרהסיא Ἐν παῤῥησίᾳ) they receive not from him an offering at all, no not a burnt offering which they would receive from the Heathen.

(b) Maym. in Corban. per. 3.

In which relation of his, when he ſaith they do not receive peace offerings of the Heathen, and yet afterward he ſaith they do, and ſo ſeemeth to contradict himſelf; theſe things obſerved, will clear his meaning, and ſhew that he ſpeaketh exceeding full and good ſenſe. 1. That they refuſed not a Heathens offering, becauſe in tendring of it, he ſhewed that לבו לשמים his mind was ſomething towards God, and that ſome devotion was in him; Yet 2. they would not receive a ſin offering, nor a treſpaſs offering from him, becauſe he was not under thoſe Laws, upon which ſin offerings and treſpaſs offerings did ariſe. 3. Nor yet would they receive a meat offering, or a peace offering from him, under that notion, or in that latitude of a peace offering, becauſe bread was to be offered with it, and it was prohibited that they ſhould offer the bread of their God received from a ſtranger. 4. But every Sacrifice that he offered, muſt be offered by him under one of thoſe two notions, under which a peace offering came; namely, either as a free will offering or a vow, and yet it muſt not be ſacrificed under the notion of a peace offering, but muſt be offered up as a burnt offering, becauſe brought in devotion to God, and not to be eaten by Iſraelites. But if 5. out of love to Iſrael, and deſire of their proſperity, he brought a peace offering even under that notion, to this end, that it might be for an atonement between Iſrael and God, it was now become Iſraels peace offering, and it might be offered offered as a peace offering and the Israelites might eat it: or if in love to the Priests then serving, he brought it to be a peace offering for atonement between God and those Priests, the property was now altered, and it was become the Priests peace offering, and so it might be offered up and eaten.

Now to return to the Peace Offerings of the Israelites, they were either of the whole Congregation, or of particular persons. (c) The Peace Offerings of the whole Congregation, were only two Lambs offered at one time of the Year, and that was at Pentecost, *Lev.*23.19. And these were killed, flead, their bloud sprinkled, their inwards burnt, and the flesh eaten by the Males of the Priests in the Court, (d) even as the sin offerings were: (e) for these of peace offerings only were accounted קדשי חקקשים most holy Sacrifices, whereas all the rest were קדשים קלים Sacrifices less holy.

(d) Id. ibid. per 9. & Talm. in Zevac. per. 5.

(e) Vi. 4. R. Sol. in Lev. 23. 20.

The Peace Offerings of particular persons were threefold.

1. Peace Offerings that were offered without bread with them; such were their Offerings that were offered for their Hagigah and Simchah, or for their festivity and rejoycing at the three solemn festivals: Now although these were offered without bread, and so might seem to have been proper for Heathens to have offered, as being clear from that exception of the Law, of not offering the bread of a stranger, yet might not Heathens offer these peace offerings, because that they were not under the command of the three festivals, nor of the festivity and rejoycing at them.

2. Peace offerings that were offered with bread, of which there is mention in Lev. 7. and where they are described at large: These peace offerings might be of Bullocks, or Kine, of Lambs Male, or female, and so of Goats, *Lev.*3. The occasion of their Offering as was mentioned before, was either for thanksgiving, or of a free devotion, or for a Vow. (f) Rabbi Solomon confines the thanksgiving offering to such occasions as those mentioned in the hundred and seventh Psalm, as namely for deliverance from tempests at Sea, from dangers in travail in the wilderness, from sickness, and from prison, עבר נס שנעשה לו for some remarkable and wonderful deliverance or mercy that was wrought for him; or as Aben Ezra expresseth it, because he is delivered out of any strait. In which Gloss they straiten the thanksgiving offering the rather to such singular and extraordinary occasions, because their Offerings of tithes, firstlings, first fruits, &c. were as thanksgivings for their common and constant mercies; and yet I see not, but these Peace Offerings might also come sometime in reference to their common mercies and prosperity, as for their health, comforts in their children, success in their business, or the like. And as for the Peace Offerings that came as Vows, and those that came of free gift, as the rise of them was of different ground, the one of pure devotion, the other upon some conditional reference, so do the Jews observe, (h) that if the Offerings that were vowed, died, or were stoln, they were to be made good by presenting others in their stead: but if those that were set apart of free gift, either were stoln or died, the party was not bound to any such reparation.

(f) R. Sol. in Lev. 7.

(h) Kinnim. per. 1.

(i) These Peace Offerings that we have in mention were slain in any part of the Court, but most commonly on the South side, and their bloud was sprinkled as was the bloud of the burnt offering שתי מתנות שהן ארבע namely with two sprinklings in form of the Letter Gamma, which two besprinkled the four sides of the Altar. The breast of the Peace Offering, and the right shoulder, were the Priests due that offered it, and so was a part of the Bread or Cakes that were offered with it, and this is called מורם Murams ordinarily by the Rabbins, that is, that that was taken of the Sacrifice, by the Priests and for them. The breast was to be waved before the Lord, and for this action (k) the Offerer was to go into the Court of the Priest, and to joyn his hand in the rite, and the manner of waving was thus; The Priest laid the fat in the owners hand, and upon the fat he laid the breast and right shoulder, and upon them he laid the kidneys and the Caul of the Liver, and if it were a thanksgiving offering he laid some of the bread aloft on all; then he put his hand under the hands of the owner, and he waved his hands this way and that way, and up and down, and all towards the East: and after this waving he salted the inwards, and burnt them upon the Altar; and the waved breast and shoulder the Priest took for his part, and the owner the rest, and they were to be eaten. It was lawful for the party that brought the Peace Offering to eat his part of it in any part of Jerusalem; and so is the Talmudick expression which frequently occurreth in this case to be understood, which saith נאכלין בכל חעיר The remaining parts of it were eaten (not in any City, but) in any part of the City: and this is one of the priviledges of Jerusalem above other Cities, (l) because the lesser holy things might be eaten in it, and not in any other: They ordinarily boyled their Peace Offerings in the Temple it self, in one of the corners of the Court of the Women, where we have observed in its description, boyling places for this purpose; See 2*Chro.*35.13. And in the like manner they did at Shiloh, upon which business the sons of Eli shewed their wickedness, when in stead of contenting themselves with the wave breast, and heave shoulder, they brought up a Custom ſtom to ſtrike a three forked hook into the Cauldron where the peace offering was boyling, and to take whatſoever it brought up, 1*Sam.*2.

The Peace offering of thanksgiving was eaten the ſame day, but a Vow or Free-will Offering might be eaten on the morrow, *Lev.*7. 15,16. and herein the Prieſts and the Offerer came under the ſame reſtriction, for the one, and liberty for the other: and the whole Families of the one and the other, Wives, Sons, Daughters, Servants might eat of them: and the Offerer, if he would, might eat his part in the Temple, and the Prieſts, if they would, might eat theirs in Jeruſalem: an accurſed imitation of theſe peace Offerings, and eating of them in the Temple, was taken up among the Heathens, 1*Cor.*8.10.

3. There was a third peace offering of a particular perſon, and that was איל נזיר, as it is commonly called, The Nazarites Ram, of which the Law and Story is ſet down, *Num.*6.17. and the manner of its diſpoſal was thus: He was killed, and his bloud ſprinkled; then were the inwards taken out, and the right ſhoulder and breaſt ſeparated, and the reſt of the fleſh the Nazarite boyled in the corner of the Court of the Women, in the place called the room of the Nazarites. Then took the Prieſt the ſodden ſhoulder of the Ram, and a tenth part of the bread that was brought with him, and the heave ſhoulder, and wave breaſt, and the inwards, and put them in the hands of the Nazarite, and put his own hand under his, and waved them as before; and all that was waved was the Prieſts Portion, but only the inwards that were to be burnt upon the Altar, and the Nazarite had the reſt.

SECT. V.

Meat Offerings, and Drink Offerings.

(a) Maym. in Corbanoth. per. 2. Talm. in Menachoth. per. 6.

THere (a) were Twelve ſorts of Meat Offerings; Three of the whole Congregation, and Nine of particular perſons: The three of the whole Congregation were theſe:

1. The twelve Loaves of Shew-bread, which were ſet before the Lord every Sabbath, *Exod.*25.3. *Lev.*24.5,6,7. and when they were taken away, they were eaten by the Prieſts.

2. The Sheaf or Omer of the firſt fruits of their Harveſt, *Lev.*23.9. This was of Barley, the Corn that was firſt ripe: and there was but one Meat Offering more of Barley, of all the twelve; all the reſt were of Wheat. This Sheaf was waved before the Lord, this way and that way, and up and down, and then it was part offered, and part eaten. Rabbi Solomon giveth this reaſon of the waving of it, if it may be taken, (b) Every waving (ſaith he) is bringing it this way, and that way, up and down; and the waving it this way, and that way, was for the reſtraining of evil winds, and the waving it up and down, was for the reſtraining of evil dews.

(b) R. Sol. in Levit. 23.

3. The two wave Loaves offered at Pentecoſt, *Lev.*23.17.

The nine Meat Offerings of particular perſons were theſe:

2. מנחת חנוך The meat offering of initiation; which every Prieſt brought in his hand at his firſt entrance into the Office.

3. מנחת הוטא The ſinners meat offering: This was the offering of a poor man that ſhould have brought a ſin offering and was not able; I here cannot but obſerve a paſſage in the Miſhnah, and in Toſaphta that ſpeak of מנחת חוטא של כהנים, the ſinners meat offering of the poor Prieſt, that was ſo poor as that he was not able to bring a ſin offering; intimating in what poor condition ſome of them lived, though ſome again of them were as rich and ſtately.

4. מנחת קנאות The Jealouſie meat offering of the ſuſpected Wife, *Num.*5.15. this was of Barley meal.

5. מנחת סולת The meat offering of fine flower unbaked.

6. מנחת המחבת The meat offering baked in a pan.

7. מנחת חמרחשת The meat offering baked in a frying-pan.

8. מנחת מאפה תנור The meat offering baked in the Oven.

9 רקיקין Wafers.

Now beſides theſe names, we read of, & מנחת נסכים מנחת גויים ונשים The meat offering of the Heathen, and of Women, and The meat offering with a drink offering, which are but names different from ſome of theſe that are named, for the things themſelves did not differ: when a Heathen Man would preſent a meat Offering under the limitations forementioned, it was ſome of theſe mentioned, and alſo a meat offering that was offered with a drink offering, was ſome of theſe that are mentioned; but they are called by theſe theſe diſtinctive names, only in regard of theſe circumſtances, and not in regard of the difference of Materials.

As for the making and managing of theſe meat offerings, theſe were the main and general rules by which they went.

1. That no meat offering ſhould conſiſt of leſs than the tenth part of an Ephah of Corn, (which was but very little differing from the tenth part of our buſhel) and of a log of oil, which was ſomewhat above thirteen ounces. Now as many tenth parts might be offered, as the offerer could find in his heart to offer, ſo that there were not above 60 in one Veſſel, and to every tenth part he muſt joyn a log of oil; but under one tenth part, and under one log, there muſt be no meat offering. This tenth part of an Ephah was called an Omer, Exod. 16.36. (c) Maym. ubi ſup. par. 13.

2. (d) That when the meat offering was any of the four ſorts baked, they commonly made ten cakes, or pieces of the tenth deal, and accordingly if more tenth deals were offered than one, they made ten cakes of every tenth deal that was offered; only the High-prieſts meat offering was made into twelve cakes; and when theſe cakes were baked, every one of them was broken in two, and twelve halfs were offered in the morning, and twelve at even. (d) Id. ibid.

3. (e) Some meat offerings required both oil, and frankincenſe, ſome required oil, but not frankincenſe, ſome frankincenſe, but not oil, and ſome neither frankincenſe nor oil. Thoſe that required both frankincenſe and oil, were theſe. The meat offering of fine flower unbaked, thoſe four that were baked, the meat offering of the High-prieſt, that of the Prieſts initiation, the Omer of firſt fruits, and the meat offerings of Heathens and of Women. The meat offering joyned with a drink offering, required oil, but not frankincenſe. The Shew-bread required frankincenſe but not oil: and the ſinners meat offering, and the meat offering of the ſuſpected wife, had neither oil nor frankincenſe. (e) Talm. in Menac. per. 5.

4. (f) All the meat offerings that were made in a veſſel, had three pourings of oil about it: as the unbaked meat offering of fine flower מנחת סולת, firſt oil was put into the veſſel, and the flower after it, then oil was poured upon the flower, and they mingled together, then was it put into the veſſel of the ſervice, in which it was to be brought to the Altar, and oil poured on it again, and frankincenſe put aloft on all; and ſo thoſe meat offerings that were baked in the pan or frying pan, oil was put into a veſſel, flower upon it, and oil upon the flower again; theſe being blended together, it was baked, and being baked it was broken into its pieces, and more oil put upon the pieces, and frankincenſe upon all: Only what was made and baked wafer wiſe, they were anointed with oil, and their anointing was to be כמין כי after the form of the letter Chi, as the Talmud expreſſeth it, which the Gloſs explaineth to be, After the form of the Greek Kappa, or the Hebrew Teth; as is the parting between the Thumb and the Finger, that is, he poured the oil ſo upon them, that it went this way, and that way, into two parts. (f) Ibid. per. 6. ſect. 3.

5. (g) Of ſome of the meat offerings the Prieſt took out one handful, and burnt it on the Altar, and the reſt he had for himſelf to eat: and ſome meat offerings were wholly burnt, and the Prieſt had no part: Now theſe are they, of which a handful was taken only, and the reſt fell to the Prieſts. The unbaked meat offering of fine flower, and the four baked, the meat offering of Heathens and of Women, the Omer of firſt fruits, and the ſinners meat offering, and that of Jealouſie. But the meat offering of the High-prieſts, and of the Prieſts initiation, and that that was offered with a drink offering, the Prieſts had no ſhare in theſe, but the Altar had all. (g) Ib. Sect. 1, 2.

6. (h) The manner of offering theſe meat offerings was thus: He brought it in a Silver or Golden Diſh, in which it was mingled, and puts it into one of the Holy Veſſels of the Service, and hallowes it in the Holy Veſſel, and puts the oil and the frankincenſe upon it: then goes and he brings it up to the South-eaſt horn of the Altar, ſtanding on the South-ſide of the horn. He had laid the frankincenſe on the one ſide; then takes he his handful from the oily place, and lays it in the midſt of another Holy Veſſel, and hallows it in the midſt of the Veſſel, then gathers he up the frankincenſe, and lays it aloft, and brings it to the top of the Altar, there ſalts it and lays it on the fire, and the reſt was for the Prieſts to eat. (h) Toſaph. in Menac. per. 1.

The meat offering that was offered with the daily ſacrifice, had alſo a drink offering preſented with it, and ſo had divers other Sacrifices the like, Num. 15. Now the drink offering was only ſuch a quantity of Wine, more or leſs, according to the Sacrifice as is there preſcribed; which was neither mingled, (i) nor any of it poured into the fire as the meat offering was, but it was poured upon the foundation of the Altar, as the blood was; and when the Wine of the daily meat offering was poured out, the Song of the Temple began, as we have obſerved. (i) R. Sol. in Numb. 15.

There was a meat offering offered every morning with the morning Sacrifice, and yet it is obſervable, that the time of the evening Sacrifice only is called Minchah (which was the title of the meat offering) and the time of the morning ſacrifice not ſo, 1 *Kin.*18.29. And again, the time of the Sacrifice is called by the name of the meat offering, rather than by the name of the Sacrifice it ſelf, *Dan.*9.21. the reaſon of which is ſomewhat hard to give, and almoſt as hard to find any that have given any gueſs at it; whether the former were not becauſe the private meat offerings, or thoſe of particular perſons were moſt commonly offered in the afternoon: or whether it were not becauſe the incenſe of the evening was offered at the time of the meat offering, which at the morning Sacrifice it was not: and whether the latter were not, becauſe of the variety of materials in the meat offering, which was not in the ſacrifice it ſelf, or becauſe the ſacrifice was not compleat till the meat offering came on, be it referred to the learned to judge.

And thus have we a brief account of the nature and manner of their ſacrifices: (for as for the offering of their firſtlings and their tenths, they were not ſo different from thoſe mentioned, that they need a diſcourſe by themſelves, and about the Paſchals we ſhall ſpeak anon.) There are only two things more concerning their ſacrifices to be inquired after, and they are theſe, Firſt, how theſe ſacrifices of ſin and treſpaſs offerings, and burnt offerings became paid, (as we have ſeen how they became due.) For it may be the Offender had no mind to be at ſuch charges, though he knew he did owea ſacrifice upon ſuch a ſin and treſpaſs: but he would ſpare the coſt of a Lamb, or Goat, and would think it better ſaved than ſpent, if he could come fairly off, and keep his money. The proviſion in this caſe was twofold, Conſcience and Penalty, and if the firſt prevailed not, the ſecond took place, if the offence were known. Thoſe that had any Conſcience, or regard of Religion, or of themſelves, needed no other inſtigation to bring their offering, when they knew they were under an offence that called for it, but their Conſcience and that regard: And they had a double motive to urge them to it; firſt, the obedience to Gods Commandment which called for it; and ſecondly, the expiation of their ſin, which they believed was obtained by the offering: But if the party were not ſwayed by Conſcience or Religion, but had rather, and was readier to ſave his money, than either regard Gods Command or his own expiation, if there were witneſs found that came forth and ſaid, that he had committed ſuch a ſin or treſpaſs, it was beſt for him then to think of ſetting apart an offering, or elſe he was in danger of a Penalty, as he lay under guilt: Had he committed ſin ignorantly againſt any of thoſe negative precepts, the tranſgreſſing againſt which willfully, had brought him under the danger of Cutting off; and now, when he comes to know that he had done amiſs, he refuſeth to bring that ſacrifice, that was due for ſuch an offence, this contempt and refuſal heightned the offence, ſo that now it appeared a wilful ſin, when he refuſeth to ſeek his peace for it as for one of ignorance, and if he were called to an account for it, and witneſs produced of what he had done, and he convented, he muſt either clear himſelf of the action, or (k) be challenged his offering; compare *Mat.*8.4. But as far as this matter reſted upon their devotion, (and where there was true devotion, it needed no further promoter,) the Nation was ſo zealous of their Rites, and the ſins that deſerved cutting off, were brought into ſo little compaſs, and ſo plain, and not very obvious to be ſtumbled againſt through ignorance, that the failing to the render of theſe ſacrifices when they became due, was indifferently well prevented, by one or other of theſe things, either this zeal, or their plainneſs, eſpecially this concurring that the People held, that ex opere operato theſe made their peace: The letter of the Law was, that he ſhould offer of his own voluntary will, *Lev.*1.4. And yet ſaith Rabbi Solomon upon the place, It teacheth that they urged him, כופין אותו, it may be whether he would or no. But the text ſaith, he muſt do it of his own freewill. How then? They urged him till he ſaid, I am willing.

(k) R. Sol. in Levit. 1.

A ſecond ſcruple about theſe ſacrifices is, concerning the time of their preſenting and offering. A man that lived at a great diſtance from Jeruſalem, was faln under ſuch an offence as that a ſacrifice was due from him: what muſt he do? Muſt he away preſently thither to offer his offering? Muſt he neglect his imployments at home, and travel up to Jeruſalem, at a charge double and treble, and more to the charge of the ſacrifice that he was to offer, and lay all things aſide till that be done? The Proviſion in this caſe was, That he that became liable to any offering might ſtay the paying of it till the next ſolemn Feſtival of the three came, when all muſt appear before the Lord at Jeruſalem. And ſo his pains and coſt of going up thither did accrew upon that general and comprehenſive Command for their appearance, and not from his own private and particular occaſion: They make this one of the Two Hundred Eight and Forty affirmative precepts, that they pick up in the Law, להביא כל הקרבנות שיש על האדם בחוב או בנדב ברגל ראשון שמגיע בו (l) That a man ſhould bring all his offerings that are either due from him, or voluntarily dedicate, at the ſolemn feſtival that cometh next: next: And ſo, as the Lord by appointing thoſe three ſolemn times, in the Spring and Summer, did provide for the eaſe and accommodation of the people in that general ſervice; ſo by this Law was proviſion made for every mans particular exigent, and devotion. And this command and practiſe they ground upon thoſe words, Deut. 12.5,6. Unto the place which the Lord your God ſhall chooſe out of all your Tribes, to put his name there, even to his habitation ſhall ye ſeek, and thither ſhalt thou come. And thither ſhall ye bring your burnt offerings, and your ſacrifices, &c. Eight things (ſaith (m) Baal Hatturim) are named here according to the eight times uſing the words Before the Lord, in the Law concerning the three feſtivals. And ſo would he conſtrue that Text, to the ſenſe that we are diſcourſing of by a Maſſoretick Arithmetical collection, as it is his common way and uſe to do; but thoſe that go more ſeriouſly to work, conclude, their bringing of their particular and occaſional devotions, at thoſe general appearances from that Text, by expounding, the ſeeking and going to the habitation of the Lord, of the moſt eminent, and ſingularly commanded going thither: According to this conſtruction and practiſe, the Chaldee Paraphraſt underſtands what is ſaid concerning Elkanah, that he went up out of his City to Shiloh to worſhip and to ſacrifice מים ימימה 1 *Sam.*1.3. for he hath rendred it מעד למעד From the time of one ſolemn Feſtival to another: what exceptions there might be in this matter, and whether, and upon what occaſions, the bringing of thoſe their ſacrifices, might be deferred beyond the next coming Feſtival to another, and how thoſe that were nearer to Jeruſalem, and were ſo minded, might come with their gifts at other times, it is not much requiſite to inſiſt upon.

CHAP. IX.

The manner and managing of the dayly Service.

ON the North-ſide of the Court of the Temple, well towards the North-weſt corner of it, as we have obſerved in its due place, there was a great piece of building which was called בית מוקד (a) Beth Mokadh, the fire room, or the House of burning: and the reaſon of the name was, becauſe in that room there was conſtantly a fire kept in all cold weather, both by day and by night. By day for the Prieſts to warm themſelves by, when they came from the ſervice, and by night for them to keep their guard by, for this was the chiefeſt Court of guard of the Prieſts, of all the three. Here the Elders of the Houſe of their Fathers warded, and had the keys of the Court gates hanging by them, being committed to them by Amarcalin: If they had a mind to ſleep at any time, there were benches round about the room, on which they laid them down and ſlept: And the younger Prieſts that were with them (for ſuch alſo were there) when they would ſleep, they laid themſelves down on the ground, and the holy garments in which they were to ſerve, they wrapped up and laid under their heads, as it were a pillow, and ſlept in their ordinary wearing garments.

(a) Talm. in Tam. per 3. & *in Middoth. per.*1. *Maym. in Beth habbech. per.*5.

Now betimes in the morning, againſt the Preſident of the ſervice ſhould come, they had bathed themſelves in water, and put on the garments of the ſervice, and made themſelves ready againſt he came: They had this Maxim concerning their bathing in water for the ſervice, אין אדם נכנס לעזרה לעבודה אפי שהוא עדר שטבול (b) That a man, yea though he were clean, yet might he not go into the Court to ſerve, till he had bathed himſelf in water. And for this purpoſe they had their bathing places in ſeveral rooms, ſome for the High-prieſt, and ſome for the other Prieſts, which places we have particulary obſerved in our ſurvey. Having bathed themſelves in the morning, they needed not to do that again of all the day, unleſs upon doing their eaſments of nature by ſeige, but they waſhed their hands and their feet, upon their making of water; and as oft as ever they came within the Court about the ſervice, did they go out and in never ſo oft. And to this cuſtom our Saviour ſeemeth to allude, *Joh.*13.10. He that is waſhed needeth not ſave to waſh his feet, but is clean every whit. At laſt the Preſident cometh, and knocketh at the door, and they open to him: what Preſident it was, whether of the Lots, or the Sagan, we will not diſpute [(c) Maymony ſaith, it was the preſident of lots] but the Talmudick diſpute about the time of his coming, may be worth our marking: (d) At what hour (ſaith the Treatiſe Tamid) did the Preſident come? And it anſwers thus, Not at all times alike: ſometimes he comes at Cocks crowing, ſometimes near unto it, ſometimes before it, and ſometimes after: which nominated uncertainty of the time, and yet their readineſs for him whenſoever he came, is ſo parallel to thoſe words of our Saviour, Mark 13.35. that if thoſe were not ſpoken in ſome alluſion to this cuſtom, yet may they be well illuſtratedby it.

(b) *Talm. in Joma. per.*3.

(c) Maym. in Tam. per. 6.

(d) *Tam. per.*1

(e) Ibid.

(e) Out of the room Beth mokadh, they go through a wicket into the Court, carrying candles in their hands: and there as ſoon as they were all come in, they divide themſelves, and half of them go (in the Cloiſter walk) about the Temple, on the Weſt and South ſides of the Court, and the other half along the North and Eaſt ſides, and both Companies met at the Paſtry mans Chamber, which was on the left hand of the gate of Nicanor: and being met there they asked one another, Is all ſafe and well? Yes, all is well: And then they called the Paſtry man up to go about his buſineſs, to make the חביתין cakes for the High-prieſts meat offering.

SECT. I.

The manner of their caſting lots, for every mans ſeveral imployment.

THEN did the Preſident call upon them to go and caſt lots, to decide and appoint what work every one muſt go about. The place where they were to do this, was in the building Gazith, namely in that room of it that ſtood within the Court: for ſome part of it ſtood within the Court, and that part upon ſome occaſions was as the Chappel of the Temple, and ſome part of it ſtood out into the chel חל and in that there ſate the great Sanhedrin.

* Maym. in Tamid. per. 4.

* Being come together into the place, they all ſtand round, and conclude upon a number that they will count, as threeſcore, fourſcore, or a hundred, or what they thought good. Then the Preſident of the lottery takes off ſome one of their caps, and puts it on again, and Here (ſaith he) will I begin to count: Now put up your fingers: They put up their fingers, one, or two, or three, as they pleaſed: and he begins at him whoſe cap he had taken off, and tells the fingers that were held up round: He at whoſe fingers the tale or ſum agreed upon is up, he is the man on whom the lot is faln, and to him doth that particular ſervice accrew, for which the lot was caſt.

‖ The firſt lotting was to determine who ſhould firſt cleanſe the burnt offering Altar of its aſhes. They had uſed to run and ſcramble for this ſervice, and firſt come to the Altar, firſt do it: But (beſides the roughneſs and irreverence this manner of doing carried with it) a ſpecial occurrence and inconvenience that befel at one time, (which was, that one of the Prieſts thus ſhuffling for this buſineſs, was thruſt down by his fellow from off the riſe off the Altar, and brake his leg) did cauſe the Sanhedrin to take order that the work ſhould be done with more reverence and calmneſs, and therefore they decreed that the lottery ſhould appoint who ſhould do it, and this was the firſt imployment that they lotted for, and he at whom the number agreed upon is up, muſt have it.

SECT. II.

The cleanſing and dreſſing of the burnt offering Altar.

* Maym. in Tam. per. 1.

HE * to whom it was allotted to cleanſe the burnt offering Altar (which was the firſt lot caſt, and the firſt work to be done) leaves his fellows in the room Gazith, and having firſt waſhed his hands and his feet at the laver, he goes about the work.

‖ There were three fires continually made upon the Altar: the firſt was the great fire which was made for the burning of the ſacrifices. A ſecond leſs than it was made upon the ſide of it, from which they took coals to carry into the holy place to burn the incenſe. And a third was made for no other uſe, but to keep the fire in, that it might burn continually, and not go out: And they give their reaſon for this number of fires, which I ſhall not inſiſt upon: Now he that was to dreſs the Altar of its aſhes firſt, he takes a ſilver chafing diſh which uſually ſtood on the Weſt ſide of the Altar, and going to the Altar top, he ſcrapes the coals this way, and that way, and takes up his diſh full of burnt coals, and comes down with them to the pavement, and when he comes there, he turns his face towards the North, and goes ſo along, till he comes to the Eaſtſide of the Altar riſe, and there he lays down the coals on a heap, hard by the riſe, in a place where they alſo laid the garbage of the Birds, and the aſhes that were cleanſed off the golden Altar.

When his fellow Prieſts perceived that he was come down from the Altar, they haſted and waſhed their hands and feet; and taking the ſhovels and hooks that were for that ſervice, they turned the pieces of the laſt nights ſacrifice, if any were yet left unburnt, to the ſides of the Altar, and if the ſides would not hold them, they laid them upon the Altar riſe. Then do they ſcrape together the aſhes from all the ſides to the middle of the Altar, upon a great heap, and take from thence as much as filled a great veſſel of half an Homer (this veſſel was called פסכתר Peſachtar) and this they bring down with them, yet leaving a reaſonable big heap of aſhes ſtill, which they call Tapuahh. When they had brought this great veſſel of aſhes down, others of the Prieſts in leſſer veſſels carried them away, away, even out of the City: and laid them in a calm place, that the wind might ſcatter them as little as poſſible: and theſe aſhes might not be put to any uſe.

This cleanſing of the Altar every morning, they began moſt commonly about the dawning: but on the three ſolemn Feſtivals they began much ſooner, and on the day of Expiation, they began from midnight. When therefore they had thus brought off the aſhes, they go about to make the fire: And firſt they begin with the great fire for the burnt ſacrifices, which they called מערכה גדולה The great pile, and this they made ſomething towards the Eaſt ſide of the Altar. The ſecond fire which was for the coals for the Incenſe, was made of the wood of figtree only, and that was made toward the South-weſt corner, as that place being neareſt to the Prieſts ſtanding upon the Altar riſe, and the coals there being the readieſt to be taken away. As for the third fire, which was for the keeping of the fire continually burning, it was made indifferently in any part of the Altar: Now beſides all the other wood which was laid on the great fire, they added two ſingular billets, (for which they produce ſingular Tradition) to it, when the ſacrifice came on; which at the morning ſacrifice was carried and laid on by one Prieſt, but at the Evening ſacrifice by two. Having thus made the fire, they lay the pieces of the laſt nights ſacrifice that were not burnt, upon it again; and ſo they come down, and return into the room Gazith again; and there the Preſident calls them to a lottery again.

There were thirteen particular ſervices more to be aſſigned to particular men; as killing the Sacrifice, ſprinkling the Blood, cleanſing the golden Altar, dreſſing the Lamps, bringing the parts of the Sacrifice to the riſe of the Altar, &c. The firſt of which was appointed by lot in the ſame manner as before, and the reſt fell in order to the perſons, as they ſtood in order beyond him: they therefore conclude again upon another ſum or number, hold up their fingers, and he counts again. The man at whoſe fingers the count is up, 1. He is appointed to kill the Sacrifice. 2. He that ſtands next beyond him muſt take and ſprinkle the Blood. 3. The next beyond him muſt cleanſe the incenſe Altar. 4. The next beyond muſt dreſs the Candleſtick and Lamps. 5. The next muſt bring the Head and Legs of the Sacrifice to the riſe of the Altar. 6. The next muſt bring his two Shoulders. 7. The next the Rump and the Feet. 8. The next the Breaſt, Weaſand and Plucks. 9. The next the two Loins. 10. The next the Inwards. 11. The next the meat Offering. 12. The next the High-prieſts meat Offering. 13. And the next the drink Offering. And thus theſe thirteen ſeveral imployments were diſtributed ſeverally to thirteen men, the firſt by the lottery, and all the reſt by the mens ſtanding, and this was the ſecond lot.

There were two lots for two ſervices more uſed, namely for the burning of the incenſe, and for the bringing of the pieces of the ſacrifice from the riſe of the Altar, to the Altar top, and laying them on, but thoſe two lots were not caſt till a little further in the day, then the time that we are now upon. Now the reaſon why they counted Fingers or Hands in their lotting, and not the perſons themſelves, was, becauſe they held it not convenient to number Iſraelites by their perſons, but by ſome other thing: the reaſon of which conceit they give, but it is out of the rode of our preſent purſuit, to follow the inquiry after it.

Thoſe who were miſſed, and were not either by the lot, or by their ſtanding appointed to any of theſe imployments, that are mentioned, they put off their Prieſts garments, all but their linnen breeches, and went about the more ſervile works; as to fetch out the veſſels, that were to be uſed, to carry away the aſhes, that were fetched off the Altars, and the like.

SECT. III.

The killing of the morning ſacrifice, dreſſing the lamps and incenſe Altar.

THEN * doth the Preſident ſay to them, Go and ſee whether it be time to kill the dayly ſacrifice: One or another went to the top of ſome of the buildings about the Temple, and when he ſees it fair day, he ſaith, ברקאי It is fair day. I, but (ſaith the Preſident) is the Heaven bright all up to Hebron? He anſwers, Yes. Then ſaith he, Go and fetch the Lamb out of the Lamb room; and ſo they do, and though he were ſearched before, whether he were right and faultleſs, yet do they now ſearch him again by candlelight, but they may not kill him but by daylight: yet once (as the Talmud relateth) they were deceived by the moonlight, and thought it had been day, and ſo ſlew the morning ſacrifice by night.

* Talm. in Tamid. per. 3. & in Joma. per. 3.

He that was alotted to kill the Lamb, and had fetched him out of the Lamb room, brought him to the place of the rings, where the ſacrifice was uſually ſlain; and the reſt that were to ſprinkle the blood, and to carry the parts to the Altar, go with him thither, and wait for their imployment till it come: others go into the room where the veſſels of the ſervice ſervice lay, and from thence they bring ninety three ſilver and gold veſſels, which were all to be uſed that day; in one of them they give the Lamb water to drink, for that, they thought made him to flea the better.

The Seniors that carried the keys of the gates of the Court, when they ſaw their time they cauſed the gates to be opened, and at the opening of the laſt gates of the two Courts, the trumpets ſounded, and gave warning to the Levites and Stationary men, for their attendance: At laſt the gate of the Temple it ſelf was opened, for thoſe two to go in at, that were to dreſs the golden Altar and the Lamps, who took with them for that purpoſe, two golden veſſels, the one they called טני Teni, and the other כוז Coz.

As ſoon as the noyſe of the opening of the Temple door was heard, he that was to ſlay the Sacrifice ſlew him: and as near as might be, he that cleanſed the incenſe Altar, cleanſed it while the Sacrifice was in ſlaying. And when they ſprinkled the blood, he that was to dreſs the Lamps, dreſſed ſome of them at the time of ſprinkling.

The manner of cleanſing the incenſe Altar was thus. He took the golden diſh Teni, and ſet it before the Altar, and took his handful of coals and aſhes of the Altar, put them into it, and bruſhed the reſt into it; left it ſtanding there, and ſo came out.

The dreſſing of the Lamps was in this manner. There was a great ſtone that lay before the Candleſtick, in which there were hewed three ſteps; whereby, he that was to dreſs the Lamps, ſtepped up. What Lamps were out, he took out the yarn and oil, and put in new, and lighted them at ſome of the Lamps that were not out. Only that which they called the Weſtern Lamp, if that were out, it muſt not be lighted but by ſome fire fetched from the Sacrifice Altar.

The Weſtern Lamp נר מערבי was not that which ſtood moſt Weſtward of all the ſeven, but the middlemoſt of all, and it was ſo called, becauſe it was ſet bending Weſtward, towards the moſt holy place, and all the reſt of the Lamps ſtood bending towards this.

As for thoſe Lamps that he found burning, he ſnuft them, dreſt them, and ſupplied them with new oil. And thus he did only by five Lampt at this time, for he dreſſed not all the ſeven at once: and having thus done, he ſets down his golden diſh Coz, on the ſecond ſtep on which he had gone up, and ſo he came out.

In the mean while they without were ſprinkling the blood, flaying the ſacrifice, and dividing it into its pieces: which ſo divided, the ſeveral men, appointed to carry the pieces to the riſe of the Altar, brought them thither, ſalted them, and left them there, and now again go into the room Gazith, which was as their Chappel, to their prayers.

SECT. IV.

Their Publick Prayers, their Phylacteries.

* Tamid. 4. per. ‖ Magm. in Tamid. per. 6. Seder Tephil. loth.

THEN * the Preſident calls upon them to go to prayers; which they began thus, ‖ Thou haſt loved us O Lord our God with an everlaſting love, with great and abundant compaſſion haſt thou campaſſionated us, O our Father our King: for our fathers ſakes who truſted in thee, and thou taughteſt them ſtatutes of life. So be gracious to us alſo, O our Father, O moſt merciful Father, O thou compaſſionate one, pity us. And put into our hearts, to know, underſtand, obey, learn, teach, obſerve, do and perform all the words of the Doctrine of thy Law in love, and enlighten our Eyes by thy Law, and cauſe our hearts to cleave to thy commandments, and unite our hearts to love and to fear thy Name, &c.

After this Prayer they rehearſed the Ten Commandments, and after the Ten Commandments they ſaid over their Phylacteries.

There is mention of their Phylacteries in the Scripture, Matth. 23.5. and they were four Sections or Paragraphs of the Law, written in two Parchments, which Parchments they wore about them continually, as Memorandums of their obſervance of the Law, and evidences of their devotion: and therefore they were called in the Greek Tongue Phylacteria, or Obſervatories, and in the Hebrew Tephillin, or Oraiſons.

The portions of the Law that were written in theſe Parchments were theſe:

I. Exod. chap. 13. verſ. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10.
II. Exod. chap. 13. verſ. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16.
III. Deut. chap. 6. verſ. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.
IV. Deut. chap. 11. verſ. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21.

* Vid. Magm. in Tephillin. per. 1. & 2. & Buxtorf. Lex. Tal. in מלה

The manner and curioſity of writing theſe ſentences * in their ſeveral columns, and in what Parchment, and with what ink, is largely diſcourſed by the Author cited in the margin, with which I ſhall not trouble the Reader at this time: only I may not omit the reaſon why theſe were uſed, rather than any other ſentences of the Law, which was this, becauſe becauſe in every one of the Sections there is mention, either of Thoſe words being Totaphoth, or frontlets between their eyes, or a memorial between their eyes, or that they ſhould bind them upon their hands. And accordingly the place where they wore theſe two parchments was, the one upon their foreheads downwards, towards between their eyebrows, and the other upon their left arm: whereupon * Tanchuma hath taken occaſion to expound Gods ſwearing by his ſtrong arm, of his ſwearing by the Phylacteries. * Tanchuma. fol. 6. col. 3.

I doubt whether all the Nation uſed theſe Phylacteries indifferently, or only thoſe who were called, The Scholars of the wiſe, who pretended more knowledge, devotion, and ſtudy of the Law than the common people: [a] It is recorded by the Jewiſh writers, that the Sadduces though they could not away with the Phariſees traditions, yet that they uſed Phylacteries as well as they, but only that they differed from them in opinion, about the place where they ſhould wear them: but whether Husbandmen, Tradeſmen, and the reſt of the common people wore them, as well as Scholars, and the learned of the Nation; this one paſſage of Maymony amongſt other arguments, may give ſome occaſion to ſuſpect: He ſpeaking of thoſe things, for which a man might be allowed, to paſs by a Synagogue whilſt they were at prayers there and not come in; among other things he ſaith thus, [b] Were his Phylacteries ſeen upon him, then that was a ſign that he neglected not the Law, and ſo though he had occaſion to paſs the Synagogue at that time, yet his Phylacteries appearing, ſpake for him, that it was not for want of devotion, that he paſſed the Synagogue, but was called away by ſome buſineſs or occaſion. [a] Juchaſin. [b] Maym. ubi ſup.

Howſoever the common people did not wear theſe Phylactery parchments, as the learned did, yet both learned and unlearned were bound alike to the rehearſing or ſaying over the Phylactery ſentences contained in them morning and evening every day. [c] Yea workmen that were on the top of a tree, or on the top of a piece of timber, (rearing or repairing a houſe) they were bound to this reherſal there, when the time of the day for it was come. [c] Talm. in Beracoth. per. 2.

This rehearſal is commonly called by the Hebrews קריאת שמע Keriath Shema, the ſaying over of Shema, becauſe one of the Sections began with Shema Iſrael, Hear O Iſrael, &c. Deut. 6. 4. which though it were not the firſt of the four, as they ſtand written in the book of the Law, nor the firſt written in their parchments which they wore, yet was it ever the firſt in their rehearſal; and the reaſon is given, becauſe it containeth the firſt and the foundation of all other duties, and that is, to love the Lord.

The time of their Keriath Shema, or rehearſal of their Phylactery ſentences in the morning, is thus determined in their Traditions. [d] At what time of day do they ſay over their Phylacteries in the morning? Namely, from ſuch time as a man can ſee to diſtinguiſh between blew and white: Rabbi Eliezer ſaith, between blew and green, even until ſun riſing, Rab. Joſhua ſaith, until the third hour. And at what time do they ſay them over at Evening? Namely, from the time that the Prieſts go in to eat their offerings until the end of the firſt watch, &c. [d] Ibid. per. 2.

Now beſides this dayly rehearſal of theſe ſentences morning and evening, to which they were all bound by their traditions, they alſo held it a great piece of piety to ſay them over at the hour of death: ſo it is related of one of the ten Martyrs of the Kingdom, (for ſo let me Tranſlate תרגומי מלכות) that as he was ſaying over his Phylacteries, he was ſlain and caſt unto the dogs. And to ſpeak from more later times, Joſeph the Prieſt [e] in his various Hiſtory of the Turks, Jews, and Chriſtians (a book very rare to be had) deſcribing a maſſacre raiſed by the red Croſs Souldiers that went under Godfrey of Bulloine, and the reſt to the holy war, againſt the Jews in Germany: he recordeth it ſeveral times over, that when ſuch and ſuch murdered Jews were ready to expire, yea even children in their mothers arms, they ſaid their Keriath Shema, or their Phylactery ſentences over, and with thoſe in their mouths they gave up the Ghoſt. [d] Lib. 1. ad ann. 1096.

SECT. V.

The burning of Incenſe, and the reſt of their Prayers.

COncerning the time of the burning of Incenſe, they have this Tradition קטורת של שחר ויתרה קרבה בין דם לאיברים של בין הערביים בין איברים לנסכים * That the Incenſe of the morning was offered between the ſprinkling of the blood, and the laying of the pieces upon the Altar: and of the Evening, between the laying on of the pieces on the Altar, and the drink offering. Now for this imployment of offering the Incenſe, they go to lotting again, to be reſolved who ſhould do it; and ſo there was another lot likewiſe caſt, to determine who ſhould bring the pieces from the riſe of the Altar and lay them on. * Joma per. 3.

He that was alotted to burn the Incenſe, took a ſilver diſh in which there was a Cenſer full of Frankincenſe; another took another diſh and went to the top of the Altar, and thence took ſome burning coals and came down. Theſe two muſt go into the Temple; now as they go, there was a great veſſel or inſtrument, or what ſhall I call it? (they call it מגרפה Migrephah) which being rung or ſtruck upon, made an exceeding great found; and ſo great, that they ſet it out by this hyperbole אין אדם שומע קול חבירו בירושלים מקול חמגריפה One man could not hear another in Jeruſalem, when the מגרפה Migrephah ſounded: It was as a Bell that they rung to give notice of what was now in hand. And the ringing of it, as ſaith the Treatiſe Tamid, ſerved for theſe three purpoſes. * 1. Any Prieſt that heard the ſound of it, knew that his brethren were now ready to go in and worſhip, and he made haſte and came. 2. Any Levite that heard it, knew that his brethren the Levites were going in to ſing, and he made haſte and came. And 3. the head or chief of the Station hearing the ſound of it, brought up thoſe that had been unclean and had not yet their atonement made, into the gate of Nicanor to have them there atoned for.

* Tam. per. 5.

The two men then, that are going into the Temple to burn Incenſe, ring upon this Migrephah as they go by it, (for it lay between the Altar and the porch) to give notice to all who were to attend, that now the ſervice was in beginning, and to chime them in. As they go up the ſteps, they two that had been in before, to cleanſe the Incenſe Altar, and to dreſs the Lamps, go up before them: He that had cleanſed the Altar goeth in, and taketh up his diſh Teni, and worſhippeth, and cometh out. He that had dreſſed the five Lamps before, dreſſeth now the other two, and taketh up his diſh Coz, and worſhippeth, and cometh out. He that went in with the Cenſer of coals after a little office done towards the diſpoſing of the Incenſe, leaves the other there, and he alſo comes out.

Now he that is left there alone for the burning of the Incenſe, he offers not to kindle it, till the preſident from without with a loud voice give him notice when he ſhall begin: yea though it were the High-prieſt himſelf that offereth the Incenſe, yet he begins not to do it, till the Preſident have called to him, Sir offer: and aſſoon as he hath given the ſignal to the Incenſe offerer that he ſhall begin and offer, all the company in the Court withdraws downward from the Temple, and fall to other of their Prayers.

SECT. VI.

The reſt of their Prayers.

BEſides the Prayers and Rehearſal of the Decalogue and of their Phylacteries mentioned before, they had three or four Prayers more which they uſed at the morning Service, and they were theſe; * The firſt they called אמרת ויציב Emeth and Jatſib, becauſe it began with thoſe two words, and it referred to their Phylacteries, and it was of this form. Truth and ſtability, and firm and ſure, and upright and faithful, and beloved and lovely and delightful, and fair and terrible and glorious, and ordered and acceptable and good and beautiful is this word for us for ever and ever. The truth of the everlaſting God our King, the Rock of Jacob, the ſhield of our ſalvation for ever and ever. He is ſure and his Name ſure, and his Throne ſetled, and his Kingdom and Truth eſtabliſhed for evermore, &c.

* Tam. ubi ſupr.

|| The ſecond is called by the Talmud Text עבודה Avodah, but by Maymony רצה Retſeh, yet they both agree in one as to the prayer it ſelf, only the one names it after the firſt word in it, and the other after one of the chiefeſt words in it. The tenor of it was thus, Be pleaſed O Lord our God with thy people Iſrael, and with their prayer, and reſtore the ſervice to the Oracle of thy houſe, and accept the burnt offering of Iſrael and their prayer in love, with well pleaſedneſs; and let the ſervice of Iſrael thy people, be continually well pleaſing to thee. And they conclude thus, We praiſe thee who art the Lord our God, and the God of our Fathers, the God of all fleſh, our Creator, and the maker of all the Creation, bleſſing and praiſe be to thy great and holy Name, becauſe thou haſt preſerved and kept us; ſo preſerve and keep us, and bring back our captivity to the Courts of thy holineſs, &c.

|| Ib. & Maym. ubi ſupr.

A third prayer ran thus, שים שלום Appoint peace, goodneſs, and bleſſing, grace, mercy, and compaſſion for us, and for all Iſrael thy people: bleſs us O our Father, even all of us as one man, with the light of thy countenance, for in the light of thy countenance thou O Lord our God haſt given us the Law of life, and loving mercy and righteouſneſs and bleſſing and compaſſion and life and peace, let it pleaſe thee to bleſs thy people Iſrael at all times. In the book of life, with bleſſing and peace, and ſuſtentation let us be remembred and written before thee, we and all thy people the houſe of Iſrael, &c.

And a fourth prayer was uſed on the Sabbath as a bleſſing, by the Courſe that went out, for a farewel, upon the Courſe that came in, in theſe words, He that cauſed his name to dwell in this houſe, cauſe to dwell among you love, and brotherhood, and peace, and friendſhip. Compare 2 Cor. 13. 11.

Now

Now whereas there is ſome ſeeming doubtfulneſs among the Talmudical writers, about the time of theſe prayers, they leaving it ſomewhat uncertain whether they were uttered immediately before the offering of the Incenſe, or in the very time of its offering, the Evangeliſt Luke hath determined the queſtion, and reſolved us, that the multitude was praying at the very time of the Incenſe, Luke 1. 10. and even the Gloſs upon the Talmud it ſelf, doth tell us, that theſe prayers were the peoples prayers, the laſt only excepted.

When thoſe prayers were done, he whoſe lot it was to bring up and lay the pieces of the Sacrifice upon the Altar, did that buſineſs in that manner as hath been mentioned before, namely, firſt flinging them into the fire, and then taking them up again, and laying them in order.

After which things performed, the Prieſts, eſpecially thoſe that had been in the holy place, (with the holy veſſels in their hands that they had uſed) ſtanding upon the ſtairs that went up into the porch, lifted up their hands and bleſſed the people. Compare Luke 1.22.

Not to inſiſt upon the large diſputes and diſcourſes * that are among the Jews about their lifting up their hands, the bleſſing they pronounced was that in *Numb.*6.24,25,26. The Lord bleſs thee and keep thee, the Lord make his face ſhine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee; the Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. And the manner was thus, they lift up their hands above their heads, with their fingers ſpread, and one of them ſaith over this bleſſing word by word, and they ſay after him, and they make it all one bleſſing (but in the Synagogues they made it three) and when they have ended it, the people anſwered, Bleſſed be the Lord God, the God of Iſrael, from everlaſting to everlaſting.

* *Taanith per.*4 *Maym. in Tephil.& Bircoth cohanim per.*14. & 15.

After this bleſſing the meat offering was offered, and after that the חביתין meat offering of the High-prieſt, and laſt of all the drink offering; and then began the ſong and muſick, of which we have ſpoken before; and upon every ſtop of the ſong, the trumpets ſounded and the people worſhipped; and having done ſo at the laſt cloſe they departed.

Thus was the ordinary and common ſervice of the Temple Morning and Evening, ſave that at the Evening ſervice there was ſome ſmall difference from this Rubrick, which was not very material: as that then they caſt not lots for their ſeveral imployments, but thoſe that the lot had aſſigned them in the Morning, they retained in the Afternoon: only about the matter of burning the Incenſe they caſt lots anew amongſt thoſe of the houſe of the Father that ſerved that day, that had never burnt Incenſe in their lives: but if all of them had at one time or other been upon that imployment, then he that had had it by lot at the Morning Service, did alſo perform it at the Evening: likewiſe at the Evening Sacrifice the burning of Incenſe was a little later than at the Morning, as was toucht before; for it was between the laying on of the pieces of the beaſt upon the Altar, and the offering of the drink offering: ſo that then the burning of Incenſe and the publick Prayers fell in juſt with the time of the Minchah or meat offering. The Prieſts alſo lifted not up their hands in bleſſing the people at the Evening Service on ſome days, as they did in the Morning, and the reaſon why they did not, is given, and the matter diſcuſſed in the beginning of the fourth chapter of the Treatiſe Taanith, but it may ſeem more tedious to the Reader than either uſeful or delightſom to inſiſt upon it.

CHAP. X.

The manner of their worſhipping at the Temple.

THE holineſs of the place, and the equity of that Law, Ye ſhall reverence my Sanctuary, did juſtly challenge all ſolemn and holy behaviour of them that came to worſhip there: for which, as the Law had prohibited all uncleanneſs from that place, ſo did the great Maſters of Traditions prohibit other things which the Law had not named, in which proviſion they did, as they did generally in all other things, they ſtrained at a Gnat and ſwallowed a Camel: not ſticking to make and permit the houſe of Prayer to be a houſe of Merchandiſe, and a den of Thieves, and yet ſtrict in prohibiting what was of far leſs faultineſs and ſcandal. According to which their punctual preciſeneſs in leſſer matters.

I. לא יכנס אדם להר הבורז בסקלו * No man might go into the mountain of the houſe with his ſtaff. It being reputed as a thing unfit, to bring in weapons of ſtriking into that place of peace, or to uſe that place as a journey, which was to be a reſt, or to lean upon any ſtaff there, but only on God. From this cuſtom it was that our Saviour drove not not out the buyers and ſellers out of the Temple with a ſtaff, but with a whip of cords, no ſtaff being permitted to be brought in thither. And here it was a ſtrange contradiction in Religion, that they might bring cattel to market into the Mountain of the houſe, but they might not drive them in thither with a ſtaff. Yet did the man of the Mountain of the houſe walk up and down the Mountain with his ſtaff, and uſe it to ſtrike too, for חכט כמקלו as Maymonides tells us, he cudgelled or punched with his ſtaff, thoſe Levites that lay ſleeping upon the guards.

II. או כמנעל שברגליו * Nor might any man enter in thither with his ſhoes on his feet. This prohibition they took from thoſe words of God to Moſes and Joſhua, *Put off thy ſhoes from thy feet, &c. Exod.*3. *Joſh.*5. Under which prohibition and practice was couched that doctrine, which the Targum uttereth on theſe words in Eccleſ. 5. Take heed to thy feet when thou entereſt into the houſe of God. ‖ Thou ſon of man take heed to thy feet when thou entereſt into the ſanctuary of the Lord to pray, that thou go not in thither full of thy ſins unrepented of, &c. And be not as fools, which offer ſacrifices for their ſins, and yet turn not from their evil works.

* Ibid.

‖ Targ. in Eccleſ. 5.1.

They might go into the Mountain of the houſe in their ſandals though they might not in their ſhoes, * but the Levites might not go into their desks to ſing, nor their Prieſts into the Court to ſerve, no not ſo much as in their ſandals, but bare footed.

* *Erach. ptr.*2. in Gemar.

III. או באפונדתו Nor might any man enter into the mountain of the houſe with his ſcrip or bag purſe about him. The word אפונדה or פונדה is taken by ſome to ſignifie a little upper garment that they wore, which in Greek (from which language they conceive this word is taken) is called Ἐπινδύτης *Joh.*21.7. but I have ventured to render it a ſcrip or bag purſe, for the clearer ſenſe of the prohibition that we are about, upon ſome grounds and reaſons which I ſhall give, when I have named one or two of their prohibitions more.

IV. או באבק שעל רגליו Nor might he come in with the duſt upon his feet, but he muſt waſh or wipe them, and look to his feet when he entred into the houſe of God. How under this might be couched the doctrine of ſhaking off all worldly thoughts and affections when they were to go about the ſervice of God, is ready for every one to obſerve, and needeth no intimation.

V. או במעות הצרורין לו בסרינו Nor with mony tyed to him in his purſe. The words of our Saviour to his Diſciples when he was ſending them to preach, are ſo parallel to theſe prohibitions, that it is more than probability that he ſpeaketh in alluſion to theſe things. Provide neither gold, nor ſilver, nor braſs in your purſes, nor ſcrip for your journey, neither ſhoes nor ſtaves, Matth. 10. 9, 10. And therefore I have the rather tranſlated אפונדה a ſcrip, and סרין a purſe, becauſe thoſe two words in our Saviours ſpeech do not only fitly tranſlate theſe two, but that they ſeem to do ſo purpoſely. And for the rendring of the former word ſo, there is this double warrant: 1. Becauſe the word תרמלא which the Syriack hath uſed to render the Greek word πήρα by in the place cited, is ſometimes uſed by the Talmud in conjuction with the ſame words that אפונדה is uſed with here; as במקלו ותרמילו (a) with his ſtaff and his ſcrip, מקלו מנעלו ותרמילו (b) his ſtaff, his ſhoes, and his ſcrip: and 2. from the ſignification that Rabbi Nathan giveth of אפונדה in theſe words, (c) It was a kind of veſture which was a little upper garment in which were many places ſewed, in which they put any thing they met with, that they had occaſion to uſe: So that this was a kind of an apron with divers purſes, or pockets made in it, in which they put their neceſſaries, as we do in our pockets; which apron they could readily put on or off, wear or lay aſide as they ſaw occaſion. And as in ſuch an apron they had their pockets, ſo in the ſcarf or girdle wherewithal they girded ~~their under coats~~, they had their purſes, *Matth.*10.9. Their girdles ordinarily were of linnen, which the word before us סרין meaneth, (and it was extraordinary in Elias and John the Baptiſt to go in leathern girdles) and in theſe their girdles they had a way to keep the money that they carried about with them when they travelled or went upon their occaſions, but into the Mountain of the houſe they might bring no money in it. And thus might they not come thither, with any thing of worldly notion or incumbrance about them, but muſt lay aſide for their time of being there, (as a lecture of devotion retired from worldly thoughts or employments) their money, their worldly implements and utenſils, and whatſoever in their common imployments and occaſions they uſed, and uſed to carry with them: Sure then (it will be thought, that) the poor Creeple that lay at the Beautiful gate begging, *Act.*3. had but a very poor and comfortleſs trade of it, to beg there where no money was, or might be ſtirring: and when Peter and John ſay to him, ſilver and gold have I none; it may ſeem that that was the tune of all that came by him: But money was brought into the Temple in abundance, though they brought it not in their purſes, for they gave money to the Prieſts, who helpt them to offerings for their money, and they gave money to the Treaſury for the poor, but they brought their money in their hands. And it may be that phraſe ſo ordinary in the Hebrew did allude to this cuſtom, He ſhall bring an offering as his hand ſhall find.

VI. Being

VI. Being come into the Mountain of the Houſe, he muſt be careful of theſe four things. 1. אסור לרוק בכל הר הבית (h) He may in no wiſe ſpit there: but if he be neceſſitated to ſpit, he muſt do it in ſome corner of his garment: Yet did they not ſtick to ſpit in the face of him that was greater than the Temple, *Mat.*26.67. (i) There was a ſtreet in Jeruſalem which was called the Upper Street, and in this Street ſpittle was unclean, and ſo it was in no ſtreet of Jeruſalem beſides. (h) Maym. ubi ante. (i) *Shek. per.*8

2. לא יקל את ראשו כנגד שער מזרחי He may not uſe any irreverent geſture, eſpecially not before the Gate of Nicanor, for that was juſt before the face of the Temple: and this irreverence forbidden was, that they might not laugh, ſcoff, nor talk idely, much leſs do any thing of a higher irreverence.

3. לא יעשה הר הבית קפנר ריא He may not make the Mountain of the Houſe a thoroughfare: (k) no more might they do one of their Synagogues: As if he had occaſion to go frome one ſide of the City to another about his occations, he might not go through the Mountain of the Temple, though that were the nearer way, but he muſt go about: for thither he might not come אלא לדבר מצוה, but only upon occaſion of Religion. (k) *Maym. in Tephillah. per.*1.

4. הנכנס לעזרה יהלך בנחת He that went into the Court muſt go leaſurely and gravely into the place where he was to ſtand, and there he muſt demean himſelf as in the preſence of the Lord God, in all reverence and fear.

VII. אין מתפלל אלא מעומד (l) Being now come in, to pray and to attend the ſervice in the Court, 1. He muſt ſtand, and neither ſit, nor lean, nor lie: for beſides that caution which we ſhall obſerve by and by, that none might ſit in the Court, it was not only their cuſtom, but they held it their duty to pray ſtanding whereſoever they prayed: Our Saviour ſaith, they loved to pray ſtanding in the Synagogues, and in the corners of the ſtreets, *Mat.*6. Their own traditions do bear witneſs to theſe words, both as to the poſture, and to the place. There are eight things (ſaith Maymony in the place cited above in the Margin) that he that prayeth muſt take notice of to do them: namely, to ſtand, to ſet his face toward the Temple, to compoſe his body, to compoſe his cloaths, to fit his place, to order his voice, to bow and to worſhip: He is not to pray but ſtanding (unleſs ſick or weak) and if he be in a ſhip or a cart, if he can let him ſtand. And in the eleventh Chapter of the ſame Book, he ſpeaks of praying in the ſtreets at their Faſts, and ſome other days when the Synagogues would not hold them. 2. As for the compoſure of their bodies in prayer, the rule that their tradition gives, is this, He is to ſtand, with his feet one even by another, and muſt caſt his eyes downward, and his heart upward, and he muſt lay his hands upon his breaſt, the right hand upon the left, and he muſt ſtand as a Servant before his Maſter, with all reverence and fear. Their looking down in prayer, they took from thoſe places in Scripture that ſpeak of being aſhamed to look up towards Heaven, and of being unable to look up becauſe of ſin, and to this poſture of looking down, and laying his hands upon his heart, that demeanour of the Publican in the Parable ſeemeth parallel. He would not ſo much as lift up his eyes towards Heaven, but ſmote upon his breaſt, Luke 18.13. And even the Prieſts when they pronounced the bleſſing upon the People, neither looked up towards Heaven, nor level upon the People, but down upon the ground, and the People might not look upon them. (l) *Id. ib. per.*5.

VIII. אין ישיבה בעזרה אלא למלכי בית דויד בלבד Were they never ſo weary with ſtanding, or had they ſtood never ſo long, yet might they not ſit down in the Court, either People or Prieſts: For this is a moſt known and received Maxime amongſt the moſt Jewiſh Writers, That no man whoſoever might ſit in the Court, but only the Kings of the Houſe of David. (m) Though Kimchi alledg ſome, that excepted the Kings from this privi-ledge, and allowed it only to the High-prieſt. (n) Midras Tillim doth wittily apply this ſitting of the King alone, and all the reſt ſtanding, to the poſture of the Congregation in Heaven, where the great King ſits, and all the company there, ſtandeth attending on him: But ſome other of the Jews do as unwittily apply it, when they make this to be one of Jeroboams greateſt fears for the Peoples withdrawing from him, and perſonate him ſpeaking thus. (o) It is certain that there is no ſitting in the Court, but only for the Kings of the Houſe of David: therefore as ſoon as they ſhall ſee Rehoboam ſitting, and me ſtanding, they will conclude, that if I were a King, I ſhould ſit down, &c, (p) From this received tradition, of not ſitting in the Court, the great Sanhedrin, who ſate in the room Gazith, which was in the South Wall of the Court, would not preſume to ſit in that ſide of the building that ſtood in the Court, but they ſate in the other ſide that ſtood in the חל chel. In its due place we have at large deſcribed the ſituation of that building, and their ſitting there. IX. לא יעמוד בראש מגולה. (q) They might not pray with their heads uncovered: And the wiſemen and their ſcholars (ſaith my Author) never prayed but being varled. So (r) Rabbi Nathan relating a ſtory of Nicodemus, how he prayed, and begged for rain in a great exigent, and mentioning his twice going in to pray upon that occaſion, he doth particularly expreſs this circumſtance חחעטף That he put on his vail, and went in, and prayed. prayed. And the Jews compare the appearing of the Lord upon Mount Sinai in a cloud, to the Angelus Eccleſiæ, or Miniſter of the Congregation, having on his Vail. (s) כשליח צבור עטוף. The Prieſts wore their Caps or Bonnets conſtantly all the time they were about the ſervice, and yet it ſeems they did not account that covering of their heads ſufficient when they went to pray, but they put on ſome other covering alſo. This Cuſtom and Practice of theirs the Apoſtle taketh to task, 1*Cor.* 11.4.

(s) Maym. in Jſodei torah. per. 8.

X. Their bodily geſture in bowing before the Lord, was either כריעה bending of the knees, or קדח bowing of the head: or השתחויה falling proſtrate upon the ground. Now this laſt is moſt ſpoken of, and yet according to its ſtrict propriety it was leaſt in uſe: they uſed indeed ſometime to fall down upon the floor in proſtration, but ordinarily this was changed among them from a flat falling upon the ground, to a very low bending of the body towards it: for they had this poſition, (t) That proſtration was not fit for every man, but only for ſuch as knew themſelves righteous men, like Joſhua.

(t) Id ubi ante.

XI. (v) Having performed the ſervice, and being to go away, they might not turn their backs upon the Altar, therefore they went backward till they were out of the Court: and when they came into the mountain of the Houſe, (w) they might not go out at the ſame Gate, at which they came in, about which matter we have diſcourſed elſewhere.

CHAP. XI.

Of the appearance of the People at the three Feſtivals.

THE great Sanhedrin was as an Almanack to all the Nation to give them notice of the New Moons, by which they might fix their monthly Feaſts, and know when to celebrate their Solemnities. Now although the Sanhedrin had the skill to know the night when the New Moon ſhould appear (for from its appearing they began the Month) yet they did not determine of the thing, till they had the teſtimony of two men, which gave in evidence that they had ſeen the New Moon: And hereupon it was, that very many couples repaired to Jeruſalem for this purpoſe, who having ſeen the firſt New Moon, ſet away thither to give teſtimony of it, and there were entertained in a place of the City called בית יעזק (b) Beth Jaazek, (c) a Court walled in with ſtone, and examined about the buſineſs and feaſted, that men might be encouraged to come to witneſs upon ſo needful an occaſion: it is beſides our preſent purpoſe to inquire curiouſly after the quality of the perſons whoſe teſtimony was to be accepted, or how, or how far they came, or why they ſhould come, when the Perſons of the great Council might ſee the Moon themſelves, and how they of the Sanhedrin that ſaw the Moon, did witneſs among themſelves about it, and therefore we will let theſe diſquiſitions alone, and content our ſelves with obſerving this, that (d) as that Court held it ſelf bound to fix and give notice of the New Moons, ſo they held themſelves bound to determine upon this matter by the mouth of two Witneſſes, as they did alſo in other Judicial matters.

(a) Maymon. in kidd. hhodeſh. per. 1.

(b) Roſh. haſh. per. 2.

(c) Aruch. in עזק.

(d) Gloſs. in Maym. in loc. citat.

The two firſt witneſſes that came, if their teſtimony were current did ſerve the turn, and they looked no further (yet had they ſomething to ſay to all the couples that came, becauſe they would encourage the work:) or if thoſe two did not ſerve the turn, when any other two did, then they took courſe that all the Country might know of the day with what ſpeed might be.

For that purpoſe their courſe at the firſt was this: At night (after they had concluded by day, by ſuch witneſs, that the New Moon was ſeen the Night before) they cauſed one to go to Mount Olivet, with a bundle of moſt combuſtible wood, and other ſtuff, and there he ſet it on fire, and waved it up and down, and this way, and that way, and never left, till he ſaw another do ſo upon another hill, and ſo another on a third: and thoſe that took at him, they waved their blazes up and down, till they were anſwered with the like from another Hill, and ſo the intelligence was quickly diſperſed through the whole land: Nay, ſaith the Talmud, (e) it went from Mount Olivet to Sartaba, from Sartaba to Gryphena, from Gryphena to Hhevaron. from Hhevaron to Beth Baltin: and he that ſtood there never left waving his blaze, till he ſaw all the place of the Captivity full of the like.

The Country thus ſeeing theſe flames and blazes, knew that the New Moon had appeared the night before, and that the Sanhedrin had concluded the day paſt, for the firſt day of the Month, and ſo they knew how to count forward: But it ſeems experience taught them in time, that by ſuch kind of intelligence, they might be, and ſometimes were deceived משקלקלו האפיקורוסים והכותים by the Samaritans or prophane perſons, or ſome of their enemies, that made ſuch flamings for the very nonce, that they might deceive them:

them: (f) Therefore they fell to a ſecond way of diſperſing their intelligence, and that was by ſending Meſſengers up and down the Country for this purpoſe: What a toil would a good Almanack have ſaved, nay an indifferent one would have given as much, or more certainty about this matter, than this way did, or could do, becauſe of the ſlipperineſs of it in ſeveral particulars. (f) Ibid. per. 1.

Theſe Meſſengers were ſent abroad upon this errand only ſeven moneths in the Year: As,

1. In the Month Niſan, that the People might know the right day of the Paſſeover.
2. In the month Ijar, becauſe of the ſecond Paſſeover, or the Paſſeover in the ſecond month.
3. In the month Ab, becauſe of the Faſt, on the ninth day.
4. In the month Elul, becauſe of the beginning of the year, the next month after: for Elul was moſt ordinarily menſis vacuus, or a month of nine and twenty days only, and ſo they knowing the firſt day of Elul, they might obſerve the thirtieth day, for the firſt of Tiſri, or the beginning of the year: And if on the thirtieth day they found not either by the ſight of the Moon, or by ſome intelligence from the Sanhedrin, that that proved the firſt day of the month; they kept the next after alſo for it, that they might make ſure.
5. In Tiſri, becauſe of the day of Expiation, and feaſt of Tabernacles.
6. In Ciſleu, becauſe of the Feaſt of Dedication.
7. In Adar, becauſe of the Feaſt of Purim.

The knowledge of the certain day of the three Feſtivals, Paſſeover, Pentecoſt and Tabernacles, being thus imparted to all the Country, they were by the Law to reſort to Jeruſalem, at the times appointed, and to keep the Feaſt, and to rejoice there. Their appearance there was called ראיה Raaiah, and their feſtivating and rejoycing, was called חגיגה chagigah. Their appearance was made in the Court of the Temple, the firſt holiday in the feſtival Week, and they were to bring their ſacrifice for their appearance, and peace offerings for the Hagigah, or for the ſolemnity of the Feſtivity, and their peace offerings for their rejoycing, and theſe were called שלמי שמחה Peace offerings of joy.

(g) There were ſome that were acquitted and excuſed from this appearance; as Men-ſervants that were not made free, the deaf, dumb, ſilly, lame, unclean, uncircumciſed, thoſe that were very old, the ſick, tender and unable to travel afoot, and infants till they were able to walk up to the Mountain of the Houſe, holding their Fathers by the hand. (g) Hagigah per. 1.

And as miraculous providence did preſerve their Families in the Country, when they were gone up to theſe ſolemnities (and had left at home none but Women, Children, and ſome Men-ſervants, which were not free,) ſo it was little leſs than a Miracle, that all theſe vaſt multitudes of People, ſhould find proviſion and accomodation for them, when they came to Jeruſalem. And this the Talmudicks do juſtly take notice of as a ſpecial wonder, and remarkable work of God, of which they have this obſervation.

(h) Ten wonders, ſay they, were ſhewed to our Fathers at the Sanctuary. No Woman ever proved abortive by the ſmell of the fleſh of the Sacrifices. And no man ever ſtumbled in Jeruſalem : Neither did any man ever fall in Jeruſalem. Nor was there ever abortion in Jeruſalem: Nor did any man ever ſay to his fellow, I have not found a fire where to roſt my Paſchal in Jeruſalem: Nor did any man ever ſay to his fellow, I have not found a Bed in Jeruſalem to lie in: Nor did ever any man ſay to his fellow, My lodging is too ſtrait in Jeruſalem, &c. (h) Aboth. R. Nathan. per. 34.

CHAP. XII.

Of the manner of the celebration of their Paſſeover.

THE great and myſterious Sacrament of the Paſſeover, is ſo copiouſly related, and the Hiſtory of it given, in Exod. 12. that it is needleſs to ſpeak any thing of it, as to its ſtory: But the celebration of the Paſſeover in after times, eſpecially in the times of our Saviour, when traditions were come to their height, did ſo far differ in various circumſtances from that, that was ordained in Egypt, and had ſo various Rites put upon it by their Traditions above that, that the diſcovery of the manner of it in thoſe times, deſerveth ſome copious diſcourſe and ſcrutiny from their own Traditions and Antiquities, that put thoſe circumſtances upon it. It will therefore not be amiſs to trace theſe particulars ſtep by ſtep, out of ſuch Writing and Writers, as ſpeak purpoſely and largely of this matter; and that the rather, becauſe the New

New Teſtament in ſeveral places and paſſages doth refer to ſome of the circumſtances which we call additional.

Firſt therefore we will begin with the difference which the Jewiſh Doctors hold out, between the Paſſeover in Egypt, and the Paſſeover in ſucceeding ages, which (a) Toſaphta on the Treatiſe Peſſachin holdeth out thus.

(a) Toſaphta in Peſſach. per. 8.

The Paſſeover in Egypt, the taking of it up, was on the tenth day, and the killing of it was on the fourteenth, and they were not guilty for it of cutting off. The Paſſeover in ſucceeding generations they are liable concerning it to cutting off.

Of the Paſſeover in Egypt it is ſaid, Let him and his neighbour next to him take a Lamb, but it is not ſo ſaid of the Paſſeover in ſucceeding generations: But I ſay, ſaith R. Simeon, it is ſo ſaid of the Paſſeover in future times: And that becauſe a man ſhould not leave his neighbour whoſe houſe is near unto him, to keep his Paſſeover with his companion; for it is ſaid, Better is a neighbour that is near, than a Brother that is far off.

The Paſſeover in Egypt was not charged with ſprinkling the blood and fat upon the Altar; but it is otherwiſe with the Paſſeover in after times.

Of the Paſſeover in Egypt it is ſaid, Ye ſhall put of the blood upon the two poſts, and the upper door poſt: but it is not ſo with the Paſſeovers afterward.

At the Paſſeover in Egypt it is ſaid, None of you ſhall go out of the door of his houſe till morning: but it was not ſo in after generations.

The Paſſeover in Egypt was ſlain by every one in his own houſe, but the Paſſeovers afterward, all Iſrael ſlew them in one place.

Where they eat the Paſſeover in Egypt, there alſo they were to lodge: but in after times, they might eat it in one place, and lodge in another.

Yet was the Paſſeover in Egypt, and ſucceeding Paſſeovers all one: whoſoever had ſervants that were not circumciſed, and maidens that were not baptized, they reſtrained them from eating the Paſſeover. But I ſay, ſaith Rabbi Eliezer the ſon of Jacob, the Scripture ſpeaks only of the Paſſeover in Egygt.

In theſe things the Paſſeover in Egypt, and in ſucceeding times was alike.

The Paſſeover in Egypt was in three Houſes, ſo alſo was it with future Paſſeovers.

The Paſſeover in Egypt was of the flock, a male without blemiſh, of the firſt year: After Paſſeovers were ſo likewiſe.

Of the Paſſeover in Egypt it is ſaid, ye ſhall not leave ought thereof till morning: the like was it alſo with after Paſſeovers.

Rabbi Joſi the Galilean ſaith, I ſay that leaven in Egypt was forbidden but for one day.

The Paſſeover in Egypt required a ſong: ſo did the Paſſeovers in after times require a ſong.

Thus is the Jewiſh differencing and parallelling the firſt Paſſeover, and thoſe ſucceeding: in which paſſage before we leave it, theſe things are obſervable:

1. That whereas it is ſaid, that as to the Paſſeover in Egypt, there was no liableneſs to cutting off, it is ſpoken in comparing the relation of the inſtitution of the firſt Paſſeover in Egypt, Exod. 12. with the renewing of the command of the Paſſeover in the Wilderneſs, Numb. 9. For when God firſt ordains the Paſſeover, there is cutting off mentioned indeed in ſome reference to it; for it is ſaid that whoſoever eateth leavened bread from the firſt day to the ſeventh day, ſhall be cut off, Exod. 12. 15. but it is not expreſly ſaid, he that keeps not the Paſſeover ſhall be cut off, but when God comes to renew the Command and to give the Law for it, for after times, he then ſaith expreſly, that the man that is clean and is not in a journey, and forbeareth to keep the Paſſeover, that ſoul ſhall be cut off, &c. Numb. 9. 13.

2. Whereas it is ſaid that the Paſſeover in Egypt was in three houſes, and ſo alſo the Paſſeover in after times; it is not to be underſtood as if the Paſchal Lamb might be ſo divided as that part of him might be eaten in one houſe, and part of him in another, for that was expreſly againſt the Command, Ye ſhall bring nothing of him forth out of the houſe, Exod. 12. 46. but it meaneth that ſeveral families might joyn together in one ſociety to the eating of one Lamb; and ſo it was in Egypt, and ſo alſo was it in after times.

The firſt command toward this ſolemnity was, the taking up of the Lamb on the tenth day, and ſo keeping him up till the fourteenth, Exod. 12. 3, 6. Which whether it were a perpetual command, or only for that Paſſeover in Egypt is diſputed: Aben Ezra ſaith it is a matter of doubtfulneſs; but Rabbi Solomon plainly determines that it was a command of practiſe only confined to that one time in Egypt; which though it may be true in ſome circumſtances, yet may it be queſtioned whether it held univerſally true or no. It is not to be doubted but every one in after times took up their own Lambs, as they did in Egypt, but it is ſomewhat doubtful whether they did it in the ſame manner. It is exceeding probable, that as the Prieſts took up the Lambs for the dayly ſacrifice four days before they were to be offered, as we have obſerved elſewhere; ſo alſo that they provided Lambs for the People at the Paſſeover, taking them up in the Market four days before, and picking and culling out thoſe that were fit, and agreeable to the command. For whereas the Law was ſo punctual that they ſhould be without blemiſh, and their Traditions had ſummed up ſo large a ſum of blemiſhes, as that they reckon (d) ſeventy three, it could not be, but the Law and their Traditions which they prized above the Law, ſhould be endleſly broken, if every one took up his Lamb in the Market at Jeruſalem at adventure. The Prieſts had brought a Market of Sheep and Oxen againſt ſuch times as theſe into the Temple, (for had it not bin their doing, they muſt not have come there) where they having before-hand picked out in the Market, ſuch Lambs and Bullocks as were fit for Sacrifice or Paſſeover, they ſold them in the Temple at a dearer rate, and ſo ſerved the Peoples turn and their own profit, for which amongſt other of their Huckſteries our Saviour ſaith, they had made the houſe of prayer a den of thieves. (e) Thus he that would, might bring up his Lamb with him, and he that did not might buy a Lamb at Jeruſalem when he came there; and whether of theſe our Saviour did at his laſt Paſſeover, the Goſpel is ſilent; it is moſt probable he did the latter; See Luke 22. 8. John 13.29.

(b) Ezra in Exod. 12.

It is the opinion of ſome of the Jewiſh Nation, (f) that thoſe that took up the Lamb on the tenth day, and kept him till the fourteenth, did tie him all that while at one of their beds feet, that he might be in their eye to view him oft whether he were right and lawful, and to mind them of what they were to go about; but howſoever it was in this, or the other particulars that have been mentioned, it muſt not be omitted to obſerve how the Lamb of God, the true Paſchal, by whoſe bloud is everlaſting deliverance, did anſwer this figure of the Lambs being taken up on the tenth day, when on that very day he rode upon an Aſs into Jeruſalem, and offered himſelf to be taken up for that Sacrifice, which within ſix days after, he was made for ſin and offered up. See John 12.1.12.

(f) Vid. Abarbinel in Exod. 12.

SECT. I.

Their ſearching out for Leaven.

THE next care they were to have in reference to the Paſſeover, was to refrain from the eating and uſe of Leaven at Paſſeover time, and that at the time when the Paſſeover was ſlain it ſhould not be found within their houſes. The Law in this point was exceeding ſtrict. In the firſt month on the fourteenth day of the month at Even, ye ſhall eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the Month at Even. Seven days there ſhall be no leaven found in your houſes, for whoſoever eateth that which is leavened, even that ſoul ſhall be cut off from the Congregation of Iſrael, whether he be a ſtranger or born in the land, Exod. 12.18,19. & 13. 7. and ſo in Lev. 23.6. Numb. 28.17.

Now what analogy there was between this Law and their redeeming out of Egypt, and what relation the one could have to the other, Abarbinel diſputing, concludeth thus, (a) that it lay in this, becauſe it ſignified unto them the haſtineſs of their coming out of Egypt, inſomuch that they had not time to leaven their bread, as Exod. 12 39. and he addeth withal, that in thoſe hot Countries, bread will not keep above a day, unleſs it be leavened: ſo that the command of unleavened bread might read unto them in that reſpect a Lecture of dependance upon Providence, when they were enjoyned to forſake the common and known way of preſerving their bread, and to betake themſelves to a way extraordinary and unſafe, but only that they had the Command of God, and his Injunction for that way, and they muſt learn to live by the word of God.

(a) Abarbinel in Exod. 12. fol. 151.

The Jews to meet with this Command that was ſo exceeding ſtrict, and to make ſure to provide for its obſervance ſoon enough, אור לארבעה עשר בודקין את החמץ לאור הנר (b) Did on the fourteenth day while yet there was ſome light; make ſearch for leaven by the light of a Candle. Thus is the Tradition, in which by the light of the fourteenth day their Gloſſaries tell us that we muſt underſtand (c) the thirteenth day at even, when it began to be duskiſh and candle-lighting. The rubrick of the Paſſeover in the Hebrew and Spaniſh tongues renders it in Hebrew Letters, but in the Spaniſh Language thus, אין אינטראדה די קאטורסי דיל מיז די ניסן En entrada di quatorze del mez de Niſan, (d) At the entrance of the fourteenth day of the Month Niſan, they ſearched for leaven in all the places where they were wont to uſe leaven, (in Barnes, Stables, and ſuch out houſes they needed not to ſearch) even in holes and cranies, and that not by light of Sun and Moon, or Torch, but by the light of a wax candle, הנר של שעוה i.e. קון קנרילה די סירה con candela di cera. And the reaſon why they uſed a Candle rather than any other light, was (e) becauſe it is the fitteſt for ſearching holes and corners, (f) and becauſe the Scripture ſpeaketh of ſearching Jeruſalem with Candles.

about this ſearch; therefore (h) there was not ſo much as Divinity Lectures that evening, leſt they ſhould hinder that work.

(i) Before he began to ſearch he ſaid this ſhort ejaculation, Bleſſed be thou O Lord our God, the King everlaſting, who hath ſanctified us by his commandments, and hath enjoyned us the putting away of leaven. And he might not ſpeak a word betwixt this praying and ſearching, but muſt fall to work, and what leaven he found he muſt put it in ſome box, or hang it up in ſuch a place as that no Mouſe might come at it. And he was to give it up for nul in theſe words כל חמירא דאיכא ברשותי דחמיתיה ודלא חמיתיה ליבטל ולהוי כעפרא דארעא. All the leaven that is within my Poſſeſſion, which I have ſeen, or which I have not ſeen, be it null, be it as the duſt of the earth.

SECT. II.

The paſſages of the forenoon of the Paſſeover day.

WHen the Paſſeover day it ſelf was now come (which the New Teſtament commonly called the firſt day of unleavened bread, from their cuſtom newly mentioned, but the Jewiſh Writers do ordinarily call it ערבי פסח the Paſſeover eve) ſome part of the People made it a Holiday by ceaſing from bodily labour all the day long, and others made it but half holiday, by leaving work at noon; (a) the Talmud relates that in Galilee they left work all the day long from morning till night, but in Judea that they wrought till noon, and then gave over: which may ſeem ſomewhat ſtrange that thoſe further off were ſo obſervant of the Paſſeover, and thoſe nearer hand were ſo much leſs; but the reaſon is this, becauſe in Galilee thoſe that were at home on that day, had nothing elſe to do towards the Paſſeover, but only to meditate upon it, and reſt from labour in honour of it; but thoſe in Judea, it may be they travelled all forenoon to get up to Jeruſalem, or had ſome work to do towards the forwarding of the Paſſeover, or to diſpatch, that they might follow their Paſſeover work the better.

(a) Talm. in Peſach. per. 4. &c.

It is in diſpute in the place cited immediately before, concerning reſting from labour on this day that we have in hand, and it proves a controverſie between the ſchools of Shammai and Hillel, whether they ſhould not alſo reſt from labour the night before: but at laſt the determination comes ſo low, as that it gives liberty to works that were begun on the thirteenth day to be finiſhed on the fourteenth; nay yet lower, that where the cuſtom was to leave off work for all day, there they ſhould leave work; and where it was the Cuſtom to work till Noon, there they ſhould do according to the Cuſtom.

But whatſoever they did in this caſe, ceaſe from their labour in the forenoon, or ceaſe not, one work they muſt not fail to do, and that was to caſt out and put away leaven out of their houſes, this day (as they had ſearched for it the night before) and that it might not be ſeen nor found amongſt them. The Law indeed concerning this work, doth pitch upon the fifteenth day for the doing of it, as if it were ſoon enough to do it on the fourteenth day at Even, Exod. 12. 18, 19. but the Jews do not impertinently obſerve that the expelling of leaven was by the Law to be before the time wherein the eating of it was forbidden: (b) For whereas it is ſaid, on the firſt day you ſhall put leaven out of your houſes, their tradition taught them, that by the firſt is meant the fourteenth day: And a proof for this there is from what is written in the Law. Thou ſhalt not kill the bloud of my ſacrifice with leaven, that is, Thou ſhalt not kill the Paſſeover, whileſt leaven is yet remaining; now the killing of the Paſſeover was on the fourteenth day in the afternoon.

On this fourteenth day therefore, for a good part of the forenoon, they might eat leaven or leavened bread, and (c) might give it to any Bird or Beaſt, or might ſell it to a ſtranger, but the fixing of the certain time is not without ſome debate. (d) Rabbi Meir ſaith, they may eat it all the fifth hour, and were to burn it at the beginning of the ſixth. Rabbi Judah ſaith, they may eat it all the fourth hour, and they were to ſuſpend all the fifth, and at the ſixth hour they were to burn it. Which diſpute Maymonides ſifteth into this reſolution, (e) It was lawful to eat leaven on the fourteenth day till the end of the fourth hour, but they might not eat it the fifth hour, yet they might uſe it; but he that eateth it the ſixth hour, was beaten with the Rebels beating, and he that eat it from the beginning of the ſeventh, was to be whipt.

(c) Peſach per. 2. in Mihu. (d) Ibid per. 1. in Gmara. (e) Maym. ubi ſupr. per. 1.

Twelve a clock or thereabouts, therefore being come, it had been a ſtrange ſight to have ſeen every one of them either firing, or drowning, or ſcattering their leaven into the wind (for any of theſe ways ſerved for the expelling of it, and this command and practice reached over all the Country) and you might have ſeen them do it with this Valediction. (f) All the leaven that is within my poſſeſſion, which I have ſeen, or which I have not ſeen, which I have caſt out, or which I have not caſt out, be it null, be it as the duſt of the earth.

SECT.

SECT. III.

The time of killing the Paſſeover.

ABout the day of celebrating the Paſover, there needeth no diſcourſe to fix it, it is ſo plainly pointed out to be the fourteenth day of the firſt Month that nothing can be plainer, therefore when we ſpeak of the time of killing the Paſover we ſpeak not of the day of the month, which is ſo well known, but of the time of the day which is not ſo clearly pointed out.

The Toſaphta indeed upon the Treatiſe Peſachin, relateth that (a) the Cuthæans ſometimes kept their Paſſover a day before the Iſraelites did, and ſometimes a day after, (where the word Cuthæans might breed ſome diſpute, for in the Talmudicks language, it means ſometimes Samaritans and ſometimes Chriſtians, but we ſhall not inſiſt upon it.) And there have been ſome Chriſtians that have held, that Chriſt and his Diſciples kept their laſt Paſover one day before the Jews kept theirs, conceiting this from that which is ſpoken in *John.*18.28. where it is related that when Chriſt was brought into Pilate's Judgment Hall (which was when he had eaten the Paſover, as all the other Evangeliſts declare abundantly) the Jews durſt not go into Pilates Hall, leſt they ſhould be defiled, but that they might eat the Paſover. To which miſtake I ſhall only give ſome words of Maymony at this preſent for anſwer, for the ground of the miſtake we ſhall have occaſion to look after in the enſuing diſcourſe. (b) It is an affirmative command (ſaith he) to kill the Paſover on the fourteenth day of the Month Niſan in the afternoon, and they kill it not but only of Lambs or Kids, a male of the firſt year, and both men and women are alike liable to this command; and he that breaks this command preſumptuouſly, and paſſeth the fourteenth day and offereth not, if he be not unclean or in a long journey, he is guilty of being cut off; but if he tranſgreſs the command ignorantly, he is quit. They kill not the Paſover but in the Court even as the reſt of the holy offerings, yea even in thoſe times, when high places were permitted, they offered not the Paſover in a private high place, but in the publick, (that is, the Temple) and he that offered it in a private high place was to be whipt. From which words, it being obſerved what penalty lay upon him that paſſed the fourteenth day, and what tie there was to ſlay the Paſchal Lamb in the Court, it will appear extream abſurd to imagine that any Iſraelite ſhould keep his Paſover before the fixed day. What the Cuthæans or Samaritans might do at their Mount Gerizim, it is no matter, but for any Jews to celebrate the Paſover at Jeruſalem, (for no where elſe it might be done) before the proper and fixed time, could not have been without evident danger to them that did it; it being ſo diametrically contrary both to the Law and to their Traditions, and yet we find not Chriſt was ever toucht with the leaſt accuſation about his Paſover as if he kept it on the wrong day.

(b) *Maym. in Corban. Peſach. per.*1.

But to let this paſs, which indeed is too plain to be diſputed (for the Evangeliſt moſt plainly tels us that on the day of unleavened bread when the Paſover muſt be killed, Jeſus ſent Peter and John to prepare his Paſover, Luke 22.7,8.) and now to come to look after the time of the day when the Paſover was killed, we muſt take theſe two maximes with us. (c) 1. That the Paſover was not lawful if it were killed before noon; and the reaſon of this is eaſie to give, namely becauſe the Law doth expreſly appoint, that they ſhould kill it between the two evenings, *Exod.*12.6. And 2. that the daily evening Sacrifice was to be killed before they began to kill the Paſover; and the reaſon of this is alſo readily to be given, namely, becauſe an extraordinary ſervice muſt not prevent one ordinary and conſtant. (d) After they had burnt the incenſe of the evening ſacrifice, and after they had dreſſed the Lamps, then they began to kill the Paſover, and ſo continued till the end of the day. The times they divided thus, (e) they ſlew the daily Sacrifice at the eighth hour and an half, and they offered it up at the ninth hour and an half: but on the Eve of the Paſover, they ſlew it at the ſeventh hour and an half, and offered it up at the eighth hour and an half, whether the day were a common day or the Sabbath: and if the Eve of the Paſover fell on the Eve of the Sabbath, the daily Sacrifice was killed at the ſixth hour and half an hour paſt, and offered it up at the ſeventh hour and half an hour paſt, and the Paſſover after it.

(e) Talm. in Peſach. per. 5.

It was the command both for the Paſover and for the daily Evening Sacrifice, that they ſhould be ſlain and offered בין הערבים between the two Evenings, *Exod.*12.6. & 29. 39. מלה קשה (f) A very hard expreſſion (ſaith Aben Ezra) and he gives as very hard an interpretation of it; for he judgeth the two Evenings to be theſe, the one when the Sun ſets and goes out of ſight, and the other when the day cloſes in and all the light is clean gone, which he ſaith is ordinarily about an hour and three quarters after Sun ſetting; and ſo he will have the daily Sacrifice to be offered up at this time, and though all the Paſovers could not be killed in this ſpace, yet he conceiveth that it is commanded they ſhould be killed between the two Evenings, becauſe moſt of them were ſlain in this ſpace, though all all could not. I ſhall not inſiſt to ſhew the improbability of this Tenet, he himſelf that holds it, is in a manner glad at laſt to betake himſelf to the general and common received Opinion, which was, that the two Evenings were theſe, the firſt from that time of the day that the Sun began to decline from his vertical or noon-tide point toward the Weſt, and the other from his going down and out of ſight. And according to this conſtruction did they go in killing and offering up their Evening Sacrifice, taking up an hour for that buſineſs juſt in the middle of the afternoon (counting at Æquinox time) namely, from half an hour paſt two, to half an hour paſt three, and ſo there were two hours and an half from the Suns beginning to decline, to the time they killed, and two hours and an half from the time they offered it up, till the Sun went down.

Now occaſional Sacrifices did ſometimes cauſe an alteration of the time of the daily, for that being to be ever offered the firſt, as being the fixed and appointed ſervice of the day, that the others might have room to be offered up in due time, that removed out of its place, to ſomewhat earlier in the day, ſometimes an hour, and ſometimes two, as in the Traditions alledged, and eſpecially this was for the ſake of the Paſsover, when Lambs were exceeding many: The common time therefore to begin to kill the Paſsover was, from about half an hour paſt two a clock, and little more, and ſo continued all afternoon: and if the Paſsover lighted on the Eve of the Sabbath, (that is, on the day preceeding the Sabbath) they began an hour ſooner, that they might the better diſpatch their buſineſs by the time that the Sabbath began.

SECT. IV.

The Paſchal Societies.

(a) Maym. in Corban. Peſach. per. 2.

BEfore the Paſchal Lamb was ſlain, they firſt agreed and concluded upon the Company that ſhould eat him: for אין שוחטין את הפסח אלא למנויין, (a) They might not ſlay the Paſsover but for perſons numbred before, or a number agreed on before for his eating. And this caution was not unwarrantably taken up, from that command in Exod. 12.4. Every man according to his eating: Ye ſhall make your count for the Lamb: So that while the Lamb was yet alive, it was to be crtainly concluded, who, and how many would join together for his eating, and he might not be ſlain but for ſocieties ſo agreed and numbred. (b) If any of the ſociety, after the number was agreed on, ſaw occaſion to withdraw from that company, and to go to another, he muſt do it before the Lamb was ſlain, for after he might not. Theſe ſocieties were called every one of them חבורה Σύναξις, or Φρατρία, and the number of the perſons in them was not certain, but ſometime more, ſometime leſs, according to their proportionableneſs of eating, becauſe of the command, Every one according to his eating: were there among the company thoſe that were ſickly and aged, and little eaters, then they might take the more into the company, but if they were healthy and lively, and like to eat more freely, then was the number leſs: He that was to eat the leaſt, was to eat as much of him, as came to the quantity of an olive, and if he could not eat ſo much, they counted not him in the number: And they might number ſo many in a ſociety, as if there were the quantity of an olive for every one to eat, it was enough.

(b) R. Sol. in Exod. 12.

1. Although Women were not directly bound to appear three times a year before the Lord, as the males were, yet were they bound to ſome particular ſervices that attended the three appearances, and ſo that brought them in: but eſpecially to the Paſsover, for to the obſervation of that they were obliged by thoſe expreſs words of the Commandment, The whole aſſembly of the Congregation of Iſrael ſhall kill it ואוד איש ואוד אשה חייבי במצוה זו (c) And men and women were bound to this command alike: Now in forming up theſe ſocieties that were ſeverally to eat the Lambs, they ſuffered not any companies to conſiſt of ſervants and women only, nor of ſervants and children only, leſt there ſhould be ſome lightneſs among them, and not that gravity that became ſo great a ſolemnity: nor to conſiſt of old or ſickly perſons only, leſt they ſhould leave any of them, and ſo tranſgreſs the command, Ye ſhall leave nothing of him till the morning: Nor to conſiſt of Proſelites only, or of children only, becauſe they were unlikely to ſpeak of thoſe memorable things that were to be ſpoken of at the Paſsover. But a ſociety might be only of women, or only of ſervants, but ordinarily they were of whole families, one or more united, Husbands, Wives, Children, Servants, all together. Our Saviours ſociety was himſelf and the twelve, Mat. 26.20. Luk. 22. 14.

SECT.

SECT. V.

The killing of the Paſsover.

THE Paſsovers were ſlain in three companies * : הפסח נשחט שלש כתורת And the ground of this practiſe and tradition they make to be thoſe words of the inſtitution, The whole aſſembly of the Congregation of Iſrael ſhall kill it: where ‖ becauſe, there are three words, Aſſembly, Congregation, and Iſrael, applied to the killing of the Paſsover, they divided the killing of it into three companies according to that number.

* There were not to be leſs than thirty men in every company: yet found they out a ſhift to make fifty men (if there were no more) to make thirty men three times over, for the three companies; and their way was this. Thirty of the fifty went into the Court, (for there only might the Paſsover be killed) and when they had killed their Lambs, ten of them went out, and ten of thoſe, that ſtood without, came in and killed theirs, and then ten others went out, and the other ten that ſtood without came in and killed theirs, and ſo there were thirty in the Court continually, while the Lambs were killing.

But this was only a proviſion for a pinch; namely, if ſuch an exigent ſhould occur, as that there ſhould be but fifty Lambs preſented, or at leaſt but fifty perſons preſent, (for ordinarily every one of the numbred Paſchal ſocieties that have been ſpoken of, ſent their Lamb by one of their company only, and under fifty there was no Paſsover killing) but commonly every one of theſe three companies we are ſpeaking of, were as many as ever the Court could hold.

The firſt company came in, till the Court was filled, and then the doors were locked, and they fell to killing the Lambs, and while they were about this work, the Levites ſang, and the trumpets ſounded: It is a tradition, * ſaith the Jeruſalem Talmud, The dayly ſacrifice which hath a drink offering, they blew the trumpets at the time of the drink offering: but at the Paſsover which hath no drink offering, they blew the trumpets at the killing of it. Which the Gloſs upon the Babylon Talmud doth utter more punctually, ‖ At the killing of the Paſsover there were ſeven and twenty ſoundings with the trumpets: for the Paſsover was killed in three companies one after another, &c.

Now the ſong that was ſung at this time while they were killing the Paſsovers, was called the Hallel הלל ſo ſaith the ſame Gloſs in the ſame place. Every company ſaid over the Hallel three times: for their Paſchals were many, and they were bound to the ſaying over of the Hallel at the ſlaying of them. And Maymony more largely. * All the time that they were killing and offering the Levites ſaid over the Hallel: if they had finiſhed the Hallel, and the company had not yet done, they ſaid it over again: And if they had finiſhed ſaying it over again, and the company had not yet done neither, they ſet to it a third time. And both theſe ſpeak this, from the Miſhneh in the treatiſe Peſachin where it is ſaid, ‖ They ſaid over the Hallel, and when they had finiſhed they ſaid it over a ſecond time, and when they had done that, they ſaid it over a third time.

The Jews do make exceeding frequent mention in their writings of the Hallel or the Hymne; (for ſo we may tranſlate it from *Matth.*26.30.) And they diſtinguiſh it into the common or leſſer Hallel, and the greater: The leſſer Hallel they alſo call the Egyptian Hallel, becauſe it was ſung more eſpecially in remembrance of their delivery out of Egypt: and it was the 113, & 114, & 115, & 116, & 117, & 118, Pſalms. Concerning the choice and uſe of which it may not be amiſs to take up two or three of their traditions.

1. The Jeruſalem Talmud in the Treatiſe Peſachin hath this relation. * R. Jacob Bar Aha in the name of Rabbi Joſa ſaith, Strength was given to Moſes his voice, and his voice went through all Egypt forty days journey: And what ſaid he? One company from ſuch a place to ſuch a place, and another company from ſuch a place, to ſuch a place. And wonder not at it: for if of duſt whoſe nature is not to go, it be ſaid, it ſhall become duſt through all the land of Egypt, (Exod. 9. 9.) much more might a voice go abroad, whoſe nature is to go. Rabbi Levi ſaid, As ſtrength was given to Moſes his voice, ſo ſtrength was given to Pharaohs voice; and his voice went throughout all Egypt forty days journey. And what ſaid he? Ariſe, get ye out from among my people: For, as for the time paſt ye have been the ſervants of Pharaoh, but from henceforth ye muſt be the ſervants of the Lord. From that hour they ſaid, Praiſe ye the Lord, praiſe him ye ſervants of the Lord, Pſalm 113. and now no more the ſervants of Pharaoh.

2. Maymony in his Treatiſe of Megillah, and Chanuchah, or of the Feaſt of Purim and of Dedication, ſaith * The cuſtom of ſaying over the Hallel in the days of the former wiſemen, was thus, The chief among them that was to read the Hallel after he had ſaid a prayer, began thus, Hallelujah; and all the people anſwered Hallelujah. He goes on and ſays, Praiſe ye ye the ſervants of the Lord; and all the people anſwered Hallelujah. He proceeds and ſays, Praiſe the Name of the Lord; and all the people anſwered Hallelujah. He ſays further, Bleſſed be the Name of the Lord from this time forth, even for evermore; and all the people anſwered Hallelujah. And ſo at every paſſage, till they anſwered Hallelujah, an hundred and three and twenty times over, and of that number were the years of Aaron.

Now when he that read it, came to the beginning of any Pſalm, as when he read, When Iſrael came out of Egypt, the people repeated and ſaid, When Iſrael came out of Egypt; but when he ſaid, And the Houſe of Jacob from a ſtrange people, then the people anſwered Hallelujah: and ſo forward, till he came to, I love the Lord becauſe he hath heard my voice, and there the people repeated, I love the Lord becauſe he hath heard my voice, And ſo when he ſaid, Praiſe the Lord all ye Nations, they repeated, Praiſe the Lord all ye Nations: And when he came to, Save now Lord I beſeech thee, the people repeated, Save now Lord I beſeech thee; though it were not the beginning of a Pſalm: And when he ſaid, I beſeech thee now ſend proſperity, they rehearſed and ſaid, I beſeech thee now ſend proſperity. And when he ſaid, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the Name of the Lord, all the people anſwered, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the Name of the Lord.

3. This ſaying over of the Hallel, * is acknowledged by the Jews to be an Inſtitution of the Scribes; and the reaſon of the picking out of theſe Pſalms for that purpoſe, was ‖ because of their beginning or ending with Hallelujah; and partly becauſe they contain, not only ſo high and eminent memorials of Gods goodneſs and deliverance unto Iſrael; as is intimated by that paſſage alledged in the Jeruſalemy; From that time they ſaid, Praiſe ye the Lord, ye ſervants of the Lord, and no more of Pharaoh; but alſo ſeveral other things of high and important matter and conſideration; for the * Hallel, ſay they, recordeth five things: the coming out of Egypt, the dividing of the Sea, the giving of the Law, the Reſurrection of the dead, and the lot of Meſſias.

‖ Vid. Kimc. in 1 Chron. 16.

* Tal. in Pſ. fol. 118.

4. ‖ This Hallel was ſaid over eighteen days in the year and one night; namely, at the killing of the Paſſover, at the Feaſt of Pentecoſt, on the eight days of the Feaſt of Tabernacles, and on the eight days of the Feaſt of Dedication, and on the Paſſover night. With the manner of its ſaying over, the people ſtill anſwering Hallelujah: compare the redoubled Hallelujahs, in Rev. 19. 1, 3, 4. 6.

‖ Maym. ubi ſup. & Talm. utramque in Succab. per. 5.

Beſides this Hallel, which they called the Egyptian Hallel, there is frequent mention of the great Hallel הלל גדולה as the Treatiſe Taanith telleth a ſtory * that they appointed a Faſt at Led (or Lydda, Act. 9. 35. and this Faſt was for rain, which they wanted exceedingly) And rain came down for them before midday. Rabbi Tarphon ſaith to them, Go eat, and drink, and keep holiday: They went and eat, and drank, and kept holiday, and came at Even, and ſaid over the great Hallel: and we ſhall obſerve anon, that at the eating of the Paſſover, as they uſed conſtantly to ſay over the Hallel commonly ſo called, ſo did they ſometimes add the great Hallel to it; and when we come to ſpeak of the time when this was rehearſed, we will then obſerve what this great Hallel was.

So that (now to return where we were again) the firſt company being come into the Court, and having filled it, and the doors locked upon them, and they falling to kill the Paſſovers, this Hallel or theſe Pſalms were begun to be ſung, the people anſwering as hath been related. And when they had ſung them over once, and the work not yet done, they ſet to them again, and a third time, and by that time they had gone over the third time, the work was commonly done, and they began not again. And therefore thoſe words which are very uſual with thoſe Jews which treat upon this ſubject, אם שנו שלשו אף על פי שלא שלשו מימיהם are to be conſtrued, that when they had ſung it over a ſecond time, they began a third, although they went not through a third time in all their days: for before they had gone through, the work was done, and then they had done alſo.

* The firſt company being thus diſpatched, went out of the Court with their ſlain and flead Paſſovers (how they flead them, was obſerved erewhile) and they ſtood in the mountain of the Houſe: And now there comes in the ſecond company, as many as the Court would hold, and while they are killing, ſprinkling the blood, and burning the fat, the Hallel is begun again, and ſung even as it was before, and when that company had done they went out, and the third came in, and they did as the others before, till all was finiſhed.

* Peſach. per. 5. Sect. 3.

They did not only ſlay the Paſſovers whilſt they ſtood thus in the Court, but the blood was alſo ſprinkled by the Prieſts, they ſtanding in rows from the ſlaughter place to the Altar, conveying the blood from hand to hand, and ſo they crowded not, nor troubled not one another, which they would have done had they run ſingly from every ſlain Lamb to bring the blood to the Altar. The blood brought thither in ſuch handing rows was poured at the foundation of the Altar. The owners flead their Lambs, the moſt of them hanging him upon a ſtaff on their ſhoulders, and he hanging between them, and they helping helping one another: They took out his entrails, cleanſed away his ordure, ſeparated his inwards, put them in a diſh, ſalted them, and laid them on the fire on the Altar: and when the three companies were ſo diſpatched, the Prieſts (as there was no ſmall need) did waſh the Court.

If the Paſsover killing did fall upon the Sabbath, yet did they not abate of any of this work, no not of waſhing the Court; for they had a traditional warrant which bare them out שאין אסור שבות במקדש which was, that there was no prohibition concerning reſting in the Sanctuary: and that which was prohibited elſewhere, and obliged others, about reſting from work upon the Sabbath, did not oblige the Prieſts at the Temple: and to this our Saviour ſpeaketh, Matth. 12. 5. On the Sabbath days the Prieſts in the Temple prophane the Sabbath and are blameleſs. Now although they killed, and fleaed, and opened the Paſsovers on the Sabbath, yet did they not carry them home to their lodgings at Jeruſalem till the Sabbath was out: But when the firſt company had diſpatched in the Court, they went and ſtood in the mountain of the Houſe, and the ſecond being diſpatched, went and ſtood in the chel, and the third continued in the Court till the Sabbath ended: and when it was done, they went away with their Lambs to their ſeveral companies. And the reaſon of this was, becauſe the killing and offering of the Paſsover was by the expreſs commandment of the Law, bound to its time, which they might not tranſgreſs, but muſt do it, though it were on the Sabbath, but the taking of the Lamb home, was not ſo bound but that it might very well be delayed till the Sabbath was ended.

CHAP. XIII.

Their manner of eating the Paſsover.

IT is indeed beyond our line and compaſs to follow the people with their ſlain Paſchals from the Temple to their own homes, to ſee what they do with them there, for the virge of the Temple confineth our diſcourſe: yet becauſe the eating of theſe Lambs was ſo high and holy a rite, and ſince the ſtory of our Saviours laſt Paſsover hath turned the eyes of all men to look at the cuſtom and demeanour uſed in this ſolemnity, the Reader I doubt not will be facile to excuſe ſuch a digreſſion, as ſhall relate the particulars of this great buſineſs, which were many, and which we will take up one by one.

1. To omit their curioſities in roaſting the Paſchal Lamb, (which they commonly did upon a ſpit or ſtaff of Pomegranate tree, running him in with it at the mouth and out behind) the firſt obſervable circumſtance towards the eating of him, we may take up in this tradition. * Talm. in Peſach. per. 7.

ערבי פסחין סמוך למנחה לא יאכל אדם עד שתחשך * On the evening of the Paſsover a man may not eat, from near the Minchah, till it be dark. * Ib. per. 10.

In which they inform us of two things, firſt, that they went not about the Paſsover meal till it was night; and the reaſon of this cuſtom is apparently grounded in the Law, becauſe that commanded, they ſhall eat the fleſh in that night, Exod. 12. And accordingly are theſe words of the Evangeliſts in the relation of our Saviours Paſsover to be underſtood, when the Even was come, he ſat down with the twelve. Secondly, That they faſted ſome ſpace before. Near the time of the Minchah (* ſay the Gloſſaries upon that Tradition) meaneth, a little before the Evening ſacrifice; and from that time they might eat nothing, that they might eat the unleavened bread which was commanded, with appetite, for the honour of the command. * R. Alphes. & R. Sol. & R. Sam. in loc.

II. They eat not the Paſsover but ſitting, עני שבישר אל לא יאכל עד שיסב * No not the pooreſt in Iſrael might eat it till he was ſet down. ‖ R. Simeon (in the Jeruſalem Gemara) in the name of R. Joſhua the ſon of Levi ſaith, that olive-quantity that ſuffiseth to diſcharge a man that he hath eaten the Paſsover, he muſt eat it ſitting down, מיסב and ſo it is ſaid Jeſus ſat down with the twelve. Now this ſitting at their Paſsover eating, was not after the manner of our ſitting at the Table, nor after the manner of their ordinary ſitting at other times, but a ſpecial poſture by it ſelf. And ſo they themſelves uſed to obſerve and to ſpeak of it as they ſat. * How different (ſaid they) is this night from all other nights, for all other nights we eat בין יושבין בין מסובין either ſitting or leaning, but this night we all ſit leaning: where the two words יושבין & מסובין which both ſignifie ſitting at meat, are uſed with ſo much diverſity, as that they are oppoſed one to another. And they are ſet in the like oppoſition in the Treatiſe Beracoth in this paſſage ‖ Did they ſit down to meat? Every one gave thanks for himſelf, היסבו Did they ſit leaning? Then one gave thanks for them all. Rabbi Nathan conceives that the difference between the two words conſiſteth in one of theſe two things; * that היסבו meaneth that they ſat cloſe round * Talm. ubi ſup. ‖ Gemar. Jeruſ. in Peſac. in loc. * Maym. in Nofabh Hagg. ‖ Beracoth. per. 6 * Aruch in סב round about their meat, but ישבו importeth as if every one of them had ſitten ſingle. Or this other interpretation, ſaith he, may be given that they ſat down for ſome other buſineſs, (and not purpoſely to eat) and meat was ſet before them, then every one gave thanks for himſelf. But היסבו means that they ſat down purpoſely to eat and not for other buſineſs, and then one gave thanks for them all. But it appeareth by Maymony, and by other Talmudiſts, that the difference lay in the manner of ſitting, and not in the occaſion of ſitting down. His words are theſe, * The kind of ſitting called היסבה Heſibbah, is not required of a woman; but if ſhe be a woman of faſhion then it is required of her. And this kind of ſitting is required of a Son (at the Paſover) before his Father, and of a Servant before his Maſter; but a Scholar before his Teacher muſt not thus ſit down unleſs his Teacher give him leave: And leaning upon the right ſide is not this poſture, nor leaning on the neck, nor on the face. But it was leaning on the left ſide, as he intimateth in another place, when he ſaith he muſt drink off his cups of wine leaning upon his left ſide. And the Talmudick Gloſs defines that kind of leaning, briefly thus, במטה ועל השולחן It was upon the bed and upon the Table.

* Maym. in Hhamets umatſ. per. 7.

Their ſitting at meat was commonly upon beds or couches made for that purpoſe, with the Table before them: Now at other meals they either ſat as we do with their bodies erect, or when they would enlarge themſelves to more freedom of feaſting and refreſhing, they ſat upon the beds and leaned upon the Table on their left elbow, and this or the other poſture they uſed indifferently at other times as they were diſpoſed. But on the Paſover night they thought they were obliged to uſe this leaning poſture, and you may take their reaſon for it in ſome of their own words. * They uſed this היסבה leaning poſture as free men do, in memorial of their freedom. And || R. Levi ſaid, becauſe it is the manner of ſervants to eat ſtanding, therefore now they eat מסובין ſitting and leaning to ſhew that they were got out of ſervitude into freedom. And again, * In every generation a man is bound to behave himſelf at the Paſover, as if he himſelf had been delivered out of the bondage of Egypt, &c. Therefore at meat that night a man is bound to eat, and to drink, and to ſit in a poſture of freedom.

Upon this principle and conceit of freedom, they uſed this manner of diſcumbency at their meat frequently at other times, but indiſpenſably this night, ſo far different from the poſture injoined and practiſed at the firſt Paſover in Egypt, when they eat it with their loins girded, their ſhoes on their feet, their ſtaves in their hands, and in haſte, Exod. 12. 11. And as the thought of their freedom diſpoſed them to this leaning, repoſed, ſecure compoſure of their elbow upon the Table, and their head leaning on the hand, ſo to emblem out the matter the more highly, they laid their legs under them, ſitting upon them, and their feet lying out behind, as Luke 7.38. removing and acquitting their legs and feet as far as poſſible from the leaſt ſhew of ſtanding to attend, or readineſs to go upon any ones imployment, which might carry the leaſt colour of ſervitude, or contrariety to their freedom with it. Now according to this manner of ſitting and leaning, are we to conſtrue that paſſage of the Evangeliſt, about the beloved Diſciple's *leaning in the boſom of Jeſus, Joh.*13.23. and on the breaſt of Jeſus, Joh. 13. 28. & 21. 20. for ſo the words are clearly differenced, Ἀνακείμενος ἐν κόλπῳ, & Ἐπιπεσών, or Ἀναπεσὼν ὀπὶ τὸ στῆθος· which ſome tranſlations not having obſerved, or at leaſt not expreſſed, they have intricated the reader in ſuch groſs conceptions about this matter [* quaſi in ipſius ſinu contra omne decorum ſteterent, ut ab imperitis pingi accubitus ille conſuevit] as that ſome have thought and ſome have pictured John repoſing himſelf, or lolling on the breaſt of Jeſus, contrary to all reaſon and decency. Whereas the manner of their ſitting together was only thus; Jeſus leaning upon the Table on his left elbow, and ſo turning his face and breaſt away from the Table on one ſide; John ſat in the ſame poſture next before him, with his back towards Jeſus breaſt or boſom; not ſo near as that Johns back and Jeſus breaſt did join together and touch one another; but at ſuch a diſtance as that there was ſpace for Jeſus to uſe his right hand upon the Table to reach his meat at his pleaſure, and ſo for all the reſt as they ſat in the like manner. For it is but a ſtrange fancy that ſome have ſatisfied themſelves withal about this matter, conceiving either that they lay along upon the beds before the Table one tumbling upon the breaſt or before the breaſt of another; or if they ſat leaning on the Table, that they ſat ſo cloſe, as that ones back joyned to anothers boſom, which did utterly deprive them of the uſe of their hands to feed themſelves. But their ſitting was ſo, as that indeed they ſat the back of one to the breaſt of another, but with ſuch diſtance between, that the right hand of every one of them had liberty to come and go betwixt himſelf and his fellow to reach his meat as he had occaſion. In ſuch a manner and diſtance did the beloved Diſciple lean before our Saviour, and yet is ſaid very properly to lean in his boſom, becauſe he leaned before his breaſt, ſo as that whenſoever Chriſt put up his arm he was in a manner within his embrace. But when Peter beckned to him to enquire who it was that ſhould be the Traitour, then Ἀνέπεσεν ὀπὶ τὸ στῆθος he leaned back ſo far, as that his back or ſhoulders reſted upon Jeſus breaſt, and he lay in a ſitting poſture to whiſper with him.

* Vid. Beza in Joh. 21.

III. They

III. They being thus ſet, the firſt thing towards this Paſover ſupper that they went about, was, that every one drank off a cup of Wine. So do their own Directories and Rituals about this matter inform us. The order of the performing of the things commanded for the fifteenth night (* ſaith Maymony) was thus, they firſt mingled a cup for every one of them, and one gave thanks and they drank it off. And herein he doth follow the Talmud Text, which in the Treatiſe of the Paſover in the place cited in the Margin before, relateth the very ſame thing in the very ſame order. * Maym. ubi ſupr. per.8.

Among the ſeveral viands, or victuals, or concomitants, or what you will call them, which accompanied the Paſchal Lamb at its eating, of which we ſhall ſpeak in their courſe, there were two which they held to be moſt eminent, and moſt honourable; and thoſe were Bread and Wine: And amongſt other expreſſions of reſpect and honour that they ſhewed to theſe, this was not a ſmall one, that howſoever they diſpoſed of their poſture of ſitting all the reſt of the meal, they might not fail to betake themſelves to the leaning compoſure (already deſcribed, the emblem of their liberty) when they eat their unleavened Bread and drank their Wine. And ſo my Author laſt cited holdeth out in this Tradition אימתי צריכין הסיבה כשעת אכילת כזית מצה ובשתי ירת ד כוסות * When is it neceſſary that they uſe the leaning poſture? Even at that time that they are eating an Olive-quantity of unleavened Bread and drinking their four cups of Wine; and as for the time of eating or drinking of any thing elſe all the meal, if they ſat leaning it was the more commendable, but if they did not it was not ſo very material. Which matter the Gemariſts and Gloſſaries do clear and diſtinguiſh upon, thus; || The unleavened bread requires the leaning poſture, but the bitter herbs require it not: Of the wine it is ſaid that it doth require the leaning poſture, and it is ſaid that it doth not require it, אמרי לה חרי כסי קמאי צריך הסיבה חרי כסי בחרא לא צריך For they ſay of it, that the two former cups require this leaning compoſure, but the two latter require it not. * Id. ibid p.r.7. || Gloſs. ibid.

The eating of unleavened bread at this time, they were enjoyned by a ſpecial and expreſs command, Exod. 12.18. but as for the uſe of Wine, they took it upon this general ground, * becauſe a man muſt chear up his wife and children to make them rejoyce at the Feſtival. And what do they chear them up withal? With Wine. And they were ſo punctual and exact in this matter that || the pooreſt man in Iſrael was bound to drink off four cups of Wine this night, yea though he lived of the alms basket. † And if he had no other way to compaſs ſo much Wine, or if the Almoners gave him not enough for four cups, he muſt ſell or pawn his coat, or hire out himſelf for four cups of Wine. The Gemariſts do debate the matter, why four cups of Wine rather than any other number, and the reſult is held out by the Jeruſalem Talmud to this purpoſe; * Whence is the ground for four cups? Rabbi Jochanan in the name of Rabbi Benajah ſaith, in parallel to the four words that are uſed about Iſraels redemption, והוצאתי והצלתי ונאלתי ולקחתי bringing out, delivering, redeeming, and taking. R. Joſhua the ſon of Levi ſaith, in parallel to the four cups of Pharaoh, in theſe Texts, Pharaohs cup was in my hand, and I ſqueezed them into Pharaohs cup. And I gave the cup into Pharaohs hand, and thou ſhalt give Pharaohs cup into his hand. R. Levi ſaith, in parallel to the four Monarchies, Dan. 7. And our Rabbins ſay, in parallel to the four cups of vengeance that the holy bleſſed God will make the Nations of the World drink off, (for which there are theſe four Texts) Thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael to me, take the Wine cup of this fury at mine hand, Jer.25.15. Babel is a golden cup in the hand of the Lord, Jer.51.7. For in the hand of the Lord there is a cup, Pſal. 75.8. And this is the portion of their cup, Pſal. 11.6. And anſwerably the Lord will make Iſrael drink four cups of conſolation (in theſe four Texts) The Lord is the portion of my cup, Pſal.16. 5. My cup runneth over, Pſal.23.5. I will take the cup of ſalvation, Pſal. 116.13. which was two. * Talm. Jer. ubi ſupr. || Peſach.per.10. † R. Sam. ib. * Talm. Jer. ubi ante.

In theſe four cups of Wine that they were to drink, they were curious about the meaſure and about the mixture, * the proportion of Wine in every cup might not be leſs than רובע רביעות the fourth part of a quarter of an hin, beſides what water was mingled with it, for if they did not drink it ſo mingled, they held they miſſed of the right performance of that ſervice, ארבע כוסות האלו צריך למזוג Theſe four cups, ſaith the Author cited in the margin, muſt needs be mingled. And the Talmudick Rubrick for this night ſervice, whenſoever it ſpeaketh of any of theſe cups of Wine brought to him that officiated in the Haggadah, it uſeth this expreſſion מזגין לו || They mingled it for him. And it is received among them as a current Maxim, what was delivered by Rabh in the Gemara, שתאן חו ידי יין יצא ידי חובות לא יצא That whoſoever drank theſe four cups of pure Wine, he indeed had done his duty about drinking Wine, but he had not done his duty about ſetting forth their freedom: for this mingling of their Wine, was not ſo much in reference to ſobriety, as it was to make the Wine the more delightſom. And that is the reaſon that Maymony giveth when he ſaith the Wine muſt needs be mingled, namely, that the drinking of it may be the more delightſom, and all according to the quality of the Wine, and the mind of the drinker. Therefore they accounted it ſomewhat towards the expreſſion of their freedom which they ſo much affected to expreſs at this time, to drink their Wine mingled, which heightned the drinking of it to the more delight. * Maym. in Hhamets umatſ. per.7. & Gloſſ. ibid. || Peſachin. ubi ſupr.

The firſt cup of theſe four being brought to them as they were now ſet, one of the Company, (the Maſter of the family, if there were but one family in the ſociety: or if there were more, ſome fit man choſen out for that purpoſe, whom they called קורא הגדה the rehearſer of the office of the Paſſover) gave thanks over the Wine, and then they drank it off. The thankſgiving was in reference to the Wine, and in reference to the Day. The Schools of Hillel and Shammai differ about the precedency of theſe two, or whether of them ſhould firſt take place; but whether ſoever went firſt, (for it is not worth labour to trace the diſpute) the tenour of his thankſgiving was to this purpoſe; over the Wine he ſaid * Bleſſed be thou O Lord who haſt created the fruit of the Vine: and as concerning the day he uſed ſuch words as theſe, || Bleſſed be thou for this good day, and for this holy convocation, which thou haſt given us for joy and rejoycing: Bleſſed be thou O Lord, who haſt ſanctified Iſrael and the times.

* Talm. in Beracoth. per.6.

IV. * Then did they every one of them waſh their hands: over which action, the Officiator (for ſo let us call him) uttered this ejaculation, Bleſſed be thou O Lord our God who hath ſanctified us with his commandments, and hath commanded us concerning the waſhing of our hands. They uſed on this night to waſh their hands twice, whereas at other Suppers they waſhed but once, and this different and extraordinary ſo doing, it was their courſe to take notice of, and to ſpeak of as they were at ſupper, uſing this paſſage amongſt others that they uttered at that time, How different is this night from all other nights! for all other nights we waſh but once, but this night we waſh twice. They uſe the word טבל ילין to expreſs the waſhing of their hands by, which betokeneth dipping, for in that way they waſhed them at this time. The Treatiſe || Jadajim and the Toſaphta there do intimate unto us that they had a twofold way of waſhing their hands; Netilah and Tebhilah, either by pouring water upon them, or by putting them into the water; and they difference theſe two waſhings by theſe circumſtances (beſides the different application of the water) that he that put his hands into the water needed not to dry them, but he that poured water on them needed: He that had water poured on them, muſt lift up his hands, yet ſo as the water might not run above his wriſt, nor return upon his hands for making them unclean (but there drop off; πυσμῇ νίψαι, Mark 7.3.) But he that puts his hands into water needed not to lift them up, &c. He that puts his hands into the water is ſaid to טבל את ידיו dip his hands, and he that had water poured upon them was ſaid to be נוטל את ידיו to waſh his hands, and yet both of theſe kinds of waſhing were indifferently called נטילת ידים Netilath Jadajim, waſhing of the hands.

|| Talm. in Jadajim per.2. Toſapht. ibid.

V. They having waſhed, the table was then furniſhed with what proviſion they held requiſite for that ſupper, and that was of ſeveral ſorts: For beſides the Paſſover Lamb, and unleavened Bread, and bitter Herbs, for the uſe of which they had an expreſs command, they had at the leaſt two diſhes beſides, and ſometimes three, which they had taken up the uſe of, upon tradition. Let us view all their diſhes particularly.

1. There were two or three cakes of unleavened bread * (for the number is under ſome diſpute,) and the eating of this bread, they held ſo undiſpenſable a command that infants and ſick perſons were to be brought to it: and if they were not able to eat it dry, they had it ſopt and macerated in ſome liquid thing, that ſo they might eat of it at leaſt to the quantity of an Olive. And as for perſons of health and ſtrength, they were to eat very little meat of all day, that they might eat unleavened bread with hungring and appetite at night: and many of them would faſt all day for that purpoſe. Eſpecially they might not eat unleavened bread of all day, becauſe there ſhould be a diſtinct appetitive eating of it at the Paſſover, and he that eat any unleavened Bread that day before that time he was beaten with the Rebels ſtripes.

* Vid. Gloſs. ad Maym. ubi ante.

2. The herbs they uſed were five kinds חורת Lettice, עולשין Endive, תמכא Succory, חרהבינה Beets, מרור Horehound, or ſome ſuch herbs as theſe, ſome of them ſallet herbs, and ſome bitter, and theſe either green or dried, but neither boiled nor pickled. And the general and the proper reaſon that is given for the uſe of this rite of eating bitter herbs is, * that they might hereby remember the bitter affliction that they underwent in Egypt. But the fancy of a Spaniſh Jew cited by Aben Ezra, is ſomewhat ſingular in this point, which let me produce in his words.

* R. Sol. in Exod. 12.

* Ab. Ezr. in Exod. 12. * One of the wiſe men of Spain (ſaith he) ſaith, it is well known that moiſture is predominant in the land of Egypt, becauſe of the waters of the river, and becauſe they have no rains there, therefore the air is continually moiſt. Hereupon it was their cuſtom at all their Tables to eat divers kinds of bitter herbs and muſtard. And though an Egyptian had but one bit of meat, yet had he ever bitter herbs at his Table to dip his meat in, which was a help for their air. But we will adhere to the judgment of our ancients of bleſſed memory, which have expounded to us that the bitter herbs were a memorial of that paſſage, They made their lives bitter, Exod. 1.

3. The body of the Paſchal Lamb was alſo ſet upon the Table, roſted whole and ſo brought up, * the Legs and Inwards, as Heart, Liver, &c. held by ſome to have been put and roſted within him, but by others to have been faſtned by ſome means upon his body, and and ſo roſted on the outſide of him: Now beſides theſe three diſhes, of Bread, Fleſh, and Sallet, ſo poſitively appointed by the Law.

4. They uſed to eat ſome other meat before they began to eat of the Paſchal. And the reaſon of this was, becauſe they would eat of that to ſatiety. * For it was held a choice command that a man ſhould eat the fleſh of the Paſsover with an eating to ſatiety; therefore if he had offered his fourteenth days peace offerings, then he eat of them firſt, and afterward he eat of the fleſh of the Paſsover that he might ſatiate himſelf with it. Yet if he eat no more than what amounted to the quantity of an Olive, he diſcharged the obligation of his duty. Theſe fourteenth days peace offerings were ſo called, to diſtinguiſh them from the peace offerings of his Hagigah and rejoycing at the feaſt: for thoſe were offerings to which he was obliged of duty, and were to be offered after the eating of the Paſsover moſt ordinarily; but theſe were ſome thanks offerings, or vows, or free will offerings, which being reſerved to be offered at their coming up to the Feſtival, they commonly did ſo offer them as that when the Altar and Prieſts had had their parts, they had the other ready for this occaſion, to begin the meal on the Paſsover night. And ſo here was one diſh more than we find appointed for this time by the Law. Now the Talmudicks ſpeak of two more, which if they were uſed in the time when the Temple ſtood, may well be ſuppoſed to have been to ſupply the want of peace offerings in ſuch companies as had not offered any, nor had any ready for this occaſion. And they call them שני חבשולין the two boiled meats. The Miſhuch in that Chapter of Peſachin that hath been cited ſo oft, delivering the Rubrick of the Paſsover, ſaith, they ſet before him unleavened Bread, and bitter Herbs, and charoſeth, and the two boiled meats, making no difference of time between theſe and the other particulars named with them, which undoubtedly were in thoſe times of which we ſpeak. The Gemara thereupon hath theſe words. It is a command to ſet before him unleavened Bread, and the bitter Herbs, and the two boiled meats. And thoſe two boiled meats, what are they? Rab. Hona ſaith, Broth and Rice. Ezekiah ſaith, Fiſh and Eggs. Rab. Joſeph ſaith, two ſorts of fleſh were required, one in the memorial of the Paſsover, and the other in memorial of the Hagigah. And with this laſt doth Maymony concur, for he uſeth the very ſame words, but he uſeth alſo the term בזמן הזה At this time they ſet upon the Table two ſorts of fleſh, &c. as making it queſtionable whether this cuſtom were in uſe when the Temple ſtood, or taken up afterward. I ſhall not be ſollicitous to diſpute the caſe; it ſeemeth for ought I yet ſee in the Talmuds, or their Schoolmen, that it was in the Temple times, and that the Author cited doth not (by the Phraſe he hath uſed) ſo much intimate that the cuſtom was taken up after the Temple was fallen, as he doth, that after the Temple was fallen they were glad to take up with theſe two diſhes only. For whileſt that ſtood, peace offerings were in uſe, and ſerved for that occaſion on the Paſsover night, and theſe two boiled meats were only in requeſt where no peace offerings were to be had, which was but rare; but after the Temple fell there were no peace offerings to be had at all, and ſo they were conſtrained to take up only with theſe two diſhes. Let the Reader ſcan his meaning from his own words. * They ſet before him (the Officiator) bitter Herbs and unleavened Bread, and Charoſeth, and the body of the Lamb, and the fleſh of the fourteenth days Hagigah. But at this time they ſet upon the Table two ſorts of fleſh, one in memorial of the Paſsover and the other in memorial of the Hagigah. And whether way ſoever he turneth the ſcales it is not much material.

* Maym. in Corban Peſach. per. 8.

* Id. in Hhamets, &c. per. 8

5. They had alſo a diſh of thick ſawce which they called חרוסת Charoſeth, ‖ made of ſweet and bitter things grown and pounded and mingled together, † as Dates, Figs, Raiſins, Vinegar, &c. * And this was a memorial to them of the clay in which their Fathers laboured in the Land of Egypt. They uſed Charoſeth (ſaith the Talmud) although it were not commanded. Rabbi Eliezer from Rabbi Zadok ſaith, it is a command. A command! for what? Rabbi Johanan ſaith, it is a memorial of the clay, therefore they make it of all kinds of ſweet and bitter things, with vinegar, like clay in which there is a mixture of every thing. The diſh in which our Saviour dipped the ſop which he gave to Judas is held by exceeding many to have been this diſh of the thick ſawce Charoſeth; which might be very well belived, if it might be believed that that ſupper was the Paſsover ſupper, which hath been much aſſerted, but never yet proved.

† Maym. Corban. Peſach. per. 8.

VI. The Table thus furniſhed, * the Officiator takes ſome of the ſallet of the Herbs and after he hath bleſſed God for the creating the fruit of the ground, he dips it in ſomething (but whether in the thick ſawce Charoſeth, or in Wine, or in Vinegar, is diſputed, and ſo we will leave it in diſpute) and he eateth the quantity of an Olive at the leaſt of them, and ſo do all the reſt of the company the like. ‖ Now this dipping and eating of Herbs was not under the notion of eating bitter Herbs, which the Law enjoyned, but is was ſome other of the Herbs, as Lettice, Endive, or the like, and it was for this and meerly, that the children might begin to wonder at this ſtrange beginning of a meal, and might be incited to enquire about the matter. And to put them on to this the more, the company had no ſooner eaten of this bit of the ſallet, but preſently the diſhes were all removed from before the Officiator, and a ſecond Cup of Wine was filled and brought unto him. (14) And here the Children began to enquire about the matter; and if he had no Children, the Wife enquired; and if there was no Wife, the company enquired one of another. And if none enquired, yet he unasked began thus, How different is this night from all other nights! For on all other nights we eat leavened or unleavened bread indifferently, but on this night unleavened bread only. On all other nights we eat any herbs whatſoever, but this night bitter herbs: On all other nights we eat fleſh either roaſted, or ſtewed, or boiled, but on this night we eat fleſh only roaſted. On all other nights we waſh but once, but on this night we waſh twice. On all other nights we eat either ſitting or leaning indifferently, on this night we all ſit leaning. And according to the capacity of the Child, he would addreſs his ſpeech to him; if he were very young and ſlender of underſtanding, he would tell him, Child, we were all ſervants, like this maid-ſervant, or this man-ſervant that waiteth; and as on this night the Lord redeemed us, and brought us into liberty. But to the Children of capacity, and to the reſt of the company, he would tell particularly of the Wonders done in Egypt, and of the manner of their deliverance, and of Gods various goodneſs towards them: and as the Talmud briefly relates it, מתחיל בגנות ומסיים בשבח ודורש מארמי אובד אבי עד כל הפרשה כולה He began with their diſgrace, and ended with their glory; and expounded from that Text, A Syrian ready to periſh was my Father, even through out to the end of the Section: which as the Gloſſaries give the ſenſe, meaneth thus; that he began his diſcourſe with the Idolatry of Terah, and their fathers beyond the flood, and he led on the ſtory to their bondage in Egypt, and the wonders done for their deliverance, and the Lords giving them his Law, and making them his People; and particularly he took up that Text in Deut. 26. 5, 6, &c. and enlarged himſelf upon it, and the more the more commendably.

(14) Pſanh. ubi ſupr.

Then are the Diſhes that were taken away from before him, ſet before him again, and then he ſaith (15) This is the Paſſover which we eat, becauſe that the Lord paſſed over the houſes of our Fathers in Egypt. And holding up the bitter herbs in his hand, he ſaith, Theſe are the bitter herbs that we eat in remembrance that the Egyptians made the lives of our fathers bitter in Egypt. And holding up the unleavened bread likewiſe in his hand, he ſaith, This is the unleavened bread, which we eat, becauſe the dough of our fathers had not time to be leavened, before the Lord revealed himſelf, and redeemed them out of hand. Therefore are we bound to give thanks, to praiſe, to laud, to glorifie, to extol, to honour, to praiſe, to magnifie him that hath done for our fathers, and for us, all theſe wonders, who hath brought us from bondage to freedom, from ſorrow to rejoycing, from mourning to a good day, from darkneſs to a great light, from affliction to redemption; therefore muſt we ſay before him Hallelujah, praiſe ye the Lord, praiſe ye ſervants of the Lord, praiſe the name of the Lord, &c. And ſo he ſaid over the hundred and thirteenth, and the hundred and fourteenth Pſalms, and concludeth with this prayer, Bleſſed be thou O Lord our God, King everlaſting, who hath redeemed us, and redeemed our Fathers out of Egypt, and brought us to this night to eat unleavened bread and bitter herbs. And then he and all the company with him drank off the ſecond cup of Wine.

(15) Ibid.

VII. (16) And now he waſheth his hands again, uſing the ſame ejaculation or ſhort prayer that he had done at waſhing before: And then taking the two cakes of unleavened bread, he breaketh one of them in two, and layeth the broken upon the whole, and giveth thanks to God, who bringeth bread out of the earth. Not ἐυλογήσας ἔκλασε firſt giving thanks, and then breaking (as was the order of our Saviour, Mat. 26. 26. Mark 14. 22. Luke 22. 19. 1 Cor. 11. 24. for that action of Chriſt was farther in the ſupper than we are yet come) but κλάσας ἐυλόγησε he firſt brake and then gave thanks; and the Jews do make a buſineſs of the method. For he might not give thanks by their Tradition, either over both or either of the Cakes whileſt they were whole, but over it when it was broken: And they give this reaſon, becauſe it was the bread of poverty and affliction, and the poor have not whole Cakes to give thanks over, but are glad to do it over bits and pieces. Hence the phraſe and practice of breaking of bread ſeemeth to have its original.

(16) Maym. ubi ſupr.

I ſhall not here follow the Diſpute that is taken up by the Hebrew Writers, about the number of theſe Cakes, whether they were two or three, for ſome aſſert the one number, and ſome the other; and I believe both the Opinions are true applied to different and ſeveral times; for before the fall of the Temple, or in thoſe times to which our diſcourſe pointeth, (17) there were but two uſed, as may be collected by the beſt records of thoſe times, but in after times they uſed three, (18) either in reference to the threefold diviſion of the Nation into Prieſts, Levites and People; (19) or parallel to the three cakes that a delivered captive was to offer for his deliverance, for Iſrael was delivered out of ſlavery at a Paſſover. It is more of import to look a little after that which they called אפיקומן Aphicomen; about which one would think they had two poſitions, one contrary to another. The Miſhuch of the Talmud hath this Tradition אין מפטירין אחר

(17) Vi. Maym. ubi ſupr.

(18) Vid. Buxt. Lex. Talm. in אפיקו מן.

(19) Gloſs. in Maym. in loc. citat.

אחר הפכח אפיקומן (20) they diſmiſs not the company after the Paſsoever with an Aphicomen. (20) Piſach. per. 10. halac. 8.
And yet this is a current ſaying amongſt them אחת פורס לשנים ושאר חציה לא פיקומן (21) He breaketh one of the cakes in two pieces, and leaveth one half for the Aphicomen. (21) Gloſs. in Maym. ubi ſupr.
Now the ſeeming difference of theſe two poſitions is reconciled by referring them to ſeveral times as the number of the cakes was before. The word Aphicomen in their ſenſe, doth mean the laſt diſhes they uſed at meals, namely of Nuts, Apples, or Sweet-meats, wherewithall they cloſed up their meals when they ſaw good; but ſuch a cloſure they might not make at the Paſsover ſupper, and the reaſon was, becauſe they would eat ſome of the Paſchal Lamb laſt, and cloſe up the meal with that as the chiefeſt diſh. Laſt of all (ſaith Maymony) he eateth of the fleſh of the Paſchal at the leaſt the quantity of an Olive, and he is to taſte no other meat after it at all. But now he eateth to the quantity of an Olive of unleavened bread, and taſteth nothing at all after that; that is, while the Temple ſtood, and they had a Paſchal Lamb to eat, that was ever the laſt meat they ate, but in after times when they uſed no Lamb, they cloſed the meal with unleavened bread in ſtead of it, aud after that might eat nothing. And ſo the ſame Author relateth again, when he ſaith, It is from the words of the Scribes that they ate nothing after the unleavened bread, nor crackнels, nor nuts, or the like, but if he eat unleavened bread, and eat other meats after, or fruits, he muſt return and eat unleavened bread laſt, to the quantity of an Olive, and ſo he concludes.

Now when they ate unleavened bread for a cloſure of all, in this manner the cake that was broken in two that we are ſpeaking of, was half of it after the breaking of it given to ſome one in the company to reſerve for the Aphicomen, or for the laſt bit ונותנה תחת המפה and he laid it under his Napkin: but the other half, and (if that were not enough) the other cake alſo, and if they reſerved not an Aphicomen, the two parts of the broken cake they uſed thus: (22) The Officiator took a bit, and wrapt it together with the bitter herbs, and dipped them into the thick ſawce, and gave thanks and ſaid, Bleſſed be thou O Lord our God, King everlaſting, who hath ſanctified us by his commandments, and commanded us concerning the eating of unleavened bread, and ſo he eats, and the reſt do likewiſe. (22) Maym. ubi ante. There is ſome queſtion moved amongſt their Traditionaries, whether the bread and the herbs were to be eaten apart or wrapped together, and they ſpeak of a difference betwixt Hillel and his fellows about this matter, but the determination is ſo indifferent, that if he eat them apart, he gave thanks for them apart, and if together, the thankſgiving ſpecified was ſufficient.

VIII. (23) Then fell they to the eating of the fleſh that was before them, having hitherto eaten nothing but bread and herbs: and firſt he gave thanks, Bleſſed be thou O Lord our God, King everlaſting, who hath ſanctified us by his command, and commanded us concerning the eating of the Sacrifice; and ſo they fell to, and ate of the fourteenth days Hagigah, or thoſe peace offerings that they had offered on that day; and of theſe they made the moſt of the meal. And then giving thanks again, Bleſſed be thou O Lord our God, King everlaſting, who hath ſanctified us by his command, and commanded us concerning the eating of the Paſſover, they eat of the fleſh of the Lamb, every one at the leaſt the quantity of an Olive; which when they had done, he waſheth his hands again (now after meat) and ſaith Grace after meat (for ſo let me expreſs it) over the third cup and ſo they drink it off. And here comes in the mention of the firſt action of Chriſt at his laſt Paſſover: Matthew and Mark indeed record his words as they were eating, One of you ſhall betray me, &c. Even one of the twelve that dippeth with me in the diſh, &c. Mat. 26.21,22,23,24,25. and Mark 14.18,19,20,21. (This was moſt probably at the time when they dipped the unleavened bread and bitter herbs in the thick ſawce charoſeth) and Luke relateth alſo thoſe words, With deſire I have deſired to eat this Paſſover with you, &c. Luke 22. 15, 16. But the firſt ſpecial action that is ſpecified is, that he took the cup and gave thanks, and ſaid, Take this, and divide it amongſt your ſelves, Luke 22.17. This was the the third cup at the ſupper, for there is but one more mentioned after it in that ſtory.

The Traditions of the Jews expreſs the paſſage at this time of the meal thus: ואחר נוטל ידיו ומברך ברכת המזון על כוס שלישי ושותהו (24) And after (he hath eaten the fleſh of the Paſchal Lamb) he waſheth his hands and bleſſeth the bleſſing of the meat (or ſaith grace after meat) over the third cup and drinkes it off: or briefly thus, מזגו לו כוס שלישי ומברך על מזוגו They mingle him the third cup, and he giveth thanks over it.

(24) Id. ibid.

Now this cup was called by them the cup of bleſſing, as appeareth by theſe and ſuch like expreſſions that we meet withal in their Traditionaries: (25) Many of our Schoolmen גאונים think, that every one of theſe four cups required bleſſing or thankſgiving over it; but ſome again of the Schoolmen think, that they were not bound to thankſgiving, but only over the firſt cup, and over the cup of bleſſing: thus the Marginal Gloſs upon Maymony in the Tract we have ſo much occaſion to uſe in this Paſchal Ritual, on chap. 8. in the beginning; and towards the latter end of the ſame chapter he produceth ſome words of one of their Schools, which helps to tell which of the four cups this cup of bleſſing was: The Words are theſe, אסור

(25) Gloſſ. in Maym. ubi ante.

(26) Ibid. אסור למיכל מידעם אחר מצה ולא למשחי לבר כסא דברכה וכסא דחלילא (26) It is forbidden to eat any thing after the unleavened bread, (viz. when no Lamb was eaten) but not to drink any thing beside the Cup of bleſſing, and cup of Hallel: which words he clears ſomewhat more by theſe words a little after שתי ב כוסות של יון אחר המצה כסא דברכת המזון וכסא דהלילא He drinketh two cups after the unleavened bread, the cup of bleſſing after meat, and the cup of the Hallel, and a third cup if he will, of the great Hallel. And ſo Rabbi Alpheſi ſpeaks of כמה מעלות טובות כוס של חברכה (27) divers ſingular excellencies in the cup of bleſſing: And (28) Rabbi Mordecai כוס הברכה צריך טיעור of the cup of bleſſing having its meaſure.

(27) R. Alph. in Peſach. in fol. (28) R. Mord. in Peſach. ptr. 10.

Now the reaſon why the third cup beareth this name of the cup of bleſſing above all the reſt, is partly becauſe the ברכת המזון the bleſſing, or grace after meat was ſaid over it, as terminating the Meal; and chiefly to diſtinguiſh it from the firſt cup, for over that and this eſpecially was bleſſing or thanſgiving uttered. It is a great Diſpute among the Talmudical Schoolmen, whether there was thankſgiving uſed over all the four cups alike, and the debate ends moſt to this vote, that מברך על כסא קמא ואכסא דברכתא (29) He gave thanks moſt eſpecially over the firſt cup, and over the cup of bleſſing (which otherwiſe is ſometime expreſſed על ראשון ועל שלישי) over the firſt cup, and over the third. The Gemara in the Chapter oft cited hath this Parable. What is written; and the Child grew and was weaned: the holy bleſſed God will make a feaſt for the righteous in the day that his mercy ſhall be ſhewed to the ſeed of Iſaac. After they had eaten and drunk, they gave Abraham our father the cup of bleſſing to bleſs; he ſaid, I cannot bleſs it, becauſe Iſmael came from me: He gave it Iſaac to bleſs, he ſaid, I cannot, becauſe Eſau came from me: He ſaid to Jacob, take it and bleſs it, he ſaid, I cannot, becauſe I married two ſiſters, which the Law forbids: He ſaid to Moſes, take it, and bleſs it, he ſaid, I cannot, becauſe I was not counted worthy to go into the Land of Iſrael, neither alive nor dead. He ſaid to Joſhua, take it and bleſs it, he ſaid, I cannot, becauſe I have no ſon: He ſaith to David, take it and bleſs it, he ſaid to them, I will bleſs it, and it is fit for me to bleſs it; as it is ſaid, I will take the cup of Salvation, I will call upon the Lord.

(29) Piſk. Peſachin. fol. 137. (30) Ibid. fol. 138.

The Apoſtle uſeth this term the cup of bleſſing, concerning the Sacramental Cup in the Lords Supper, 1 Cor. 10. 16. in which he doth not only allude to their cuſtom and expreſſion that we have now in ſpeech, but by this, and by what he ſpeaketh in the next Chapter following, it ſeemeth that the Judaizing Chriſtians in the Church of Corinth did very much imitate this Paſchal Cuſtom at the receiving of the Sacrament, as that they had a ſupper before, and ſo much Wine ſtirring before, as that ſome were drunk, 1 Cor. 11. 21, 22. And that for concluſion of the Meal, they had the Bread and Wine of the Lords Supper, as they at the Paſſover had the unleavened bread, and the Cup of Bleſſing.

And as the Apoſtle in this Phraſe alludeth to their expreſſion and cuſtom, ſo doth our Saviour alſo ſpeak ſuitably to their practice when he taking this third cup, or the cup of bleſſing, bids them divide it among themſelves. For the four cups that were uſed at the Paſſover ſupper, were enjoyned to Men, Women and Children, all alike. (31) Our Rabbins deliver it for a Tradition, ſay the Gemariſts, that theſe four cups ought to have in them a fourth part of a hin, all alike for Men, Women and Children. And becauſe we are fallen upon mention of their being drunk at their Supper, before the Sacrament in the Church of Corinth, let us take notice of a Talmudick paſſage or two, that may give ſome light about ſuch a matter, though it ſeems in pretence to be of a contrary tune. They have a Tradition that runneth thus, בין כוסות הללו אם רוצה לשתות ישתה If any will drink between theſe cups he may, ſo that he drink not between the third cup and the fourth. The Jeruſalem Gemara debating the caſe why between the firſt and ſecond cup, or between the ſecond and third, but not between the third and fourth; it reſolves it thus, that this was to prevent their being drunk; but they raiſe hereupon again, a very juſt objection, what prevention could be in this? And they give this poor anſwer to it, (32) Becauſe Wine at Meat maketh not a man drunk, but if Wine after Meat doth. If Religion did not prevail with them to withhold them from tryal of the truth of this Aphoriſm, more than the vertue of the Aphoriſm would prevail to keep them from drunkenneſs; I doubt not but there were drunken heads to be found at their Paſchal Cups, as well as at the Sacramental Suppers in the Church of Corinth. And the Caution which the Tradition giveth a little after thoſe words alledged but now, doth make the matter ſomewhat ſuſpicious, when they provide thus: Doth any one ſleep at the Paſſover meal and wake again? he may not eat again after he is awaked. Do more of the company ſleep? they may eat again when they awake; do they all ſleep? they may not eat. Rabbi Joſe ſaith, if they nod or ſlumber only, they may eat upon their waking, but if they have been found aſleep, they may not.

(31) Peſach. ubi ante in Gemara.

(32) Jer. Ibid. in Gemara.

IX And

IX. And now we are come to the fourth cup, which was called כסא דחלילא the cup of the Hallel: גומר עליו את ההלל ואומר עליו ברכת השיר (33) for he finiſhed the Hallel at it, and at it he ſaid the bleſſing of the Song. He had begun the Hallel over the ſecond cup, for he concluded the Haggadah or ſhewing forth of their deliverance, (as 1 Cor. 11.26.) with the rehearſal of the hundred and thirteenth, and hundred and fourteenth Pſalms. And now he begins with the hundred and fifteenth and rehearſeth that, and the hundred and ſixteenth, and hundred and ſeventeenth, and hundred and eighteenth, for theſe ſix Pſalms were the Hallel, as was obſerved even now.

(33) Pſach. ubi ante in Miſhnah.

Now the ברכת השיר Bleſſing of the Song was a Prayer or Bleſſing that they uttered after the Hallel or the Hymn was finiſhed (34) about which there is ſome diſpute between R. Judah and R. Johanan in the Gemara what it ſhould be: the one naming one Prayer, and the other another: but the Scholiaſts thereupon do conclude that the difference between them, is not ſo much about the Prayers themſelves, as about the order of them, or which was uttered firſt, and they determine theſe two, to be they, and that they were uttered in this order:

(34) Ibid. in Gemara.

O Lord our God, let all thy works praiſe thee, and thy Saints and the righteous ones that do thy will, and thy People the houſe of Iſrael, all of them with ſhouting. Let them praiſe, and bleſs, and magnifie, and glorifie, and ſing out the name of thy glory with honour and renown, for remembrance of thy Kingdom; for it is good to praiſe thee, and it is lovely to ſing unto thy name. For ever and ever thou art God. Bleſſed be thou O Lord the King, who art to be lauded with praiſes, Amen.

And he concludeth thus: Let the ſoul of all living bleſs thy name, O Lord our God, and the ſpirit of all fleſh glorifie and exalt thy memorial for ever, O our King. For, for ever thou art God, and beſides thee we have no King, Redeemer, or Saviour, &c.

And here ordinarily the meal was quite ended, and they ate nor drank no more that night. (compare Mat. 26.29.) Yet they have a Tradition (35) that if they were minded, they might drink off a fifth Cup of Wine, upon this condition, that they ſhould ſay over the great Hallel over it. But what was the great Hallel? Rabbi Judah ſaith from O give thanks, to By the Rivers of Babylon, that is, the hundred ſix and thirtieth Pſalm.

(35) Ibid.

Rabbi Johanan ſaith, from A Song of degrees, to By the Rivers of Babylon; that is, from Pſal. 120. to Pſal. 137. Rabbi Ahabar Jacob ſaith, from For the Lord hath choſen Jacob to himſelf, Pſal. 135. ver. 4. to By the Rivers of Babylon, Pſal. 137. 1. Thus they debate it in the Gemara, in the Treatiſe Peſachin; and in the Treatiſe Erachin they ſeem yet to go further, and to add the hundred and fifth Pſalm to this Hallel; and ſo they make it of a doubtful meaſure (as is obſerved well by the learned Buxtorfius) ſometimes larger, ſometimes leſs, according as they ſaw good.

And now to take up the whole Rubrick of this Sacramental Supper in a ſhort ſumm, they ſate them down in a leaning poſture, began with a Cup of Wine, over which they hallowed the day; waſhed their hands; the table is furniſhed, they firſt eat ſome Sallet, have a ſecond Cup of Wine filled, over which is the rehearſal of the Haggadah, and of Pſal. 113, 114. and then the Wine drunk off. They waſh their hands again, unleavened bread is broken and bleſſed, and ſome of it eaten with bitter herbs dipt in the thick ſawce; then eat they the fleſh of the peace offerings, and then the fleſh of the Lamb; after which they waſh; have a third cup of Wine filled, or the cup of bleſſing, over which they firſt ſay grace after meat, and then give thanks for the Wine, and ſo drink it off. And laſtly, they have a fourth Cup of Wine filled, over which they ſay the Hallel out, and a prayer or two after it, and ſo they have done.

Thus was the Rubrick and Ritual of this great ſolemn Supper, with which the Reader comparing the action of our Saviour at his laſt Paſsover, he will eaſily perceive, that the mention of the firſt thing he did, is coincident with the third cup, or the cup of bleſſing, which he biddeth them to divide among themſelves; And then he taketh ſome of the unleavened bread again, and bleſſeth, and breaketh, and giveth to be eaten for his body, from henceforth, in that ſenſe that the fleſh of the Paſchal Lamb which they had newly eaten had been his body hitherto: And that which was commonly called the cup of the Hallel, he taketh and ordaineth for the Cup of the New Teſtament in his Bloud, and after it they ſung the Hymn or the Hallel out, and ſo he went out into the Mount of Olives.

CHAP. XIV.

SECT. I.

Of the Solemnity and Rites of the first day in the Paſsover Week of the Hagigah, and Peace Offering of rejoycing.

THE next day after the Paſsover was eaten was holy, and no ſervile work to be done in it, but it was accounted and kept as a Sabbath, and ſo it is called, Lev. 23. 6, 7, 15. (a) On this day all the Males were to appear in the Court of the Temple, and to bring with them a burnt offering for their appearance, and a double peace offering, one for the ſolemnity, and another for the joy of the times The offering for their appearance was called Corban Raajah, and they conclude it due from theſe words, None of you ſhall appear before me empty, Exod. 23.15. Yet if any one failed of bringing ſuch a gift, his ſhame and his conſcience go with it, but there was no penalty upon him, becauſe though he had broken a Negative Precept, yet there was no work nor action done by him in it.

(a) Talm. in Hagigah per. 1. Maym. in Hagig per. 1.

The peace offerings for the ſolemnity of the time were called the Hagigah, and they were to be of ſome Beaſt, Bullock or Sheep. Hereupon in 2 Chron. 30.24. & 35.7.8. there is mention of Bullocks and Oxen for the Paſsover; and in Deut. 16. 2. there is ſpeech of ſacrificing the Paſsover of the herd; which cannot be underſtood of the Paſsover that was to be eaten on the fourteenth day at Even, for that was punctually, and determinately appointed to be of Lambs or Kids, Exod. 12.5. but it is to be conſtrued of theſe peace offerings which were for the ſolemnity of the time. And this is that which the Evangeliſt John calleth the Paſsover, when he ſaith, The Jews went not into Pilates judgment Hall, leſt they ſhould be defiled, but that they might eat the Paſsover, Joh. 18. 28. For they had eaten the Paſchal Lamb the night before.

They held themſelves obliged by the Law, as to appear at the three ſolemn feſtivals, and to pay their offerings and their ſervices then due, ſo to make merry and to rejoyce, and cheer up one another, becauſe it is ſaid, Thou ſhalt rejoyce before the Lord, Deut. 16.11, 14, &c. And hereupon they took up the uſe of Wine at the Paſsover Supper, as was obſerved before; and hereupon they took up other peace offerings beſides the Hagigah at the Paſsover ſolemnity, and called them שלמי שמחה The peace offerings of rejoycing And by the offering of theſe two ſorts of peace offerings, it is like they thought themſelves the better diſcharged though they brought not the offering of their appearance; for if they brought theſe, they might the better think they appeared not empty. And ſo Levi Gerſhom conſtrueth that paſſage concerning Elkanah, that he went up yearly from his City to Shiloh, to ſacrifice to the Lord, in application to theſe ſorts of peace offerings, rather than any other offering, for it meaneth (ſaith he) that (b) he ſacrificed his peace offerings of rejoycing, and his peace offerings for the Hagigah.

(b) R. Lev. Gerſom. in 1 Sam. 1.

The time for the offering of theſe they accounted the firſt day of the Feſtival to be moſt proper, and they ſtrove to diſpatch upon it that they might return home the ſooner, but if theſe Sacrifices were offered in any day of the Feſtival, it ſerved the turn.

On this firſt day of the Feaſt, when theſe great matters were to be in hand, namely their appearing in the Court and offering theſe their Sacrifices of ſolemnity and rejoycing at the laſt Paſsover of our Saviour, they ſhewed themſelves otherwiſe employed, for on this day they crucified the Lord of Life.

In reference to whoſe judging, condemning, and executing, though it be ſomewhat beſide the bent of the preſent diſcourſe, let the Reader ſcan two or three of their Traditions.

1. אין מתחילין את דינין בלילה (c) They might begin no judgments in the night, nor received they any witneſs in the night, but the judgments were to be in the day only: yet were they in the examination and judgment of our Saviour all night long.

(c) Maym. in Sanhedr. per. 6.

2. (d) The judging of a falſe Prophet was only to be by the great Sanhedrin of ſeventy and one: Under this notion they blaſphemouſly accuſed and arraigned our Saviour, Joh. 18. 19. Luke 23.2. and unto this, thoſe words of his refer, Luke 13. 33. It cannot be that a Prophet periſh out of Jeruſalem.

(d) Talm. in Sanhedr. per. x.

3, (e) They put not an Elder that tranſgreſſeth againſt the determination of the great Sanhedrin to death, neither at the Sanhedrin that was in his own City, nor at the Sanhedrin that was at Jabneh, but they bring him up to the great Sanhedrin at Jeruſalem, and keep him till a ſolemn feſtival, and execute him at the Feaſt; according to what is ſaid, That all the People may hear and fear, &c.

SECT.

SECT. II.

The second day in the Passover Week. The gathering and offering of the first fruits Omer.

THE first and last days of the solemn festival Weeks were called ימים טובים Holy days, or good days; and the observation of them differed little in strictness from the observation of the Sabbath. See Lev. 23. 7, 8, &c. Now the days between them were called מועד קטן Moed Katon, or the lesser solemnity; (a) in which, although there were not the like strictness of observance that there was of the Holy days, yet was there a distinction made betwixt them and other ordinary times: and divers things were prohibited, especially by their Traditions, to be done in them, which were permitted to be done on other days. And as for the service and imployment in the Temple, there was commonly more work and sacrificing on these days than on other ordinary days, because the peace offerings due or reserved to that time, could not all be dispatched on the other days, but did take up much of these days, and did find the Priests more than ordinary attendance and imployment about the Altar.

On this day that we have in hand, namely, the second day of the Passover week, whatsoever else of extraordinary offering was on it, there never failed to be the offering and waving of the first fruit sheaf before the Lord: The Law for this is given in *Lev.*23.10,11. When ye be come into the Land which I give unto you, you shall reap the Harvest thereof, then ye shall bring a sheaf of the first fruits of your Harvest unto the Priest; and he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord, to be accepted for you: the morrow after the Sabbath the Priest shall wave it: Where by the word Sabbath is to be understood, not the Sabbath day in the proper sense, but the first day in the Passover Week, of which we have spoken, which was so solemn an holy day: And so the Chaldee Paraphrast, and several other Jews do well interpret it.

The Rites about gathering and offering this first fruits sheaf are largely described by Tosaphta ad Menachoth to be after this manner (a): Rabbi Ismael saith, The Omer or first fruits sheaf, if it came on the Sabbath day, (properly so called, as it did that very day that our Saviour rested in the grave) it came in three Seahs, but if on another day it came in five: but the wisemen say, whether Sabbath or other day all was one, it came in three Seahs: Abba Saul said, On the Sabbath it was reaped by one man, and with one sickle, and in one Basket: but on another day it was reaped by three men, and in three baskets, and with three sickles: But the wise men said, Sabbath or other day it was all one, it was by three men, and in three baskets, and with three sickles: The first fruits sheaf came out of the vale of the ashes by the brook Kidron, &c. The day of waving it lighting on the Sabbath, the Sabbath was dispensed with for the reaping of it: And how was it done? Those that the Sanhedrin sent about it, went out, at the Evening of the holy day, (the first day of the Passover Week) they took baskets and sickles, &c. They went out on the holy day when it began to be dark, and a great company went out with them: when it was now dark one said to them, On this Sabbath, on this Sabbath, on this Sabbath; In this Basket, in this Basket, in this Basket; R. Eliezer the son of Zadock saith, With this Sickle, with this Sickle, with this Sickle, every particular three times over. And they answer him, well, well, well, I will reap, and he bids them reap. And why do they thus? Because of the Baithusæans (the Sadduces) who said that the reaping of the first fruit sheaf is not on the end of the holy day. They reap it and put it into the basket, and bring it into the Court: and pass it through the fire; that they might answer the command about parched corn. The words of Rabbi Meir, But the wise men say, That is not to be meant so, but there was a hollow vessel full of holes, so that the fire might go quite through it in the Court, and the wind blew on it, (in which they put the Corn suddenly to dry it that it might grind) and they put it on a Mill to get out a tenth deal, &c. One takes the tenth deal and puts its oil and frankincense on it, and mingles them, and waves it, and takes out a handful and puts it on the Altar, and the rest is for the Priest to eat. As soon as the Omer is offered, they go out and find Jerusalem streets full of Meal and parched Corn: which was not according to the mind of the wise men. The words of R. Meir: But the wise men say; that it was according to the mind of the wise men, for as soon as the Omer was offered, new Corn was permitted.

SECT. IV.

The Feaſt of Pentecoſt, עצרת.

FRom this day and occaſion, namely from the offering of the firſt fruits Omer they began to count the Weeks to Pentecoſt, even ſeven Weeks forward. This day was the firſt of the number, and the next day after the expiring of ſeven Weeks, being the fiftieth day from hence, was Pentecoſt day, as is imported in the very word. It was dated from the offering of the firſt Corn, becauſe that Solemnity and this Feſtival had ſome relation one to another: The preſenting of the firſt ſheaf, was an introduction to Harveſt, and the Feaſt of Pentecoſt was a return or offering of their Harveſt; by that they had liberty to begin to put the ſickle into the Corn and to reap, and at this they offered an offering of their Corn now reaped and inned. Therefore this Solemnity is ſometimes called in Scripture the Feaſt of Harveſt, Exod. 23.16. and ſometimes the Feaſt of weeks, Deut. 16. 10. becauſe of the reckoning of the ſeven Weeks from that day to it, and ſometimes Pentecoſt, *Act.*2.1. becauſe it was the fiftieth day from that: and ſo the Jews themſelves call it יום חמשים (a) the fiftieth day, or Pentecoſt.

(a) Maym. in Talmud per. 8. R. Sol. in Lev. 23.

But the Jews in their Writings do moſt commonly call this Feaſt by the name עצרת Atſereth, and ſo do the Chaldee Paraphraſts uſe it in Numb. 28. 26. although (b) Abarbonel doth obſerve that this Feaſt alone, of all the three, is not called עצרת Atſereth in the Scripture. The word doth properly ſignifie a reſtraining or a ſhutting up, and from that ſignification it is taken to ſignifie a ſolemn holy day, or aſſembling, as being interdicted and reſtrained from work, 2 King 10.20. Joel 1.4. Amos 5.21, &c. But whether this Feaſt were ſo called by them in ſo ſingular a manner, becauſe that was the time of the reſtraining of rains, it being the very middle of Harveſt, or becauſe the offering of their firſt fruits was reſtrained till this time, or becauſe the feſtival joy of Harveſt was yet reſtrained, and not as yet full, or for what cauſe elſe, I ſhall not be much ſollicitous to determine; but certainly ſome of the Rabbins give ſuch intimation as might ſeem to give ſome ſtrength to the ſuppoſal upon one of the two latter. For Maymony relateth (c) that they brought not any firſt fruits before עצרת Pentecoſt, becauſe it is ſaid, the Feaſt of Harveſt, the firſt fruits of thy labours: And if they brought any, they received them not from them, but laid them by till Pentecoſt. And Baal Hatturim hath this ſaying, (d) There is no rejoycing ſpoken of at the Paſſover, becauſe the fruits were yet in the field: But at עצרת Pentecoſt, when Corn is now reaped, and Wine is now in the Grapes, there is one rejoycing ſpoken of, Deut.16.11. But at the Feaſt of Tabernacles, when all is inned, then rejoycing is twice mentioned, Deut.16.14,15.

(d) *Baal. Turim in Deut.*16.

The ſolemnity of this day and feaſt was: 1. (e) That all the Males were to appear at it, as at the Paſſover and Feaſt of Tabernacles. 2. (f) They were to offer two cakes bak'd with leaven, of the Corn of the Harveſt now reaped, or of new Corn: and if it be queſtioned why with leaven now, ſeeing there was ſo expreſs commands againſt leaven at the Paſſover, ſome of the Jews do give this pertinent reaſon: (g) becauſe theſe loaves or cakes were an offering in behalf of the bread which they were ordinarily to eat, (for theſe were firſt fruits of their Wheat) but their bread at the Paſſover was commemorative of their haſty departing out of Egypt, when they could not ſtay to have their bread leavened: Their Paſſover bread was for a memorial, their Pentecoſt cakes were not. At Paſſover they could only ſay, חילך מצה Here is unleavened bread ובעצרת חילך מצה וחמץ. But at Pentecoſt, Here is unleavened bread (for the meat offering) and leavened too (for the two cakes) (h) as the Gemariſts deſcant upon this matter. Theſe cakes were made ſquare, each cake ſeven hand-breadth long, four broad, and four high.

(f) Jer. 23. 16, 17.

(h) Talm. Jeruſ. in Succab. per. 5.

3. With theſe cakes were alſo offered ſeven Lambs, and one Bullock, and two Rams for a burnt offering, a Kid for a ſin offering, and two Lambs for a peace offering. And theſe two Lambs were the only peace offerings that the Congregation offered: and theſe peace offerings only were reckoned in the rank of the moſt holy offerings.

Now theſe Lambs being Peace offerings, were to be waved up and down with the two cakes, for ſo is the command expreſs, *Lev.*23.20. and the manner of that action was thus: (i) The Prieſt firſt waved the Lambs up and down whilſt they were yet alive, and then ſlew them: and having ſtead them, he took out the breaſt and ſhoulder of either of them, and laid them cloſe beſides the two cakes, and putting his hand under them he waved them all together, upwards and downwards, and this way and that way, and all towards the Eaſt; and afterwards burnt their inwards, and the Prieſt ate ate the reſt of the fleſh. And as for the Cakes the High-Prieſt took the one, and the other was divided among all the Courſes who were then preſent.

It was not ſo much the ſolemnity or multitude of the Sacrifices of this day that challenged the appearance of all the People in the whole Land, though the offerings were many and ſolemn, but it was the Memorial which the Feaſt carried with it, namely of the Law, being given to Iſrael, at that time of the year from Mount Sinai.

On this day was the Hallel ſung, as was intimated before, and on this day was the great gift of tongues viſibly beſtowed upon the Diſciples.

CHAP. XV.

Of the Service on the day of Expiation.

THE inſtitution of this ſolemn day, of which there is a large mention, Lev. 16. was firſt occaſioned from this, that Moſes on that very day, after three ſeveral forty days Faſts came down from the Mount, having obtained Iſraels full peace with God and reconciliation, and brought now with him the renwed Tables, and a full commiſſion to build the Tabernacle, and to ſet up the ſolemn Worſhip in the midſt of them.

(a) Seven days before the day of Expiation, they put the High-Prieſt apart from his own Houſe into the Chamber פרהדרין Parhedrin: (b) leſt his Wife proving to be in her ſeparation ſhould bring upon him an uncleanneſs of ſeven days, and ſo prevent him of being fit for that days ſervice.

(a) Ioma per. 1. (b) Maym. in Iom. haccippurim. per. 1.

They alſo appointed another Prieſt as his ſubſtitute, to perform the ſervice of that day, if it ſhould fall out, that any uncleanneſs did befal him that he could not officiate, that ſo the ſervice ſhould not fall to the ground.

Every day of theſe ſeven they cauſed him to ſprinkle the bloud of the daily Sacrifice, to burn the parts of it, to offer the Incenſe, and dreſs the Lambs, that he might be the better inured to thoſe ſervices on that day when it came.

On the third day, and on the ſeventh, they beſprinkled him with the aſhes of the red Cow, for fear he might have been defiled by the dead, and not aware of it.

They delivered to him ſome of the Elders of the Sanhedrin, who read before him the rubrick and order of that days ſervice, and they ſaid unto him, Sir High-Prieſt, read thou thy ſelf, it may be thou haſt forgotten, or it may be thou haſt not learned.

On the Eve of the day of Expiation, that is, on the day before in the morning they brought him to the Eaſt-gate of the Courts, and there they made Bullocks, and Rams, and Lambs to paſs before him, that ſtill he be the better acquainted with every thing that he had to do.

Afterward the Elders of the Sanhedrin delivered him over to the Elders of the Prieſthood; who brought him into the Chamber of Abhtenes, that there he might learn to hand the incenſe: And there they gave him this Oath: Sir High-Prieſt we are the Meſſengers of the Sanhedrin, and thou art our Meſſenger and the Sanhedrins, we adjure thee by him that hath cauſed his name to dwell in this Houſe, that thou alter not any thing of what we have ſpoken to thee: and ſo they part weeping.

Now the reaſon of this ſolemn adjuration was becauſe of the Sadduces, who had vented a Doctrine, and ſome of them had ventured a practice contrary to the Tradition of the Elders, namely, to kindle the Incenſe, and to make it ſmoke without the Vail, and to bring it ſmoking within: They ſwore him, ſaith (c) the Jeruſalem Talmud, becauſe of the Baithuſæans, who ſaid, Let him kindle the Incenſe without, and then bring it in: And there was one that did ſo, and when he came out, one ſaid to his Father: Ye have been ſearching all your days, yet did ye never the thing to purpoſe till this man came and did it, he anſwered him: although we have been ſearching all our days, yet have we done according to the will of the Wiſe Men. And I ſhall much wonder if this man that hath done ſo live long after. And they ſay he died ſhortly: namely within three days.

(c) Talm. Ieruſ. in Ioma per. 1. Iuchaſin. fol. 19.

The Even being come, they ſuffered him to eat but ſparingly, becauſe fulneſs would make him drouſie: for ſleep he might not, for fear of Nocturnal Pollution, but all the night, he, if he were learned, read and expounded the Scripture to them that were with him, if he were not learned, ſome other did, eſpecially out of (d) Job, Ezra, Daniel and Chronicles, places that might moſt affect and prepare him for the ſervice.

(d) Vid. Gloſſ. in Ioma in Talm. Babyl. per. 1.

(e) Kerithuth. per. 1.

The day being come, (which was ſo ſtrict a Faſting day, (e) as that to eat any thing, or to do any work on it, fell under the penalty of being cut off) the High-Prieſt is now to prepare himſelf for the buſineſs. And firſt he puts off his ordinary wearing Cloathes, bathes himſelf in water (f) his bathing this day was on the roof of the room of Happarbah, a fine Sheet hanging betwixt him and the ſight of the People) wipes himſelf dry with a Towel, and puts on the rich Garments of the High-Prieſthood, waſheth his Hands and Feet, killeth the daily Sacrifice, burns the pieces, offers the Incenſe, dreſſeth the Lamps, and doth all the ſervice belonging to the ordinary daily ſervice: And ſo he doth by the Bullock, and ſeven Lambs of the extraordinary Sacrifice: And when he had done with theſe, he waſhed his hands and his feet again.

(f) Mid. per. 5.

(g) Then put he off his rich Robes again, and bathed himſelf, and put on the white Linnen Garments, appointed Levit. 16. 4. and performed the peculiar ſervices of that day, as firſt he goeth to his own Bullock, Levit. 16. 6. (which ſtood between the Temple and the Altar) laid his two hands upon his head, and made this confeſſion: Ah Lord, I have ſinned, done perverſly and tranſgreſſed before thee, I and mine houſe, I beſeech thee O Lord, expiate the ſins, perverſities and tranſgreſſions, whereby I have ſinned, done perverſly and tranſgreſſed, I and mine houſe, as it is written in the Law of Moſes thy ſervant, ſaying, for on this day he will expiate for you to purge you from all your ſins before the Lord that ye may be clean.

(g) Maym. ubi ſupra per. 4.

(h) Then went he to caſt the Lots upon the two Goats, on the North-Eaſt part of the Court below the Altar: The two lots were ordinarily of Gold, pieces juſt of one and the ſame bigneſs, on the one of them was written, for the Lord, and on the other for Azazel: theſe were put into a Box into which the Prieſt could put both his hands: this Box was called קלפי The two Goats were ſet before him; one before the right hand and the other at the left; and on his right hand ſtood the Sagan, and on his left hand ſtood chief of his Fathers houſe: He put his hand in the box and took out the lots: and opening his hands, if the lot for the Scape-goat came in his right hand the Sagan ſaid to him, Sir, lift up your right hand, and ſo the right hand Goat was the Scape-goat: And if that lot came in his left hand, the chief of his Fathers houſe ſaid to him, Sir, lift up your hand, and then that was the Scape-Goat that was on the left hand: And he tied a Scarlet liſt upon that Goats head, and ſet him there from whence he was to be ſent away, and the other Goat he ſent where he muſt be killed.

(h) Id. ibid. per. 3.

This Scarlet liſt is called commonly by the Rabbins לשון זהורית Lingula coccinea, the Scarlet tongue, becauſe it was broad and faſhioned like a tongue. And they expected that when it was tied upon the Scape-Goats head, (i) it ſhould turn white. And ſo they ſay it did, (k) in the time of Simeon the juſt, and that the lot for the Scape-Goat came ſtill up in his right hand: and this they ground upon Eſay 1. 18.

(i) Ioma per. 4. in Gemara.

(k) Iuchaſin. fol. 15. col. 1.

Having thus ſet the two Goats ready againſt their time comes, he returned again to his own Bullock where he left him ſtanding, and lays his hand upon his head a ſecond time, and makes a ſecond confeſſion, in the very ſame words that he had done the former, ſave that when he had ſaid, wherein I have ſinned, done perverſly, and tranſgreſſed before thee, I and my fathers houſe, he added, and the ſons of Aaron thy holy people, as it is written in the Law of Moſes, &c.

Then killed he the Bullock, took the blood and gave it one to ſtir that it ſhould not congeal: He himſelf took a Cenſer full of Coals from the Altar, and ſet them down upon a Bench in the Court: and from a Veſſel brought him, he took his hands full of Incenſe and put it into a Diſh: The Cenſer of Coals he took in his right hand (becauſe it was hot and heavy, otherwiſe he ſhould have carried it in his left) and the Diſh of Incenſe in his left hand, and ſo he went into the Holy of Holies, and came up to the Ark, and there he ſets his Coals down, empties the Incenſe into his hands again, and ſo lay it on the coals, and ſtays till all the room be full of ſmoak, and then comes backward out from within the vail, having his face ſtill toward the Ark: Being come out he made this ſhort Prayer, O Lord God let it be thy good pleaſure, that this year may have ſeaſonable rains, (if it have been droughty:) And let not thy Scepter depart from Judah, and let not thy people Iſrael want ſuſtenance, and let not the prayer of wicked tranſgreſſors come before thee: and ſo he came out.

Then took he the blood of the Bullock which had been ſtirred about all this while, for con-congealing; and brought it within the moſt holy place, and ſprinkled of it eight times, once upward and ſeven times downward between the bars of the Ark, and having ſo done he came out thence, ſet the reſt of the blood in the baſon in the Holy place and came forth.

Then ſlew he the Goat, took the blood of it into the moſt holy place, and ſprinkled it there eight times, as the other; came forth and ſet it down in the holy place, took up the Bullocks blood and ſprinkled it eight times before the vail, and ſo he did by the Goats blood; then mingled he them together and ſprinkled therewith the golden Altar going round about it: He began firſt with the North-eaſt corner, ſo to the North-weſt, and to the South-weſt and ended at the South-eaſt; then ſprinkled he the body of the Altar it ſelf ſeven times, and ſo came out; and poured the remainder of the blood at the foot of the burnt offering Altar on the Weſt-ſide.

And now he goes about to ſend the Scape-goat away; he firſt laid his hands upon his head and made this confeſſion, Ah Lord, thy people the houſe of Iſrael have ſinned and done perverſly, and tranſgreſſed before thee, I beſeech thee now O Lord expiate the ſins, perverſities, and tranſgreſſions, which the houſe of Iſrael thy people have ſinned, done perverſly, and tranſgreſſed before thee; as it is written in the Law of Moſes thy ſervant, For this day he will expiate for you, to purge you from all your ſins that you may be clean before Jehovah. As ſoon as the Prieſts and people that were in the Court heard him utter the name Jehovah, they bowed, worſhipped, and ſaid, Bleſſed be the Name of his glorious Kingdom for ever and ever. And then they ſent the Goat a going.

* There was from Jeruſalem about ſome twelve eaſie miles off, a very ſteep and high promont, which they expreſs by the name צוק Tſock, ‖ (ſome take this to be the proper name of that Hill, † ſome for the common name of any high rock whatſoever.) Between Jeruſalem and this hill there were ten Booths ſet up at an equal diſtance one from another, namely, about a mile aſunder, and the neareſt about a mile from Jeruſalem. Having delivered the Goat to him that was to bring him into the Wilderneſs, they accompanied him to the firſt Booth, and from thence there were ſome ready there to accompany him to the next, and ſome at that to go with him to the third, and thus through all: and at every Booth they asked the man that led him whether he would eat or drink.

* Joma ptr. 6. in in Miſhn. ‖ Ramb. ibi. † Bartenor. ib. & Aruch. in voce.

From the laſt Booth they went not quite through with him to the high Rock, but ſtood at diſtance to ſee what he did. When he came there, he took the crimſon liſt from between the Goats horns and pulled it in two pieces; the one half of it he tyed upon the rock, and the other half upon his horns again. Then took he the Goat and puſhed him backward from off the rock, and by the time he came to the bottom he was daſh'd all in pieces. And ſo the man returns to the next Booth, and there ſtaies till it be dark.

In the mean time the High-prieſt after the ſending away of the Goat, had returned to the ſervice again, and cut in pieces the Bullock and Goat that he had ſlain, and whoſe blood he had brought within the vail, and laid their inwards upon the Altar to be burnt, but their pieces he delivered to ſome, to be carried forth without Jeruſalem, there to be burnt, Levit. 16. 27.

At laſt they ſay to the High-prieſt, Sir, by this time the Goat is gotten into the Wilderneſs. And then he went into the Court of the women, and there in a Pulpit read a Section or two in the Law, as namely, all Levit. 16. and Chap. 23. verſ. 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32.

Now if it be queſtioned how they could gueſs the very time when the Goat arrived in the Wilderneſs, there are three ſeveral ways of this conjecture held out by them, and they are theſe, 1. The Miſhuch of the Talmud ſaith, there were ſeveral high piles or pillars of ſtone ſet up in the way thither, and men ſtood upon them with linnen cloaths in their hands, and when the Goat was got into the Wilderneſs, he that ſtood on the pillar there, waved his Napkin up and down, and the next took at him and did the like, and the next at him, and ſo they conveyed the intelligence into the City in a trice. 2. Rab. Iſmael ſaith, a crimſon liſt was tyed on the Temple door, and aſſoon as ever the Goat arrived in the Wilderneſs, it grew white.

And that paſſage in the Gemara of the Babylon Talmud is remarkable (whether it ſpeak of this liſt, or of that betwixt the Goats horns it is not much material, they were both of the ſame nature, and reference) when it ſaith * That all the forty years before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem the red liſt did never turn white: for whereas this change of it was a ſign of the remiſſion of their ſins, as they themſelves conſtrue it from Eſay 1. 18. they had now ſo died themſelves with the blood of Chriſt, ſlain juſt forty years before the deſtruction of the City, that we may well take their own evidence and teſtimony for their guilt, and unpardonableneſs for that fact. R. Judah ſaith, it was three miles to בית חדודו Beth Haduda, which was the edge of the Wilderneſs that way that the Goat went, went, and for the measuring out of the space of time that the man might be going thither with the Goat, some men walked out a miles space from the City, and walked back that mile again without any stay, and when they were come back, they stayed so much time as one might walk another mile, and then concluded that by that time the man with the Goat was come into the Wilderness.

The High-priest having read his Lessons in the Law, and prayed eight several Prayers after, he washes his Hands and Feet, puts off his linnen cloaths, baths himself, puts on his rich garments, washes his Hands and Feet again; offereth a Ram for himself and another for the people, and seven Lambs for the additional offering of the day. And then he offered the daily Evening Sacrifice.

This done he washed his Hands and Feet again, put off his rich garments, bathed himself, and put on the linnen garments, washed his Hands and Feet, went into the most Holy place and fetched out the Censer and Dish that he had left there.

After this he washed his Hands and Feet, put off those linnen cloaths, bathed himself in water, put on his rich garments again, washed his Hands and Feet, went into the Holy place, offered the Evening Incense, mended the Lamps, and so came out.

Then washed he his Hands and Feet again, put off his rich garments and put on his own ordinary wearing cloaths, and went to his house, all the people accompanying him: and he held it a joyful day because he was come out of the most Holy place in safety.

CHAP. XVI.

The manner of their celebrating the Feast of Tabernacles.

THE day of expiation was not so solemn, and serious, and painful, especially to the High-priest, but the Feast of Tabernacles was as jocund, pleasant and mirthful to all the people. It was but five days after that, beginning on the fifteenth day of the same month Tisri, and lasting eight days together, Levit. 23. 34, 35, 36. Numb. 29. 12, 35. 2 Chron. 7. vers. 8, 9, 10. Nehem. 8. 17, 18. In which feast there was more rejoycing than in any of the other, and more parcels and varieties of solemnity.

The first particular of its solemnity and celebration was their dwelling in booths, (from which custom the Feast took its name) which they began to do on the first day of the Feast, and so continued all the time, and out of those booths they might neither eat, nor drink, nor sleep, so long as the Feast lasted. Their booths were of boughs of Trees, in the making of which, for height, and breadth, and place, and fashion, it were endless to trace their Curiosity and Traditions, and it is somewhat excentrick to our discourse which is confined to the virge of the Temple. Within which confinement we are to take up four remarkable ingredients to the solemnity of this Feast, and they are these.

1. The variety of their Sacrifices.
2. Their Palm and Willow branches.
3. Their Pomecitrons.
4. Their pouring out of Water and rejoycing.

SECT. I.

The several Sacrifices at the Feast of Tabernacles.

THE Jerusalem Talmud doth give this brief summary of the progress of their proceedings in the service of the Temple every day of this Feast. * They went first to offer the daily Sacrifice in the morning; then the additional Sacrifices; after that the vows and free offerings; from thence to eat and drink (or to dinner) from thence to the study of the Law; and after that, to offer the Evening Sacrifice, and from thence they went to the joy of the pouring out of the water.

* Talm. Jer. in Succ. per. 5.

Now the constant or daily Sacrifices of these days of the Feast were unalteredly the same that they were on all other days, a Lamb in the Morning, and a Lamb at Even: but the additional Sacrifices for the time, were not only remarkable for their number (they and the daily Sacrifices of this time amounting to two hundred and fifteen the number of the years of Israels being in Egypt) but they were most remarkable for this alteration, because a Bullock less was offered every day than had been offered on the day before; and yet the very same number of Rams, Lambs, and Goats, retained every day alike: For on the first day of the Feast were thirteen Bullocks offered, on the second second day twelve, on the third day eleven and so downward, as may be seen in Numb. 29. and yet on every day two Rams, fourteen Lambs, and one Goat, without any alteration, as is apparent in the same place.

The reason of which decrescency of the Bullocks, may be better guessed at, then surely given, and variety of conjecture sooner produced of others, then any certainty determined by our selves. Whether it were to reduce the whole number of the Bullocks to Seventy, * in parallel to the Seventy Nations which should be abating and decaying, while Israel like the number of the Rams, Lambs, and Goats, remained fixed: || or according to the seventy years of mans age, which is daily decaying; or whether it were to shew the decay of Sacrifice in time to come; or to match seven Bullocks with the seventh day; or to reduce the number of Beasts on that day to an equality with the number of the four and twenty courses; or whether this abatement were because the people abated daily, and withdrew to their own homes; or what else was the cause of it, we shall not be sollicitous to enquire further after, only we cannot but observe the manner of offering of these Sacrifices which were so numerous and so various, and the service with them.

* R. Sol. in Numb. 29.

|| Abarb. ibid.

The daily Sacrifice was offered according to the Ritual that hath been already observed by the Course appointed for that week, and according as every one obtained his imployment by the lottery. And at the offering of it the Levites sung the Hallel, of which mention and description hath been made before.

But as for additional Sacrifices, they found a way that every Course of the four and twenty, who were now all present, should have a share in offering of one beast or other, and they proportionated the business after this manner.

* On the first day there were thirteen Bullocks, two Rams, and one Goat, sixteen beasts in all, and these were offered by sixteen of the Courses; there remained then fourteen Lambs for eight Courses, six whereof offered two Lambs apiece, and the other two Courses one Lamb apiece.

* Succah. per. 5. & Maym. in Tam. per. 10.

On the second day there were twelve Bullocks, two Rams, and one Goat, fifteen beasts offered by fifteen of the Courses; and then their remained fourteen Lambs for nine Courses to offer; five whereof offered two Lambs apiece, and four one apiece.

On the third day eleven Bullocks, two Rams, and one Goat, fourteen beasts offered by fourteen of the Courses: and then fourteen Lambs remained for ten Courses, of which four Courses offered two Lambs apiece, and six Courses one apiece.

On the fourth day ten Bullocks, two Rams, and one Goat, thirteen beasts offered by thirteen Courses: the fourteen Lambs remained for eleven Courses, three Courses offered two apiece, and eight Courses one apiece.

On the fifth day nine Bullocks, two Rams, and one Goat, offered by twelve Courses: the fourteen Lambs remained for the other twelve Courses to offer, two Courses offered two a piece, and ten Courses one a piece.

On the sixth day eight Bullocks, two Rams, and one Goat, offered by eleven Courses: the fourteen Lambs remained for thirteen Courses to offer, one Course offered two Lambs, and twelve Courses offered one Lamb a piece.

On the seventh day seven Bullocks, two Rams, one Goat, and fourteen Lambs, four and twenty in all were offered by the four and twenty Courses, every Course offering one beast.

SECT. II.

Their Palm and Willow branches. ערבה ולולב.

IT was enjoyned by the Law, Ye shall take you on the first day (of the Feast of Tabernacles) fruit of goodly Trees, branches of Palm trees, boughs of thick Trees, and Willows of the brook, and ye shall rejoyce before the Lord your God seven days, Lev. 23. 40. Upon which Text there was * a dispute between the Pharisees and the Sadduces, for what end these boughs and branches should be appointed: The Sadduces held that they were for the making of their Booths, but the Pharisees determined (and they carried it) that these were branches, and fruit of Trees, which at this Feast were to be carried in their hands.

* Ab. Ez. Lev. 23.

* On the first day of the Feast therefore they prepared them branches of Palm, Willow, and Mirtle, and tied them together with gold or silver twist, or with other strings or twigs, and these they carried continually in their hand all the first day of the Feast throughout. In the morning did a man go out of his house, he had his Lulabb in his hand, for so they called this bundle of branches. If he went to the Synagogue, if he prayed, if he went to visit the sick, he kept it still in his hand, and he might not leave it out of his hand all that day long. And all the rest of the days of the Feast they went not not to the Temple without theſe branches, and every day they went to the Temple purpoſely with them.

* Talm. in Succab per. 4. * There was a place a little below Jeruſalem, which was called Motſa, thither they went and got Willow branches, (it ſeems upon the banks of Kidron) and every one got two, namely || one for his Lulabb, or to tye up with his Palm and Myrtle branches to carry in his hand, and one for the Altar. And once every day of the Feaſt, they went with theſe in their hands about the Altar, and ſtuck one of them there. At firſt it was their cuſtom upon the firſt day of the Feaſt, to bring their branches into the Temple, and there to leave them till the next morning, ſticking about the Cloyſter that incompaſſed the mountain of the houſe, and the next morning to come and take them in their hands again. But this bred ſcuffling and ſcrambling and difference among them about which was which, ſo that the Sanhedrin ſaw cauſe to decree that every one ſhould take his branch with him home, and bring it from home the next day.

|| Toſapht. in Succab per. 3.

Having therefore provided a Lulabb, or bundle to hold in their hands, and another Willow branch for the Altar, they came once every day into the Court, and went about the Altar, and ſet their boughs bending toward the Altar, and cryed Hoſanna, or ſave now I beſeech O Lord; O Lord I beſeech thee ſend now proſperity, Pſal. 118. 25. the Trumpets in the mean while ſounding; and on the ſeventh day they walked about the Altar ſeven times, and this was called the great Hoſanna: and every day when they went away they ſaid יופי לך מזבח יופי לך מזבח Beauty be to thee O Altar, Beauty be to thee O Altar.

The conſideration of this cuſtom giveth light to that paſſage, John 12.12,13. Matth. 21.8,9,15. and to that in *Rev.*7.9,10.

SECT. III.

Their Pomecitron apples. אתרוג.

THere ſeemeth not to be either mention or footing of this matter that we have now in hand in all the Scriptures, yet have the Traditionaries drawn it into being and practiſe from that expreſſion in the Text alledged even now, Ye ſhall take unto you פרי עץ הדר the fruit of goodly trees, (as our Engliſh renders it, and the Seventy differ but little from it) which the Talmudiſts deſcant upon in this variety. * It is written פרי עץ הדר that is a tree whoſe fruit is goodly, and whoſe wood is goodly. And what is that, but a Pomecitron? And if thou ſay a Pomegranate; his fruit is goodly, but his wood is not goodly. If thou ſay a Charob; his wood is goodly, but his fruit is not goodly. R. Simeon ben Jochai ſaith, A Tree whoſe fruit is goodly, and its wood goodly; the taſte of its fruit like the taſte of its wood, its wood like its fruit, and its fruit like its wood, and what is this? A Pomecitron. It is called עץ חדר ſaith Rabbi Levi שדר becauſe it ſtayeth upon the tree from one year to another. Rabbi Tauchuma ſaith Aquila rendreth הדר by הודר for it is a tree that groweth by the waters. R. Abhu ſaith, read it not הדר but הדור for ſo in the Greek Tongue they call water הודור ὑδωρ: Now what Tree is that that groweth beſides all waters? It is a Pomecitron. And according to this received conſtruction doth the Chaldee Paraphraſt roundly render that clauſe in the Text alledged, Ye ſhall take unto you the fruit of the Pomecitron tree, which conſtruction is generally received of all the Jews.

* Talm. Jer. in Succab fol. 53. col. 2. & Talm. Rab. in Succab f. 35. & Aruch. in הדר R. Sol. & Baal. turim. in Lev. 23.

And ſo generally received, that as they carried a branch or bundle of branches in the one hand at the Feaſt of Tabernacles, and held that an undiſpenſable command, ſo did they alſo carry a Pomecitron in the other hand, and held that as ſtrict a command and duty as the other. About which Ceremonial Pomecitron (for ſo I may well call it) it would be tedious to produce the curioſities that are diſcuſſed, about the growth, quantity, quality, and complexion of it; I ſhall only relate one ſtory about it, which is ſomewhat remarkable; and that is, of a Baithuſæan*, or Sadduce, who failing of the performance of a piece of ſervice at the Altar, at the Feaſt of Tabernacles (of which ſervice we ſhall ſpeak anon) and not doing it as he ſhould, all the company fell upon him, and pelted him (the Talmudick expreſſion is they ſtoned him) with their Pomecitrons. || Whereupon King Jannai being himſelf a Sadduce, called for a ſword and ſlew divers of the wiſe men. Whether this were that King Jannai † of whom there is the remarkable ſtory in the Treatiſe Sanhedrin, in the place alledged in the margin, (a ſtory that it may be hath ſome reference to this fact) it is not time and place to examine here.

SECT. IV.

Their pouring out of water נישוך חמים and the Rubrick of every days Service.

THE Ceremonies and Customs used at this Feast, which have been mentioned already, were somewhat strange, but the strangest rite is yet behind, and that is their drawing and pouring out of water, and their great rejoycing for it, which pouring out of water was used every day of the Feast, and their rejoycing upon it, was so great, that in all this Feast, nay in all their Feasts throughout all the year, they had not the like. For the fuller view of which and of the whole Festivity of this solemn time, having now shewn you the men in their Festival garbe, with their Branches in the one hand, and their Pomecitrons in the other, we will now take up in order, the several and particular services and passages of every day as they did occur.

First, They came with their Branches and Pomecitrons in their hands to the morning dayly Sacrifice, and stood so attending while that was offered. * And when the parts of this Sacrifice were laid on the Altar, then was there this pouring out of water upon the Altar, but mingled with Wine, and the manner thus: ‖ One of the Priests with a golden Tankard went to the Fountain or Pool of Siloam, and filled it there with water: He returned back again into the Court through that which was called the Water gate, (which we have taken the survey of it in its place:) and when he came there, the Trumpets sounded: He goeth up the rise of the Altar where stood two Basins, one with Wine in it, and into the other he put the water: and he pours either the Wine into the water or the water into the Wine, and then pours them out by way of libation: which action whilest he was going about the people cried to him, Hold up thy hand: And the reason of this admonition was, because of that Baithusæan or Sadduce that we have newly mentioned, who when he was about this libation, and should have poured the Wine clear from him, he poured it upon his own feet, and this caused the multitude to pelt him with their Pomecitrons.

At the time of this Libation did the musick and the song begin, and * that song which they sung all the days of the Feast, at the daily Sacrifice was the Hallel (which we have described before) that being renewed daily, (saith the Jerusalem Talmud,) as their Lulabh or branches were renewed daily: † Now when they came, in the Hallel, to the beginning of the hundred and eighteenth Psalm, O give thanks unto the Lord, all the company shook their branches: and so did they when they came to these words, Hosanna, or save now Lord I beseech thee: and again at the saying of that clause, O Lord I beseech thee send now prosperity: and so likewise at the saying of the last verse of that Psalm, which was the last verse of the Hallel, O give thanks unto the Lord, &c.

* Talm. Jerus. in Succab. per. 5.

After the service of the daily Sacrifice was done, then fell they to the offering of the additional Sacrifices which have been mentioned of so many Bullocks, Rams, Lambs, and a Goat: at which service the Songs-men sang again some peculiar and appointed part of a Psalm:

As on the first day, Psal. 105.
* On the second day, Psal. 29.
On the third day, Psal. 50. at vers. 16.
On the fourth day, Psal. 94. at vers. 16.
On the fifth day, Psal. 94. at vers. 8.
On the sixth day, Psal. 81. at vers. 6.
On the seventh day, Psal. 82. at vers. 5.

* Maym. in Tamid. in per. 10.

When these additional Sacrifices were also finished, the people departed home to dinner (having first sung their Hosanna about the Altar, as hath been related, with their palms in their hands) unless there were any that had vows or freewil offerings to offer, who stayed for that occasion. After dinner they went severally to the Divinity Schools or to the Study of the Law for a while; and when the time came, to the Evening Sacrifice, where the service was much answerable to what was in the mornig.

Towards night they began the שמחת בית תשואבה Rejoycing for the pouring out, or drawing of the water, which mirth they continued far in the night every night of the Feast, and this their rejoycing was of so high a jollity, that they say, מי שלא ראה שמחת בית השואבה לא ראה שמחה מימיו * That he that never saw the rejoycing of the drawing of water, never saw rejoycing in all his life. At the time when the water was drawn or fetcht from the pool of Siloam, and poured out upon the Altar, they had not the liberty of their jollity, because of the seriousness and solemnity of the service that was then

then in hand; but when all the ſervice of the day was over and night was now come, they fall to their rejoycing for that matter, which rejoycing is equally ſtrange both for the manner and the cauſe of it: The manner was thus,

* Ib. & Maym. in Succah. Veiu-lubh. per. 8. * They went into the Court of the women, and there the women placed themſelves upon balcones round about the Court, and the men ſtood upon the ground. There were four Candleſticks (or Beacons rather I might call them) of an exceeding great bigneſs, and mounted of an exceeding great height, overtopping and overlooking the walls of the Court, and of the mountain of the houſe at a great elevation: By every Candleſtick (which ſtood on every ſide of the Court one) there was a ladder, by which four young men of the Prieſts, did ſeverally go up to the Candleſticks with plenty of Oil and Yarn, which was ravelled of the Prieſts old coats and girdles, and they ſet them a burning.

The Pipe of the Temple began to play, and many Levites with their inſtruments in great abundance, ſtanding upon the fifteen ſteps that went down out of the Court of Iſrael into the Court of the Women, and whoſoever of them and of the Prieſts was muſical either with Inſtrument or with Voice, joined his Muſick: In the mean while the greateſt Grandees of the people, as the members of the Sanhedrin, Rulers of the Synagogues, Doctors of the Schools, and thoſe that were of the higheſt rank and repute for Place and Religion, fell a Dancing, Leaping, Singing and Capering, with torches in their Hands, with all their skill and might, whileſt the Women and the common people looked on: and thus they ſpent the moſt part of the night. And the more they abaſed themſelves (like David before the Ark) in this activity, the more they thought they did commendably, and deſerved praiſe.

At laſt, far in the night two Prieſts, ſtanding in the Gate of Nicanor, do ſound their Trumpets; and then they come down to the tenth ſtep and they ſound there again; they come down into the Court of the Women, and there ſound a third time, and ſo they go ſounding all along the Court till they come to the Eaſt-gate of it, and there they turn themſelves and look back up toward the Temple, and they ſay thus, Our Fathers which were in this place, turned their backs upon the Temple of the Lord, and their faces towards the Eaſt, towards the Sun, but as for us, we are towards him, and our eyes towards him.

* Talm. Jeruſ. in Succah. f. 55 & Talm. Bab. ibi. fol. 5. * As the Grandees danced, ſome of them would ſay thus, Bleſſed be thou O my youth which haſt not ſhamed my old old age, (אילו אנשו מעשה These were called men of performances) And others would ſay, Bleſſed be thou O my old age which haſt gainſaid my youth. (Theſe were Chaſidin and men of repentance.) And both of them would ſay, Bleſſed is he that hath not ſinned, and he that hath ſinned and his ſin is pardoned.

At length wearineſs, ſleepineſs, and ſatiety with their mirth, concludes the jollity till another night, and ſo they part, ſome to their own homes, and others ſtay the night out in their places ſtill, מנמנמי אכתפא דהדרי nodding and ſleeping ſometimes as they ſtood or ſat, upon one anothers ſhoulders, even while the ſport was in hand.

And now to come to ſearch after the reaſon of this ſtrange and extraordinary jucundity at this time, it were no great difficulty to ſhew ſome cauſe why they might be more merry at the Feaſt of Tabernacles than at other Feſtivals, namely becauſe they had now inned and gathered all their fruits, and therefore this Feaſt is called The Feaſt of ingathering in the end of the year, Exod. 23. 15, 16. But why they ſhould take up ſo great joviality, upon the pouring out or drawing of the water mentioned, is ſomewhat ſtrange to obſerve, and not eaſie to reſolve.

* Toſapht. ubi ante. * Rabbi Akibah giveth this reaſon of the pouring out the water: The Law ſaith, (he ſaith) Bring an Omer of Barly at the Paſſover, for that is the ſeaſon of Barly, that the Corn may be bleſſed. Bring wheat and the firſt fruits at Pentecoſt, which was the ſeaſon of trees, that the fruit of trees may be bleſſed to thee. Bring נסוך המים the libation of water at the Feaſt of Tabernacles, that the ſhowres may be bleſſed to thee. And accordingly it is ſaid that whoſoever will not come up to the Feaſt of Tabernacles ſhall have no rain. For now was the time of the latter rains, Joel 2.23.

* Maym. ubi ante. * Maymony giveth this as the cauſe of the rejoycing, Becauſe it was the rejoycing for the keeping of the Law, to which no joy can be comparable: And therefore ſaith he, The common people, and every one that would, were not actors in this rejoycing, for they neither ſang nor danced, but were only ſpectators, but the actors were the great men of Wiſdom and Religion.

* Talm. Jeruſ. ubi ſupr. But remarkable is that paſſage in the Jeruſalem Talmud, upon this queſtion, * Rabbi Levi ſaith, Why is the name of it called בית חשואבה The drawing of water? משמשם שואבים רוח הקדש Becauſe of the drawing or pouring out of the Holy Ghoſt: according to what is ſaid, With joy ſhall ye draw water out of the wells of Salvation, Eſay 12.3.

W'

Whatsoever was the reason, this was the manner of their carriage at this Feast, and upon this occasion: the observation of which helpeth to illustrate that passage in Joh. 7. 37,38. which seemeth plainly to allude to this custom. For our Saviour in the last and great day of this Feast, (as *vers.*2.) when they had all the seven days kept this great mirthfulness in reference to the drawing and libation of water, out of the Pool Siloam, (which by some of their own confession referred to the pouring out of the Holy Ghost) he stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst let him come to me and drink: He that believeth on me, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water: speaking this of the spirit, &c. As if he had said to this purpose to them in more large expressions. Is it so much rejoycing to you to draw water out of Siloam, and pour it out, which doth but typifie the pouring out of the Holy Ghost? I tell you I am he that can give you living water, and on him that believeth in me, shall the Holy Ghost be so abundantly poured out, as if streams of living water were alway flowing out of his belly. And to confirm this his saying by a miracle, he doth presently after give sight to a man born blind, by sending him but to wash in the pool of Siloam, *Joh.*9.7.

Thus was the celebration of the Feast of Tabernacles day after day. Every day they came with their branches to the Temple, had the Hallel sung, drew water out of Siloam, and poured it and Wine upon the Altar, incompassed the Altar, and sung their Hosanna, and at night had the rejoycing for the drawing of the water. Only there was this difference among the days; that on the night before the Sabbath that fell within the Feast, and on the night before the eighth day, which was a holy day, they used not their dancing, singing and rejoycing, but on the seventh day they went about the Altar seven times, missed their dancing that night, and on the eighth day had the same solemnities with the days before, ate their Pomecitrons which they might not do before: and at night had the great rejoycing in the Court of the Women, and so concluded the Feast: And therefore this by the Evangelist is called not only the last day, but also the great day of the Feast, both because it was a holy day, and because it was the conclusion.

SECT. V.

Of the Feast of Trumpets, and Feast of Dedication.

OF the Feast of Trumpets and Dedication we have not much to speak, because they had not much peculiar at the Temple more than they had all over the land: save that there was with the sounding of Trumpets at the Temple, some additional Sacrifices the first of Tisri, which was the first day of the year: for which there is the injunction and the story, Num. 29.1,2, 3. Only this Tradition crept into that practise, (a) That whereas in other places the beginning of the year was sounded with a Trumpet of Rams or Sheeps horn: at the Temple there was that and two silver Trumpets also used, (b) and the Levites on that day sung the 81 Psalm.

(b) Talm. in Rosh. hashanah. fol. 31.

The Feast of Dedication of which there is mention, *Joh.*10.22. had its original, from the regaining and restoring of the Temple Altar and Service from the hands of the Syrogrecian Tyrants, who had defiled, spoiled and ruined them. The institution of the Feast was by victorious Judas Machabeus and his brethren and the whole Congregation appointing it (c) from the five and twentieth day of the month Cisleu, eight days forward: which fell about the former part of our December. The greatest owning of this Feast at the Temple in the service there was by singing over the Hallel every day of the eight, as hath been mentioned heretofore. (d) And the greatest Ceremony of this Feast in all other places was, the lighting of Candles every evening, and setting them up at the doors of their houses to burn in the night: And to such supererogation in this point, did some grow in time, that they used to light up a Candle for every one that was in their Family. Nay some yet would go so high, as to double that number every night: as if there were ten in his house, he lighted up ten Candles the first night of the Feast, and twenty the second, and thirty the third, and so still encreasing that on the eighth night he lighted up eighty Candles.

(d) Maym. in Chanuchab per. 3.

The reason of the Celebration of this Feast in this manner, is given by the Author cited next above in the Margin, in these words: (i) When Israel prevailed against their enemie, and destroyed them, it was the five and twenticth day of the month Cisleu, and they went into the Temple, and found not there any pure oil, but only one Bottle: And there was no more oil in it, than to keep the Lamps burning for one day only: yet, did they light them with it:

(i) Id. ibid.

* Gloss. ibid. * And a miracle was shewed there withal (saith his Glossary there) for it maintained the Lamps burning eight nights: whereupon the wise men of that generation, did on the next year appoint these eight days for days of rejoycing and praise and for lighting up of candles at the doors of their houses.

SECT. I.

The King reading the Law.

* Deut. 13.10, 11.

MOSES had commanded, saying * At the end of every seven years, in the solemnity of the year of release in the Feast of Tabernacles when all Israel is come to appear before the Lord thy God, in the place which he shall choose, thou shalt read this Law, before all Israel in their hearing: The circumstances of time, place, and person, for this reading, the Jews do determine thus. || The reader was to be the King, the place, in the Court of the women, and the time, towards the end of the first holy day in the Feast of Tabernacles weeks. There was then a pulpit of wood set up in the midst of the Court of the women, for thither might women and children come to hear, as they were injoyned, per. 12. which they might not do into the upper Court: And the King goes up into the Pulpit and sits him down. The Minister of the Congregation חזן הכנסת takes the Book of the Law and gives it to the chief of the Congregation or Head of the Congregation, ראש הכנסת) The chief of the Congregation or Head of the Synagogue (for now they were in a Synagogue model) gives it to the Sagan, the Sagan gives it to the High-priest, and the High-priest to the King. The King stands up to receive it, and standing uttereth a Prayer, as every one did that was to read the Law in publique before he read: and then if he thought good he might sit down and read, but if he read standing, it was thought the more honorable, and so it is recorded that King Agrippa did when he was upon this imployment.

|| Talm. in Sotah. per. 7. R. Sol. in Deut. 31. Maym. in Hagigah. per. 1.

He began to read at the beginning of Deuteronomy, and read to vers. 10. of the 6. Chap. Thence he skipt to the thirteenth verse of the eleventh Chapter, and read to the two and twentieth verse of the same Chapter. There he skipt again to the two and twentieth verse of the fourteenth Chapter, and read to the second verse of the nine and twentieth Chapter. For they thought it was enough if he read those portions only, that were most pregnant and pertinent for the stirring of them up, to the observing of the Commandments, and for the strengthening of their hands in the Law of truth. And the Talmud relates of King Agrippa, that when he was upon this Service, and came to read that passage in Deut. 17.15. One from among thy brethren thou shalt set King over thee: thou mayest not set a Stranger over thee which is not thy brother, his eyes trickled down with tears, in remembrance that he was not of the seed of the Jews, so that the people were glad to chear him up, and cried out three times to him, Fear not Agrippa, thou art our brother.

The reading is called, פרשת המלך The lection of the King, and it is reckoned by the Jews to be one of those eight things that must undispensably be uttered in the Hebrew Tongue: Those eight things are these,

1. The words of him that presented his first fruits, Deut. 26. 5.
2. The words of the woman that pull'd off the shoe, Deut. 25. 7, 8, 9.
3. The blessings and the curses, Deut. 27. & 28.
4. The blessing of the Priests, Numb. 6. 24, 25, 26.
5. The blessing of the High-priest on the day of Expiation.
6. This lection of the King.
7. The words of the Priests incouraging to battel, Deut. 20. 3.
8. The words of the Elders over the beheaded Heifer, Deut. 21. 7, 8.

SECT.

SECT. II.

The Prieſts burning of the red Cow.

THE Law about burning a red Cow to aſhes, and the uſe of thoſe aſhes for the purifying of thoſe that were unclean by the dead, is given and deſcribed at large in *Num.*19. and the ſignificancy of that rite and other ſprinklings is touched upon Heb. 9.13. The manner of their going about and performing this great buſineſs) for ſo it was not unjuſtly held, becauſe it was for the cleanſing from the greateſt uncleanneſs) was exceeding curious, and their circumſpection about the matter was ſo nice and great, that in none of the Ceremonious performances, they ſhewed more Ceremony than in this.

Not to trace their great curioſities in chooſing out a Cow that was exactly fit for this buſineſs, and how many exceptions and cautions, and ſcrutinies they had about her, which are nicely diſcuſſed in the two firſt Chapters of the Treatiſe Parah: Nor to diſpute whether (a) this work of burning her, belonged only to the High-Prieſt, or whether another might do it as well as he: the managing of that buſineſs when it came to it, was after this manner. (a) *Vid. Iuchaſ. fol.*13. *R. Sol. in Numb.*19.

(b) Seven days before a Cow was to be burnt, the Prieſt that was to burn her, was put apart into a Chamber of the Temple, which ſtood in the North-eaſt Angle of the Court of Iſrael, which was called בית האבן The houſe of ſtone, meaning The houſe of ſtone veſſels, as we have cleared it, in the ſurvey and deſcription of it: And the reaſon of this his ſeparation was, that he might be ſure to be free for all that time from any Pollution by a Grave or Corps: For ſince the aſhes of this burnt Cow was the great and only purger from that defilement, it was their choiſe, care and heedfulneſs, that they ſhould be clear from that defilement, that went about the burning of her, or ſprinkling her aſhes. (b) *Talm. in Parah per.*3. in Miſnuth. & Iomа per. in Gemarah.

When the day of her burning came, the Prieſt that was to do it, and they that were to accompany him in that work, (c) marched out at the Eaſt-gate of the Mountain of the Temple, which Gate was alſo called Shuſhan, and went over the Valley of Cidron to Mount Olivet, to a pitch of the Hill juſt over againſt the Gate where they had come out, and in the face of the Temple: (d) all the way over the Valley was a Cauſey made upon double Arches, that is, one Arch ſtill ſtanding upon two Arches, and ſo levelled on the ſurface as made a plain and even way all along: And the reaſon of this great coſt and curioſity was, that all the way might be ſecure againſt unſeen or unknown graves (by which theſe paſſengers might have been defiled) the ſtone Arches not permitting to interre a Corps. The like Arches for the like prevention, we have obſerved in its due place, were all under the Courts of the Temple, and the like Archedneſs was there on Mount Olivet, under the very place where the Cow was to be burnt, for the ſame ſecurity. (c) Middoth. per. 1. (d) *Maym. in Parah per.*3. *Sepher Hamper.*4. & Talm. in Parah. ubi ſupr.

The Elders of the People marched before the Prieſt and his company all along this Cauſey, to the place of the burning, and there when the Prieſt came up, they laid their hands upon him, and called upon him to bath himſelf, for there was a place for that purpoſe, and ſo he did. Then was the Pile made of Wood in and on which ſhe was to be burnt; and tying her legs with Cords, they lay her on, her head lying toward the South, and her face turning to the Weſt. The Prieſt ſtanding on the Eaſt ſide of her, and his face toward the Weſt, kills her with his right hand, and takes the bloud with the left.

Now it was commanded by the Law, that the ſprinkling of her bloud ſhould be directly before the Tabernacle of the Congregation ſeven times, *Numb.*19.4. For the anſwering of which command, the Prieſt having ſlain her, and taken her bloud, did ſprinkle it ſo many times towards the Temple, looking directly over the Gate Shuſhan upon the Porch of the Temple: the Battlements of which Gate were for this very purpoſe made lower than the Battlements of any other of the Gates about the Sanctuary; that over it he might ſee the face of the Porch which through it he could not reach to do.

Having ſprinkled her bloud, he ſets his Pile of Wood afire, and ſets her a burning, and as ſhe was burning he takes Cedar Wood and Hyſop, and Scarlet Wool, and ſhews them and ſaith to the ſtanders by, This is Cedar wood, this is Cedar wood, this is Cedar wood, three times over, and they anſwer him three times over, well, well, well: ſo likewiſe he ſaith, This is Hyſop, this is Hyſop, this is Hyſop; This is Scarlet wool, this is Scarlet wool, this is Scarlet wool, and they anſwer him as before, three times to either of them, and then he caſts thoſe things into the fire, and they burn all together.

When all was burnt, they took up the aſhes, and pounded and ſifted them, and one part part of them they laid up in ſome place of Mount Olivet for the ſprinkling of the People: Another part was delivered to the four and twenty Courſes for the ſprinkling of the Prieſts, and a third part was laid up in the Chel, or incloſure of the Court, to be kept for a Memorial. Nine of this Kine were burnt between the firſt giving of the Law about this Rite, and the fatal fall and deſtruction of the Temple. One in the time of Moſes, one burnt by Ezra, two by Simeon the juſt, two by Jochanan (c) the father of Matthias, one by Elioenai the ſon of Hakkoph, one by Hanameel Hammizri, and one by Iſmael the ſon of Fabi; and the Jews look for a tenth in the days of the Meſſias; where, by the way, we cannot but obſerve how their traditions had increaſed their defilements: for two of theſe Kine ſerved till Ezra's time, which was near upon a thouſand years, and the time after, which was not half the ſpace, took up ſeven.

(c) Inchaſin fol. 16.

Now whereas the Law enjoined that for the cleanſing of the unclean, theſe aſhes were to be ſprinkled by a clean perſon, Num. 19.18. their Tradition ſtrained it to a perſon that had never been defiled by a dead Corps in all his life; therefore that ſuch perſons might be had, there were Arches wrought in a Rock in Jeruſalem after the manner forementioned, and houſes built over thoſe Arches. And thither as to a place ſecure from Graves, certain Women with Child were brought when they were near the time of their Delivery, and there they were brought to bed. And their Children were there brought up continually for this very imployment, that they might be ready, as they were capable, and and as there was occaſion, to ſprinkle theſe aſhes. Which when any of them went to do, he rode on a ſeat on Oxens backs, firſt to the Pool of Siloam, where he lighted in the water (for there he might preſume there was no Grave to defile him) filled his Pitcher, and got up again, rode to Mount Olivet, beſprinkled the party that was to be cleanſed, and rode in like manner to his Cell again.

SECT. III.

The tryal of the ſuſpected Wife.

THE Law concerning jealouſie, and about the tryal of a Wife ſuſpected, given in *Num.*5. was underſtood and practiſed by the Jews according to theſe Conſtructions and Traditions.

(a) A man before two witneſſes had charged his Wife, ſaying, See thou ſpeak not to ſuch a man; though ſhe did, yet ſhe was ſtill free to her Husband: but if ſhe went with that man into private, and there ſtaid with him ſuch a ſpace, then ſhe was forbidden her Husbands company, and he was to bring her to the Sanhedrin that was next to him; and they ſent with him and her two ſcholars of the wiſe to the great Sanhedrin at Jeruſalem, leſt he ſhould lye with her by the way. Being there they terrified her with terrible and dreadful words, to bring her to confeſs her fault. If ſhe confeſſed that ſhe was defiled, ſhe tore her Matrimonial Writing in pieces and departed, and ſo was divorced. But if ſhe ſtood to juſtifie her innocency, they brought her through the Eaſt Gates (ſaith the Talmud) which are before the door of the Gate of Nicanor. Which Rambam upon the place expoundeth to mean, that they tugged and toyled her up and down the ſtairs of thoſe Eaſt Gates, to bring her by wearineſs and faintneſs to confeſſion. If ſhe yet confeſſed not, but ſtill pleaded innocent, then ſhe was ſet in the Gate of Nicanor, which was the Eaſt Gate of the Court. And the Prieſt that was to put her to her tryal, laid hold upon her boſom and rent her cloaths open, till he had laid her breaſts bare as low as her heart: if ſhe were arrayed in white, black was put upon her, her hair was diſhevelled to hang about her ſhoulders, and if ſhe had Rings or Jewels on, they were taken from her, and he tyed a Cord about her, over her Paps. And whoſoever would might come and behold her, unleſs it were her ſervants. And here the Talmudick Obſervation is not impertinent; (b) With what meaſure one meteth (ſay they) they meaſure to him again. She deckt her ſelf to tranſgreſs, but God defiles her deckinge; She uncovered her ſelf for ſin, God diſcovers her ſhame; She ſtood in the gate to ſhew her ſelf, ſhe is now ſet in the Gate to ſhew her reproach; She ſpread a vail on her head, the Prieſt lays it under her feet; She platted her hair, the Prieſt diſhevels it; She girded her ſelf in a fair girdle, the Prieſt girds her with the girdle of affliction; She deckt her face, her face is ſpit on; She deckt her eyes, her eyes ſtare forth; She made ſigns with her fingers, her nayls are pared; Her thigh firſt began to tranſgreſs and then her belly, therefore her thigh is firſt puniſhed, and then her belly, and her whole body eſcapeth not.

(a) Talm. in Sot. per. 1.

(b) Ibid. & Rab Abhubabh. in menorah. Ner. 1.

Her offering which was in a Wecker Basket the Prieſt put into her hand according to the injunction of the Law, *Num.*5.15,18. Then took he an earthen Pot and put a little water into it out of the Laver, and going within the Temple door, he took up ſome duſt from from under a ſtone that was left looſe for that purpoſe, (where it lay we have obſerved in its proper place) and this duſt he ſtrewed upon the water. Then denounced he the curſe and wrote it in a Book, even thoſe words, *Num.*5.19,20,21,22. If no man hath lien with thee, and if thou haſt not gone aſide to uncleanneſs, &c. But if thou haſt gone aſide, &c. the Lord make thee a curſe, &c. And this water which cauſeth the curſe, ſhall go into thy bowels, and make thy belly to ſwell, and thy thigh to rot. And the Woman anſwered Amen, Amen. Then blotted he the curſes out of the book with the bitter water, and gave her the water to drink. If upon the donuncing of the curſes ſhe were ſo terrified that ſhe durſt not drink the water, but confeſſed ſhe was defiled, the Prieſt flung down the water, and ſcattered her offering among the aſhes; but if ſhe confeſſed not, and yet would not drink, they forced her to drink; and if ſhe were ready to caſt it up again, they got her away that ſhe might not defile the place. The operation of theſe waters (ſay the Rabbins) followed after, though ſometimes it appeared not of two or three years, for ſhe bare no children, ſhe was ſickly, languiſhed, and died of that death.

SECT. IV.

The atoning for a cleanſed Leper.

IN (a) the North-weſt corner of the Court of the Women, there was a piece of Building which was called לשכת המצורעים the chamber, or room of the Lepers, whither the Leper reſorted after his cleanſing in the Country, or at his own houſe. And now I am ſenſible of a miſtake and inadvertency which fell from me in another place, and which I here retract, and crave the Readers patience, and that was in that I aſſerted (in the Notes on John 2.15.) that the Lepers were tryed in this room by the Prieſts, and had acceſs to the Mountain of the Houſe, and to the Publick Service of the Temple. It is true indeed (b) that the Lepers had acceſs to the Publick Service in thoſe Synagogues that were not in walled Towns, being placed there apart by themſelves, ſo that they came not near others, but their offering to come into the Temple did fall under a very ſharp penalty, as was ſhewed before, nay they were excluded even out of Walled Cities. Their tryal therefore was in the Country, and there they were cleanſed by the Prieſt, (c) with variety of Ceremony in the buſineſs: and on the ſeventh day of their cleanſing he ſhaved himſelf again, for he had done ſo before, and waſhed himſelf in water, and then he might come within Jeruſalem. On the eighth day he came up into the Mountain of the Houſe, and brought three Lambs with him, for a burnt offering, ſin offering, and treſpas offering, (d) and bathed himſelf in that room in the corner of the Court of the Women, that was from hence called the Room of the Lepers, (e) When the Migrephah or the Bell, (for ſo let it be called) was rung by thoſe that went into the Temple to burn the incenſe, the Preſident or chief man of the ſtation then ſerving went and fetched him, and whoſoever elſe had been unclean and came now for their purifying, (f) and ſet them in the gate of Nicanor. (g) But here two contrary exigents were to be provided for; for neither might the Leper tread on the ground of the Court, becauſe he yet wanted his atonement, nor might the bloud of the treſpaſs offering which was to be his atonement, be brought out of the Court, and yet it was to be put upon his thumb, great toe, and tip of his ear, *Lev.*14.14. A temper therefore for theſe two repugnacies was this, that he went into the Gate as far as poſſibly he might, ſo that he trod not within the Court. Thither did the Prieſt bring the treſpaſs offering to him, and he ſtretched out his hands into the Court, and laid them upon him. And when he was ſlain, the Prieſt brought the bloud, himſelf ſtanding within the Court, and the Leper ſtretched out his neck, and thruſt his head within the Virge of the Court, and he put ſome of the bloud upon the tip of his right ear; and likewiſe he ſtretched out his hand and his foot within the Virge of the Court, and he put the bloud upon his thumb, and his great toe, and ſo he was cleanſed. The cleanſing of other unclean perſons, as thoſe that had iſſues, and Women after Child-birth, was in the ſame place, and much after the ſame manner, ſave that the blouding of the ear, thumb and toe was not uſed, ſo that they need not a particular diſcourſe by themſelves.

SECT. V.

The manner of bringing and preſenting their firſt fruits.

NOT to inſiſt upon the ſeveral ſorts of things out of which the firſt fruits were to be paid, nor upon the manner of ſetting them apart for firſt fruits at their own homes, of which the Talmud doth debate at large; this being ſomewhat out of the Virge of our diſcourſe, becauſe ſo far out of the Virge of the Temple; their cuſtom and Ceremony in bringing of them up thither and preſenting them there, cometh nearer within our compaſs, and that was thus, (a) All the Cities that belonged to ſuch or ſuch a ſtation, met together at the chief City of the ſtation, and there lodged all night in the ſtreets; and the reaſon of this their gathering thus together, was becauſe they would go together by multitudes, according to what is ſaid, the multitude of People is the Kings honour; and the reaſon of their lodging in the ſtreets was, leſt going into houſes they ſhould be defiled. In the morning the Preſident or chief among them, called them up betime with this note, Ariſe and let us go up to Sion to the Lord our God, and they ſet away: Before them there went an Ox with his horns gilded, and a Garland or Crown of Olive branches upon his head: and a Pipe playing before them, till they came near to Jeruſalem, and they often rehearſed that ſaying, I was glad when they ſaid, Let us go up to the houſe of the Lord, compare Eſay 30.29. They travelled not all day when they travelled, but only two parts of it, becauſe they would not ſpoil their ſolemnity with toyling: when they were come near Jeruſalem, they ſent in a Meſſenger to give notice of their coming, and they flowred and deckt their baskets, and expoſed ſome of the freſheſt fruits to ſight: upon notice of their coming, the chief men of the Prieſthood went out to meet them; and when they were come within the City, they rehearſed theſe words, Our feet ſhall ſtand within thy gates O Jeruſalem: and all the Tradeſmen in their ſhops ſtood up as they came by, and ſaluted them, O our brethren of ſuch a place you are welcome. The Pipe went playing before them, till they came to the Mountain of the Houſe, and when they came there, every one (אפילואג ריפס המלך) yea, though it were King Agrippa himſelf, (ſaith the Tradition) was to take his Basket upon his ſhoulder, and ſo to walk up till he came to the Court; and all the way as they went, they ſaid over the hundred and fiftieth Pſalm, Praiſe ye the Lord, praiſe God in his Sanctuary, &c.

(a) Talm. in Bicc. per. 3. & Maym. ib. per. 4.

Being come into the Court, the Prieſts began and ſung the Thirtieth Pſalm, I will extol thee O Lord, for thou haſt lifted me up, and haſt not made my foes to rejoyce over me.

With his Basket on his ſhoulder, the man begins and ſays, I profeſs this day unto the Lord thy God, that I am come into the Country which the Lord ſware unto our fathers for to give us, Deut.26.3. and then beginning to ſay, A Syrian ready to periſh was my father, &c. he takes down the Basket from his ſhoulder, and holds it by the edges, and the Prieſt putting his hands under it, waves it up and down, and he goes on and ſays, A Syrian ready to periſh was my father, and he went down into Egypt, and ſojourned there with a few, &c. even to the middle of the tenth verſe; and ſo he ſets down his Basket by the ſide of the Altar, and boweth and goeth forth. They uſed by their Baskets as they brought them, to hang Turtles or Pigeons, which were to be for an offering, and the fruits themſelves went to the Prieſts of the Courſe that then ſerved; and the party that brought them muſt lodge in Jeruſalem all night after he had preſented them, and the next morning he might return home. They might not offer their firſt fruits before the Feaſt of Pentecoſt (compare *Act.*2. and *Rom.*8.23.) nor after the Feaſt of Dedication.

SECT. VI.

Their bringing up wood for the Altar.

IT was a ſingular and a ſtrict command, that the fire of the Altar ſhould never go out, *Lev.*6.13. And as the Jews obſerve, that Divine Providence did comply with the keeping of it in, for they ſay, (a) that Rains from Heaven never put the fire out, ſo did the Nation provide for the continual burning of it, by a (b) penalty of whipping decreed, agreed againſt him that ſhould extinguiſh it, and by a conſtant ſupply of wood brought up to the Temple for the maintaining of it. Joſephus ſpeaketh of their Xylophoria, lophoria, or certain set and solemn times, on which the People brought up Wood for this purpose: his words are these, (c) Τῶν ξυλοφορίων ἑορτῆς ἔσης ἐν ᾗ πᾶσιν ἐθος ὑπῆν τῷ βωμῷ προσφέρειν ὅπως μήποτε τεφρὰ τῷ πυρὶ λίποιτο, διαμένει γὰρ ἄσβεστον ἀεί. It was a feast of the wood carrying, at which it was the custom for all to bring up wood for the Altar, that it might not want fewel for the fire, which might never go out. The Talmudick Treatise Taanith, reckoneth nine special days in the year used for this solemn imployment, and alotteth the work to nine special Families of those that are mentioned to have returned out of captivity. (d) The wood-carrying times (saith it) for the Priests and the People were nine. On the first of Nisan, the sons of Arah a son of Judah. On the twentieth of Tammuz, the sons of David a son of Judah. On the fifth of Ab, the sons of Parosh a son of Judah. On the seventh of the same, the sons of Jonadab the son of Recab. On the tenth of the same, the sons of Senaah a son of Benjamin. On the fifteenth of the same month, the sons of Zattu a son of Judah, and with them the Priests and Levites, and whosoever knew not their own Tribe, &c. On the twentieth of the same month, the sons of Pahath Moab a son of Judah. On the twentieth of Elul, the sons of Adin a son of Judah. And on the first of Tebeth, the sons of Parosh came a second time. And on the first of Tebeth there was no station (made by the stationary men) because on that day the Hallel was sung, and there was an additional offering, and an oblation, or bringing up of wood.

(c) Joseph. de Bell. lib. 2. cap. 31.

(d) Tam. in Taanith per. 4.

The wood thus brought up to the Temple, it was first laid up in that building in the North-east corner of the Court of the Women, which was called (e) לשכת בית העצים The wood room, where it was searched by those of the Priests lineage that had blemishes, and so were uncapable of serving at the Altar, whether it had worms or no in it. for any wood that had any worms in it was unclean and unfit for the Altar fire: that that was found free from worms, (f) and so reputed fit for the Altar, was brought up into another room, called (f) also the wood room, and the room Parhedrin, on the South side of the Court of Israel, and there it lay near and ready when there was occasion for its use. That wood that had worms in it, and so might not touch the Altar, was used either for boyling, baking, or frying of the offerings that were boyled, or baked, or fryed, or for keeping fires for the Priests and Levites in their attendance and guards in cold weather.

Ever Honoured,

MY creeping and weak Studies neither able to go, nor ſpeak for themſelves, do (like Pyrrhus in Plutarch) in ſilence crave your Tuition. For they deſire, when they now come to light, to refuge to you, who next to God firſt gave them life. Your incouragement and incitation did firſt ſet me forward to the Culture of holy Tongues, and here I offer you the firſt Fruits of my barren Harveſt. Your tried Learning and tried Love, aſſure me that you both can judge ſoundly, and yet withal will not judge too heavily of my weak endeavours; and ſuch a Patron my Book deſireth. This hath cauſed to you, this preſent trouble, and in me this preſent boldneſs. I know it had been more ſecure to have been obſcure, and not to have come thus to publick Hazzard; for as the Roman ſaid well, It is hard when the World ſhall ſhew me mine infirmities under mine own hand: yet have I had ſome reaſon, to manifeſt my ſelf thus openly to the view of all. Some there be that have hardly cenſured of me for idleneſs and ſloth (as they make it) becauſe (it ſeems) I intrude not every moment into the ſupply of other mens Miniſtries, ſince it hath not yet pleaſed God, to prefer and promote me to a Charge of mine own. I know well the ſaying of the Apoſtle Rom. 1. 14. belongs to all Miniſters, To Greeks and Barbarians, to the wiſe and fooliſh they are all debtors, and (as the Syrian adds) leakrez, they are debtors to Preach: And whoſo is neceſſarily called, and refuſeth, is as bad as the falſe Prophets were, that would run before they were ſent, nay, he may ſeem rather worſe, that when he is ſent will not go. From this cenſure how far I am free, my Conſcience tells me; though I muſt confeſs that I am not ſo haſty as many be, to intrude my ſelf, where is no neceſſity: This hath among ſome purchaſed me the ſkar of ſlothfulneſs: to vindicate which I have here ventured as Children do, to ſhoot another arrow to find one that is loſt:

The Syrian to that verſe adds a word which may well ſerve for a Comment mehhatobh leakrez, I am a debtor, or I ought to Preach loſt: ſo have I hazarded my Credit one way to ſave it another. I know mine own weakneſs, and that this my pains, to Scholars, may ſeem but idle: yet had I rather undergo any cenſure, than the blot of the other Idleneſs, the begetter of all Evil, and of Unthankfulneſs, the hinderer of all Good. This is the cauſe that brings me to a Book, and my Book to you. That by the one I may teſtifie to the World that I love not to be Idle, and by the other witneſs to you, that I love not to be Unthankful. Accept I beſeech you of ſo ſmall a Preſent, and ſo troubleſom a Thankfulneſs, and what I want in Tongue and Effect, I will anſwer in Deſire and Affection: ſuing always to the Throne of Grace, for the preſent proſperity of your Self and your Noble Lady, and the future Felicity of you both hereafter.

Courteous Reader (for ſuch a one I wiſh or none)

I May well ſay of writing Books as the wiſe Greek did of marriage, For a young man it is too ſoon, and with an old man his time is out. Yet have I ventured in youth to become publick, as if I were afraid that men would not take notice of my weakneſs and unlearnedneſs ſoon enough. If I fall far ſhort of a Scholar (as I know I do) my youth might have ſome plea, but that mine attempt can have no excuſe but thy Charity. To that I rather ſubmit my ſelf than to thy Cenſure. I have here brought home with me ſome gleanings of my more ſerious ſtudies, which I offer to thee, not ſo much for thy Inſtruction, as for thy harmleſs Recreation. I bear in mind with me the ſaying of Rabbi Joſihar Jehudah in Pirke Abhoth. He that learns of young Men, is like a man that eats unripe Grapes, or that drinks Wine out of the Wine-preſs: but he that learneth of the Ancient, is like a Man that eateth ripe Grapes, and drinketh Wine that is old. For fear thy Teeth ſhould be ſet on edge, I have brought ſome Variety: I have not kept any Method, for then I ſhould not anſwer my Title of Miſcellanies. I have upon ſome things been more Copious, than other, and (as Rab. Salomon obſerves of Ruth) I have ſometime but ſtood to Glean, and ſometime ſitten down. I hope thou wilt not cenſure me for Judaizing, though I cite them, for it is but (as the Muſician in Plutarch *did) ſetting a Diſcord firſt, that you may better judge of the Conſort: and ſeeing Error, you may the more embrace the Truth. If this my Youthful attempt ſhall provoke any one that is Young to Emulation in the Holy Tongues, I ſhall think I have gained. Adjourn thy ſevere Cenſure till either future Silence, or ſome ſecond Attempt either loſe all, or make ſome Satisfaction. OF

OF KNOWLEDGE OF GOD.

CHAP. I.

OMNE tempus te puta perdidiſſe, &c. ſaith one; All time is loſt that is not ſpent in thinking of God. To be full of thoughts of him is a lawful and holy prodigality: And to ſpend time in ſuch meditations a gainful laviſhing. For this end were the Scriptures given to lead us to meditate of God, by meditating in them day and night, Pſal. 1.2. Herein thoſe fail that never think of God at all, and thoſe alſo that think not of him aright. The Prophet makes this the mark of wicked men, that God is not in all their thoughts. That like the Jews they murder (Zechariah) the remembrance of God even between the Temple and the Altar.

Commendable in ſome ſort was the devotion of the Philoſopher, that in ſo many years ſpoke more with the Gods than with Men. Had his Religion been towards the true God, what could have been asked of him more? I would Chriſtians hearts were ſo retired towards their Creator, that ſo he that made the heart might have it.

The Heathens thought there was a God, but knew not what to think of him. They prayed and ſacrificed, and kept a ſtir to ſomething, but they might well have marked their Churches, Altars and Prayer, with the Athenian Altar Motto Ἀγνώστῳ θεῷ to the unknown God, Act. 17.

Plato attained to the thought of one only God, the Perſians thought he could not be comprehended in a Temple, and Numas thought he could not be repreſented by an image: and for this (ſaith Clem. Alex.) he was helped by Moſes: yet came all theſe far ſhort of the knowledge of God. Nature when ſhe had brought them thus far was come to a non ultra, and could go no further. Happy then are we if we could but right prize our happineſs, to whom the day ſpring from an high hath riſen, and the Son of Righteouſneſs with healing in his wings, upon whom the noon-tide of the Goſpel ſhineth, and the knowledge of God in its ſtrength. Even ſo O Lord let it be ſtill told in Gath, and publiſhed in the ſtreets of Aſcalon, to the rancour and ſorrow of the uncircumciſed, that God is known in Britain, and his Name is great in England.

CHAP. II.

Of the Names of GOD, uſed by Jews and Gentiles.

NO Nation ſo barbarous ſaith Tully, that hath not ſome tincture of knowledge that there is a Deity. And yet many, nay moſt People of the World fall ſhort of the right apprehenſion of God, through three reaſon. Firſt, when they cannot carry their minds further than their ſenſes; and ſo think God hath a Body as they have, that is coloured, &c. Secondly, when they meaſure God by themſelves, and ſo make him paſſionate like man. For men not able to conceive what God is, what his Nature, what his Power, &c. fall into ſuch opinions, that they frame Gods of themſelves: and as is their own humane nature, ſo they attribute to God the like, for his will, actions and intentions, ſaith Arnobius. Thirdly, when they mount above Nature and Senſe, and yet not right, feigning that

Aug. de Trin. lib. 1. cap. 1.

Arnob. con. lib.

God begat himſelf, &c. Hence came the multitude and diverſity of Deities among the Heathen, minting thouſands of Gods to find the right, and yet they could not. Hence their many names, and many fames made by them, that it ſeems, thought it as lawful to make Gods, as it was for God to make them.

At firſt they worſhipped theſe their Deities without any repreſentation, only by their Names: Cælites, Inferi, Heroes, Sumani, Sangui, and thouſands others, the naming of which is more like conjuring than otherwiſe. Nature it ſelf taught men there was ſomething they muſt acknowledge for ſupream ſuperintendent of all things. This light of Nature, led them to worſhip ſomething, but it could not bring them to worſhip aright. Hence ſome adored bruit Beaſts, ſome Trees, ſome Stars, ſome Men, ſome Devils. Some by Images, ſome without, ſome in Temples, ſome without. Thus was Gideons fleece, the Heathen piece of the World all dry: ſet in the darkneſs of the ſhadow of death: But in Jury was God known, and his Name great in Iſrael: By his name Jehovah he expreſt himſelf when he brought them from Egypt, and his glory he pitched among them. They knew him by his Names and Titles of Elohim, Adonai, El, Shaddai, Elion, and his great Name Jehovah, as the Jews do call it. There the Scriptures of the Law and Prophets did teach them, yet they thus nearly acquainted with the true God, forſook him, ſo that wrath came upon Iſrael.

The Rabbinical Jews beſide Scripture words have divers Phraſes to expreſs God by in their Writings. As frequently they call him Hakkadhoſh baruch hu, the holy bleſſed he, in ſhort with four letters, הקבה. Sometime they uſe El jithbarech, the Lord who is, or be bleſſed. Sometimes Shamaiim, Heaven, by a Metonymy, becauſe there he dwelleth. The like Phraſe is in the Goſpel, Father I have ſinned againſt Heaven, Luke 15. 18. The like Phraſe is frequent in England, The Heavens keep you. Shekinah they uſe for a Title of God, but more eſpecially for the Holy Ghoſt. So ſaith Elias levita in Tiſhbi. Our Rabbins of happy memory call the Holy Ghoſt Shekinah gnal ſhem ſhehu ſhaken gnal hannebhiim, becauſe he dwells upon the Prophets. Accordingly ſaith our Nicene Creed, I believe in the Holy Ghoſt who ſpake by the Prophets. Shem, a name or the name they uſe for a name of God, and Makom a place they place for the ſame, becauſe he comprehendeth all things, and nothing comprehendeth him. Gebhurah Strength is in the ſame uſe. They are nice in the utterance of the name Jehovah: but uſe divers Periphraſes for it, ſhem ſhel arbang, the name of four letters. Shem hammejuhhad the proper name, and others. One in Euſebius hath eloquently expreſſed it thus:

Ἑπτα με φωνήεντα θεὸν μίγαν ἄφθιτον αἰνεῖ
Γράμματα τῶν πάντων, ἀκάματον πατέρα.
Εἰμὶ δ' ἔγω πάντων χέλυς ἀφθιτος ἡ τα λυροῦσιν.
Ἁρμοσάμην δίνης ὑφηνιοχοιο μέλη.

Seven ſounding Letters ring the praiſe of me
Th' Immortal God, th' Almighty Deity:
The Father of all, that cannot weary be.
I am th' Eternal Viol of all things
Whereby the melody ſo ſweetly rings
Of Heavens Muſick which ſo ſweetly ſings.

What theſe ſeven Letters are, that do thus expreſs God, is eaſie to gueſs that they be the Letters of the name Jehovah, which indeed conſiſteth but of four Letters, but the Vowels muſt make up the number. Of the expoſition of this name Jehovah thus ſaith Rabbi Salomon upon theſe words, I appeared to them by the name of God Omnipotent, but by my name Jehovah I am not known to them, Exod. 6. 3. He ſaith unto him (ſaith the Rabbin) I am Jehovah, faithful in rendring a good reward, to thoſe that walk before me: and I have not ſent thee for nothing, but for the eſtabliſhing of my words which I ſpake to their fathers: And in this ſenſe we find the word [Jehovah] expounded in ſundry places, I am Jehovah faithful in avenging, (when he ſpeaks of puniſhing) as, and if thou profane the name of thy God, I am Jehovah. And ſo when he ſpeaketh of the performing of the Commandments, as, And you ſhall keep my Commandments and do them, I am Jehovah faithful to give to you a good reward: thus far the Rabbin.

The Alchymiſtical Cabaliſts, or Cabaliſtical Alchymiſts have extracted the name קפו or number whether you will, out of the word Jehovah after a ſtrange manner. This is their way to doit:

Which great Myſtery is in Engliſh thus. Ten times ten is an hundred, five times five is twenty five, behold 125. Six times ſix is thirty ſix, behold 161; and five times five is twenty five, behold קפו or 186. Thus runneth their ſenſeleſs multiplication, multiplying numberleſs follies in their fooliſh numbers, making conjectures like Sybils leaves, that when they come to blaſt of trial, prove but wind. Irenæus hath ſuch a myſtical ſtir about the name Jeſu: which I muſt needs confeſs I can make nothing at all of, yet will I ſet down his words, that the Reader may skan what I cannot. Nomen Jeſu (ſaith he) ſecundum propriam Hebræorum linguam, &c. The name Jeſu according to the proper ſpeech of the Hebrews, conſiſteth of two letters and an half, as the skilful amongſt them ſay: Signifying the Lord which containeth Heaven and Earth: For Jeſu according to the old Hebrew ſignifieth Heaven, and the Earth is called Sura uſſer. Thus that Father in his ſecond Book againſt Hereticks, Cap. 41. on which words I can critick only wit hdeep ſilence. Only for his two letters and half, I take his meaning to be according to the Jews writing of the name Jeſu: ישו who deny him the laſt letter of his name ע, becauſe they deny him for a Saviour. So the Dutch Jew Elias Levita ſaith in expreſs words. The Chriſtians ſay that their Meſſias was called ישוע by the commandment of the Angel Gabriel, becauſe he ſhould ſave all the world from Gehinnom, but becauſe the Jews do not confeſs that he is a Saviour, therefore they will not call him ישוע Jeſhuang, but they leave ע the laſt letter out, and call him ישו Jeſu. After this kind of writing, as Irenæus ſaith, the word conſiſteth of two letters שו and half a letter, that is ר, which may be ſo called, becauſe it is ſo little.

The Chaldee writes the name of God with two Iods above, and a Vowel under thus יְ. From hence ſome have picked an expreſſion of the Trinity: In the two letters, the Father and the Son, and in the vowel the Holy Ghoſt proceeding from both: And from the æquidiſtance of the Letters and Vowel, they gather the diſtinction of the Perſons, and by the nearneſs of all, the unity of Eſſence. Such another conceit hath Bonfinius in his Hungarian Hiſtory. When the Hereſie of Arrius (ſaith he) had got head almoſt over all the world, and was dilated as well by perſecution as by diſputation: a Town in Gaul was beſieged, becauſe it held the Orthodox Faith of the Sons coequality with the Father: God to confirm this their faith ſhewed this Miracle. As the Prieſt was at high Maſs at the Altar, behold three drops of bloud fell from Heaven upon the Altar; lying a while in an equal diſtance one from another, to ſhew the diſtinction of the three Perſons, at laſt, in ſight of all the People, they met together, to ſhew the Unity of Eſſence, ſo the ſtory. But we have a more ſure word of Prophecy: That there are three that bear record in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the holy Spirit, and theſe three are one.

The Chaldee ſometimes uſeth the word דחילא Dehhila and דחלא Dahhalah, fear or terrour for God; becauſe of the fear that is due to him. So Jacob coming from Syria, and being to ſwear to a Syrian, ſwears according to the Syrian or Chaldee Phraſe, By the fear of his father Iſaac, Gen. 31.53. or by the God that Iſaac feared: as Onkelos and Jonathan render it.

CHAP. III.

Of the Phraſe The Sons of God, Gen. 6. and Job 1.

ALL take this Phraſe in Job, to mean the Angels, and truly: in which ſenſe while they have taken it in the ſixth of Geneſis, they ſpoil all: For hence they think, that Angels lay with Women and begat Children. So can Jarchi almoſt find in his heart to think, and ſo Tertullian, Lactantius and others. Some tell what evil Arts theſe Angels taught Women, and how they begat mighty Children of them. How far this conceit is from true Philoſophy, let Ariſtotle cenſure. Merlin in Geffry Monmouth is recorded to be ſuch another hatch, believe it who liſt. His vein of Prophecying can make Alanus de Inſulis think it is ſo, but I muſt needs confeſs, it comes not into my Creed. As ſome conceit that the fallen Angels or Devils here begat Children of Women; ſo the Jews moſt wickedly fable, that Adam begat Children of Devils. Thoſe hundred and thirty years ſay they, that Adam was ſeparated from Eve, Devils came to him, and he engendered with them, and begat Devils, and Spirits and Fiends. And again; Four women are the mothers of Shedhim or Devils, Lilith, Naamah, Ogereth and Mahlath. I believe both theſe alike, for I believe that neither is likely. Both the Chaldees Onkelos and Jonathan render the ſons of Elohim the ſons of the Potentates or Judges, taking the word Elohim in the ſame ſenſe that it is taken, in the middleſt verſe of the book of Exodus, cap. 22.28. Thou ſhalt not curſe Elohim, or the Judges. This opinion is far better than the former, but Chriſtians have a better than this. That the Houſe and Progeny of holy Seth, are the Sons of God, or the Church: and the brood of Cains females were the Daughters of Men. Cypriano di valera, in his Spaniſh Tranſlation of Gen. 4. and the laſt verſe, tranſlates it thus, Entonces commenciaron llamarſe. Then begun men to be called by the name of God, or by the name of the Lord: And in the Margin he explains himſelf thus, that then the Men of Seths Houſe began to be a Publick Church, and to be diſtinguiſhed from Cains Family, and to be called the ſons of God, *Gen.*6.2.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Phraſe Sons of Man.

THis Phraſe is frequent in Scripture and Rabbin Hebrew, but moſt frequent in Chaldee and Syrian. Bene Anaſha, & Bar noſho: In the latter of which the Syrian uſually writeth אנשא but leaveth out the firſt letter: as that tongue doth frequently in other words uſe the like ecclipſis, writing not as they read, as it is ſaid of the French: Ezekiel in his Prophecy in Scripture Hebrew is frequently called ſon of man. Why ſo often he and no other Prophet ſhould be ſo ſtiled, reaſons are given by divers: To me (though far inferiour to all them) the ground work ſeemeth to be, becauſe his Prophecy was written in Chaldean Captivity, he uſeth the Chaldean Phraſe, Son of man, that is, O man. The ſame Phraſe Daniel uſeth in Chaldea, *Dan.*10.16.

CHAP. V.

Of Japhets Plantation by his ſon Javan.

JAvan is generally held to be Greece. And the Greek Tongue is by all Hebrews called the ſpeech of Javan. The Arabians do ſo ſtile the ſame language. The Syrian in Romans the firſt Chapter, verſe 16. calls the Græcians אדמיא upon what reaſon I cannot imagine. Javan the ſon of Japhet is held to have planted or peopled this Country, in memory of whoſe name the Iones are famous Monuments: Moſes ſaith he had four ſons, Eliſha, Tarſhiſh, Cittim and Dodonim: which it is likely planted all the Country of Greece as far as into Italy. Eliſha and Dodonim dwelt at firſt near together, and ſo did Tarſhiſh and Cittim, but their Poſterity ſcattered far and near. The Jeruſalem and Babilon Targums do almoſt reſolve us of theſe four Mens Plantations: For Jonathan reads the fourth verſe of the tenth of Geneſis thus. And the ſons of Javan, Eliſha, Eliſ, Tarſus, Acacia and Dardania. Jeruſelamy thus: And the ſons of Javan, Eliſha, and the names of their Provinces, Alaſtaraſom and Dodonia. Which laſt word Alaſtaraſom I take to be miſtaken, by joyning two words together, and miſſing the laſt letter ם Mem for ס Samech, which is eaſily done they be ſo like. The word Alaſtaraſom ſhould without doubt be Alas or Elis Tarſus. Elis frequent in all Authors: Eliſion in Homer in Bæot. Elenſine in Plutarch in Theſeo, are places in Greece bearing the name of their old Planter Eliſha. Dodonim is regiſtred in the name of old Dodona. Tarſhiſh left a memorial of himſelf in Cilicia in the City of Tarſus. Which was as Pliny ſaith urbs libera a free City, nat. hiſt. lib. 5. and Saint Paul is free of that City, *Act.*22.

Tarſhiſh in *Gen.*10. is the name of a man, in Jonah 1.3. in Chald. Paraphraſe it is uſed for the Sea. In *Exod.*28. for a * Pearl; in *Act.*22. the name of a Town. I think I may ſafely ſuppoſe that the Town took the name from the Man, the Sea from the Town, and the Pearl from the Sea.

Cittim got into the Iſle Cyprus near his brother Tarſhiſh: from him that Iſland in old time was called Cethin as Ant. di Guevara nameth it in Relox de los princip. And the Men of Cyprus acknowledged Cythnon quendam, one Cythnus (or Cittim) for their Predeceſſor as ſaith Herodotus lib. 7, That Iſland ſet out Colonies further to repleniſh the Weſtern World: who bare the memory and name of their Father Cittim with them all along as they went. Macedon or Macetia is called Cittim, 1 *Mac.*1.1. At laſt they arrived in Italy which is called Cittim, *Num.*24.24. and ſo rendered by the Chaldees. Thus Javans poſterity grew great in Greece and Italy, and at laſt ſent us men over into theſe Iſles of the Gentiles.

* The Pearl Tarſhiſh in Ex. 28.20. is rendred in Engliſh a Beryl: in the Chalde Tranſlations it is kermum iamma, a Pearl of the Sea: Pliny ſpeaks of keramides a Pearl near that name Terus: Targum thinks Tarſhiſh was Aſhers ſtone: but Jonathan that it was Zebulons: And more likely for a Pearl of the Sea is not unfit for Zebulon a dweller by the Sea, *Gen.*49.13.

CHAP. VI.

Of Jewiſh Learning.

THE Jews chief Studies are about the Scriptures or about the Hebrew Tongue, but ſome have dealt in other matters. Their Tongue is their chief Learning, which is indeed the ground of all ſacred knowledge. In it ſome are moſt ignorant, and ſome again as accurate. They value it ſo highly, that the miſtaking of a Letter in it ſay they, deſtroys the world. He that in this verſe En kadoſh caihovah, readeth Beth for Caph, makes it, there is no holineſs in Jehovah, and deſtroyeth the world. He that will will may ſee moſt copious work of this nicety in Tauch, on Gen. 1. How nimble Textualiſts and Grammarians for the Tongue the Rabbins are, their Comments can witneſs. But as in Chaucer the greateſt Clarks are not the wiſeſt men, ſo among them, theſe that are ſo great Textualiſts, are not beſt at the Text. In humane Arts ſome of them have practiſed. Kimchi and Levita for Grammar, Rabbi Simeon for Logick, and others in other things, as Buxdorfius in his collection of Jewiſh Authors will fully ſatisfie.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Talmud.

WHO ſo nameth the Talmud, nameth all Judaiſm, and who ſo nameth Miſhneh, and Gemara, he nameth all the Talmud: And ſo ſaith Levita Hattalmudh nehhlak, &c. The Talmud is divided into two parts, the one part is called Miſhneh, and the other part is called Gemara, and theſe two together, are called the Talmud. This is the Jews Councel of Trent, the foundation and ground work of their Religion. For they believe the Scripture as the Talmud believes, for they hold them of equal authority: Rabbi Tanchum the ſon of Hamlai ſaith, let a man always part his life into three parts. A third part for the Scriptures, a third part for Miſhneh, and a third part for Gemara. Two for one, two parts for the Talmud for one for the Scriptures. So highly do they, Papiſt-like, prize the vain Traditions of Men. This great Library of the Jews is much alike, ſuch another Work upon the Old Teſtament, as Thomas Aquinas his Catena aurea is upon the New. For this is the ſum of all their Doctors conceits and deſcants upon the Law, as his is a Collection of all the Fathers Explications and Comments upon the Goſpels. For matter it is much like Origens Books of old, ubi bene nemo melius, &c. and where they write well, none better, and where ill, none worſe.

The word Talmud is the ſame in Hebrew, that * Doctrine is in Latine, and Doctrinal in our uſual ſpeech. It is (ſay the Jews) a Commentary upon the written Law of God. And both the Law and this (ſay they) God gave to Moſes, the Law by day, and by writing, and this by night and by word of mouth. The Law was kept by writing ſtill, this ſtill by Tradition. Hence comes the diſtinction ſo frequent in Rabbins, of Torah ſhe baccathubh, and Torah ſhe begnal peh, the Law in writing and the Law that comes by word of mouth, * Moſes (ſay they) received the Law from Sinai, (this Traditional Law I think they mean) and delivered it to Joſhuah, Joſhuah to the Elders, the Elders to the Prophets, and the Prophets to the men of the great Synagogue. And thus like ſame in Virgil, crevit eundo, like a ſnow-ball it grew bigger with going. Thus do they father their fooleries upon Moſes, and Elders, and Prophets, who (good men) never thought of ſuch fancies, as the Romaniſts for their Traditions, can find Books of Clemens, Dionyſius, and others who never dreamed of ſuch matters. Againſt this their Traditional, our Saviour makes part of his Sermon in the mount, Matth. 5. But he touched the Jews freehold, when he touched their Talmud, for greater Treaſure in their conceits they had none: like Cleopatra in Plutarch, making much of the Viper that deſtroyed them.

* Elias Lev. in Tisbi.

* Pirk. Abhoth Per. 1.

CHAP. VIII.

Talmudiſme.

TO omit the time when it was written, and the diſtinction of Jeruſalem and Babilon Talmud: the chief end of them both (as they think) is to explain the Old Teſtament. The Titles of the Books ſhew their intents. Peſachin about the Paſsover, Sanhedrin about the high Courts: Beracoth about thankſgiving. Sometime they Comment, ſometime they Allude, ſometime Controvert, ſometime Fable. For this Book contains their Common Law and Civil, and commonly ſome things above all Law and Civility. To inſtance in one or two, that by Hercules foot ye may gueſs his body.

Judges 9. 13. It is ſaid by the Vine, ſhall I leave my Wine which chearath God and Man? How doth Wine chear God? Rabbi Akibhah ſaith, becauſe men give God thanks for it.

There alſo they queſtion or controvert, whether a man ſhould give thanks, or ſay grace for his meat and drink before he taſte it?

And otherwhere, whether a man may bleſs God for the ſweet ſmell of Incenſe which he ſmells offered to Idols?

Whether a man may light a candle at another candle that burns in a candleſtick that hath Images on it.

Whether

Whether a man at his Devotions, if a Serpent come and bite him by the heel, may turn and ſtoop to ſhake her off, or no? Which queſtion Rabbi Tanchum anſwers very profoundly, that they muſt not ſo much as ſhake the foot to get a Serpent off, and gives a huge ſtrong reaſon: For (ſaith he) ſuch a one was praying, and a Serpent comes and catcheth him by the heel: He holds on his Devotion, and ſtirs not, and preſently the Snake falls away ſtark dead, and the man not hurt: Legenda aurea hath not the Art of this coining beyond them.

For their alluſions, take a piece out of the book Mincha, which I have tranſcribed and tranſlated into our own Tongue full of true Talmudiſme.

Our Rabbins teach, Iſrael is beloved, becauſe God hath favoured them with the Commandment of Philacteries, upon their heads and upon their arms, fringes upon their garments, and marks upon their doors. And concerning them, David ſaith, Seven times a day do I praiſe thee, becauſe of thy righteous Judgments: At the time that David went into the bath, and ſaw himſelf ſtand naked, he ſaid, wo is me that I ſtand naked without the * Commandment, but when he remembred the Circumciſion in his fleſh, his mind was at quiet. Afterward when he went out, he made a ſong of it, as it is ſaid: To him that excelleth upon Sheminith (or an eight) a Pſalm of David: becauſe of the Circumciſion that was given on the eighth day. Rabbi Eliezer the ſon of Jacob ſaith, whoſoever hath Philacteries upon his head, and Philacteries upon his arm, and fringes upon his garments, and a mark on his door, all this will keep † him from ſinning, as it is written, A threefold cord is not eaſily broken. And he ſaith, the Angel of the Lord pitcheth round about thoſe that fear him to deliver them, &c. Qui Bavium non odit, amet, &c.

* Heb. Mitſuah or without my Philacterits.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Cabaliſts.

THESE ſhould be men of great account, for their Trading is chiefly in numbers: but the effect of their Studies prove but fetches nullius numeri, of no reckoning. Their ſtrange tricks and ſleights of invention, how to pick out a matter of nothing, out of a thing of no matter, is ſo intricate, that I do not much care if into theſe ſecrets my ſoul do not come. Their Athaſh is a ſtrange crotchet beyond the moon: it is deſcribed by the great Buxdorfius in his Abbreviaturæ.

Their Raſhe & Sophe tebhoth, their Notericon, and Geometria, whether to call them Cabaliſtical, Maſoretical, or Phantaſtical I know not: they have paid the margin of the Bible with ſuch conceits. I could give examples by hundreds, but it were but Δώρον ἄδωρον a preſent worſe than none at all.

CHAP. X.

Gideons Army. Joſh. 7.

Gideons Army repreſents the Church viſible and inviſible: for as in his Army all the company marched alike, and uſed the ſame Military Diſcipline, and yet two and twenty thouſand were cowards, and returned from him for fear, at the well Harodh, which it may be was called Harodh, or fear, from their fearfulneſs; ſo in the Church viſible, men uſe the ſame Word, the ſame Sacraments, and the ſame outward Profeſſion, yet are many of them but cowards in Chriſts warfare when it comes to the trial. Gideons trial of his Souldiers by lapping water, and kneeling to drink was a good piece of Military Diſcipline: for thoſe that lapped in their hands, ſhewed their nimbleneſs in march, who could drink and not ſtay, but thoſe that kneeled down, made a ſtop in their marching.

Gideons fight is much like Jerichoes ſiege, that with Trumpets, this with Trumpets and Lamps, his conqueſt like Abrahams, with three hundred men he overthrows an Army as Abraham did with three hundred and eighteen. Saint Auſten keeps a deplorable ſtir about allegorizing this number three hundred by the Greek letter T tau, to make it reſemble the ſign of the croſs: And ſo he runs both beſides the language and the matter: charity to the good man makes me ambiguous and doubtful whether that fancy be his or not.

CHAP. XI.

A Jeruſalem Tenet, ex Kimchio in Præfat. to the ſmall Prophets.

OUR Rabbins of happy memory ſay, (ſaith he) that every Prophet whoſe name and his fathers name is ſet down in his Prophecy, it is certain that he was a Prophet, and the ſon of a Prophet. He whoſe name, and not his fathers name, it is certain that he was a Prophet, and not the ſon of a Prophet. He whoſe name and the name of his City is ſet down, it is certain that he was of that City. He whoſe name and not the name of his City, it is certain that he was a Prophet of Jeruſalem. *And they ſay, that he whoſe father and fathers fathers name is ſet down in his Prophecy, was a greater man of Parentage, then he whoſe father is only named. As in Zephaniah, Chap.*1. *verſ.*1.

CHAP. XII.

Nun inverſum. Numb. 10. & 11.

IN the tenth of Numbers and the thirty fifth verſe, in theſe words, ויהי בנסוע And when the Ark went forward, the letter Nun is written wrong way, or turned back thus ɔ, to ſhew (ſay the Hebrews) the loving turning of God to the people: And in the eleventh Chapter and firſt verſe, in theſe words, ויהיתעם כמתאננים And the People became as murmurers, &c. The letter Nun is again written wrong or turned back thus, ɔ To ſhew (ſay they) the perverſe turning of the People from God: and thus are theſe two Places written in every true Bible in the World. If the Jews do not here give any one ſatisfaction, yet do they (as Eraſmus ſpeaks of Origen) ſet Students on work to look for that which elſe they would ſcarce have ſought for. Such ſtrange paſſages as theſe in writing ſome words in the Bible out of ordinary way (as ſome letters above the word, ſome letters leſs, and ſome bigger than other) obſerved conſtantly by all Copies and Books, cannot ſure be for nothing: If they ſhew nothing elſe, yet this they ſhew us, that the Text is punctually kept, and not decayed, when theſe things (that to a haſty ignorant beholder might ſeem errors) are thus preciſely obſerved in all Bibles.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Maſſorites.

THESE men are held to be the Authors of the Vowels and Accents: which opinion received by ſome (and thoſe no ordinary men neither) I muſt needs confeſs, I am not ſo fully ſatisfied for, as to believe it. I do indeed admire the Maſſorites pains in obſervation of them in the Bible, but I cannot gueſs by that, that they have done more than obſerved: when a word, either in Letter or Vowel, goes from ordinary rules of Grammar, they have marked, that it does ſo, which a mean Hebrician may do, but why it does ſo, there is either a right Jewiſh reaſon, or none at all given. To exemplifie in one, Gen. 14. 5. the word kederlaomer, is ſo ſtrangely pricked, that one cannot paſs it: I my ſelf obſerved it before ever I ſaw the Maſſoreth: and when I came thither to them for a reaſon, they have done no more but obſerved it, viz. Tebhah bhatha, &c. that Camets is written with two ſchevaes: and ſo of others they ſeldom ſay more. Admirable is their pains, to prove the Text uncorrupt againſt a gainſaying Papiſt. For they have ſummed up all the letters in the Bible to ſhew, that one hair of that Sacred Head is not periſhed. Eight hundred eight and forty marginal notes are obſerved and preſerved for the more facility of the Text. The middle verſe of every Book noted, the number of the verſes in every Book reckoned: and (as I ſaid before) not a Vowel that miſſeth ordinary Grammar which is not marked. So that if we had no other ſurety for the Truth of the Old Teſtament Text, theſe mens pains (me thinks) ſhould be enough to ſtop the mouth of a daring Papiſt.

CHAP. XIV.

Of the marginal Readings.

THAT the margin ſhould ſo often help the Text (as I may ſo ſay) as in 848 places, may ſeem to tax the Text of ſo many errors. But the Learned can find a reaſon why it is ſo. I hope I may ſatisfie my ſelf without any hurt, with this reaſon, till my Learning will afford me a better: Namely, that when they took in hand to review the the Bible, after the Captivity (as all hold Ezra did) that they did it by more copies than one: which when they thus varied, they would not forſake, either becauſe they were loath to add or diminiſh: therefore they took even their varying, one in the Text, and the other in the Margin. Yet do I not think it was done only thus, without ſome more ſpecial matter in ſome places: for the writing of Nagnarah ſo often Nagnar, does make me think (if I had nothing elſe to perſwade me) that theſe Marginals are not only humane corrections.

CHAP. XV.

Ex Kimchio in Jonah 1.

KImchi queſtioning why the Book of Jonah ſhould be Canonical, &c. gives one moſt comfortable reaſon, which upon reading I could not but muſe on. His words are obſervable, and they are theſe. It is queſtionable why this Prophecy is written among the Holy Scriptures, ſince it is all againſt Niniveh, which was Heatheniſh: and in it there is no remembrance (or mention) of Iſrael, and among all the Prophets beſides this, there is not the like. But we may expound it, that it is written to be a * check to Iſrael, for lo a ſtrange People which were not of Iſrael, was ready to repent, and even the firſt time that a Prophet reproved them, they turned wholly from their evil: But Iſrael whom the Prophets reproved early and late, yet they returned not from their evil. Again (this Book was written) to ſhew the great miracle, that the bleſſed God did with the Prophets, who was three days and three nights in the belly of the fiſh, and yet lived, and the fiſh caſt him up again. Again to teach us, that the bleſſed God ſheweth mercy to the repentant of what Nation ſoever, and pardons them though they be many. Hæc Kimchi. Upon whoſe laſt words I cannot but enter into theſe thoughts. Could we look for a Truth from a Jew, or Comfort from a Spaniard? And yet here the Spaniſh Jew affords us both: comfortable Truth, and true Comfort. God will pardon the Repentant, there is a comfortable Truth, and he will pardon them of what Nation ſoever if they repent, there is moſt true Comfort. When a Jew thus Preaches repentance, I cannot but hearken, and help him a little out with his Sermon. That as God is ready to forgive the Repentant of what Nation ſoever, ſo for what Sins ſoever, if they be truly Repented. Here, I except the unpardonable Sin, the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt: which what it is, the Scripture conceals in cloſe words, partly becauſe we ſhould not deſpair, if we fall our ſelves, and partly becauſe we ſhould not cenſure damnably of our Brethren, if they fall into a ſin that is nigh this, ſo that not into it. To maintain the Jews words and mine own, for pardon of Nations and of ſins, I have as large a field as all the Countries and all the Sins of the World to look over. I will only for Countries confine my ſelf to Niniveh, and for Sins to Mary Magdalen. Niniveh a Heathen Town, built by a Wicked Brood, inhabited by a Wicked Crew, yet Repenting Niniveh is Pardoned. Mary Magdalen a manifold Sinner, a cuſtomary Sinner, a moſt deadly Sinner, yet Repenting Mary Magdalen is Forgiven. The Jew brings me into two Chriſtian Meditations about Niniveh, or into two wholſom Paſſions: Fear and Hope. God ſees the Sins of Niniveh, then I know mine are not hid, this breeds in me Fear of puniſhment: But God forgives the ſins of Niniveh, then I Hope mine are not unpardonable: this breeds hope of forgiveneſs Col debhaurau ſhe amar lehareang libhne Adam (ſaith the Rabbin) bithnai im lo jaſhubhu. All the evils that God threatens to men, are threatned with this condition, if they do not Repent. As before the Jew ſpake Comfort and Truth, ſo here he links Comfort and Terror. God threatens Evil, there is Terror, but it is with Condition, there is Comfort. Niniveh finds both in the ſtory, Forty days and Niniveh ſhall be deſtroyed, there is a threatned Terror: But the Lord repented of the Evil that he ſpake to do unto them, and did it not, there is a Comforting Condition. So that as David does, ſo will I hopefully and yet fearfully ſing of Mercy and Judgment: Firſt Mercy, then Judgment: Mercy upon my Repentance, leſt I be caſt down: and Judgment upon my Sins, leſt I be lifted up. Mercy in Judgment, and Judgment in Mercy. Is there any one that deſperately rejects Ninivehs exhibited Mercy? Let him fear Ninivehs threatned Judgment, or is there any that trembles at Ninivehs threatned Judgment? Let him comfort himſelf by Ninivehs obtaining Mercy. But in the mouth of two witneſſes, let the Mercy be confirmed. Let me take Mary Magdalen with Niniveh, and as I ſee in it the forgiveneſs of a multitude of Sinners, ſo I may ſee in her, of a multitude of Sins. Thoſe many Sinners pardoned as one Man, thoſe many Sins made as none at all. Saint Bernard ſpeaking of her waſhing of Chriſts feet, ſays, ſhe came thither a Sinner, but ſhe went thence a Saint: She came thither an Æthiope and a Leopard, but ſhe went thence with changed Skin, and cancelled Spots. But how was this done? She fell at the feet of Chriſt, and with ſighs from her heart, ſhe vomited the Sins from her ſoul. Proſternere & tu anima mea, as ſaith the ſame Bernard.

And

* Heb. Muſar. Inſtruction.

And caſt thou thy ſelf down, oh my ſoul, before the feet of Chriſt, wipe them with thine hairs, waſh them with thy tears, which tears waſhing his feet may alſo purge thy ſoul. Waſh his feet, and waſh thy ſelf with Mary Magdalen, till he ſay to thee as he did to Mary Magdalen, thy ſins are forgiven.

CHAP. XVI.

Of Sacrifice.

SAcrifice is within a little as old as ſin, and ſin not much younger than the world. Adam on the day of his creation (as is moſt probable) ſinneth and ſacrificeth: and on the next day after meditates on that whereunto his ſacrifice aimeth, even Chriſt. Cain and Abel imitate the matter of their fathers piety, Sacrifice; but Cain comes far ſhort in the manner. Abel hath fire from Heaven to anſwer him, and Cain is as hot as fire becauſe he hath not. Noah takes an odd clean beaſt of every kind into his Ark for this purpoſe, to ſacrifice him, after his Delivery. And ſo he does: but for the Chaldee Paraphraſts fancy, that he ſacrificed on the very ſame Altar, whereon Adam and Cain and Abel had ſacrificed ſo long before. I refer it to the belief of a Jew, who by the Poet ſeems to be of a large faith, Credat Judæus apella. Decency and order was obſerved of the Fathers before the Law, for this holy piece of worſhip. God makes Moſes in his Leviticus to bring it into writing. While the Jews Temple ſtood, or while they might ſtand in the Temple, they had their dayly ſacrifice, till the great Sacrificer offering himſelf, cauſed ſacrifice and oblation to ceaſe. Now are the Jews content, and as it appears in their Common Prayer book, they beſeech God to be ſo too, with prayers without ſacrifice, becauſe they have not now acceſs to their ſacrificing place. Their diſtreſs (as they think it) for this very thing, might teach them that Meſſias Nagidh or Chriſt the Prince hath done what Daniel to them, and an Angel to Daniel had prophecied of him.

Whether the Heathens borrowed their cuſtom of ſacrificing from the Jews or from nature, it is not material. Sure I am, that the Jews borrowed ſome of their abominable ſacrifices from the Heathen: Sacrificing of men is Heatheniſh, in Moſes his language: yet was this too frequent among the Jews, uſed alſo in old time by the Athenians and Carthaginians, as witneſs Plutarch, Lactantius and others: and in theſe times by the Indians, as in Cortes, &c. Of this bad uſe (that the Heathen had got) I cannot tell what ſhould be the reaſon, unleſs they thought that cruelty was the beſt offering, or that their gods were more cruel than merciful. Or this reaſon may be given. They had learned either from the Jews, or from their Oracles, or from the Devil himſelf (who cares not to give men ſome light, thereby to lead them to the more darkneſs) that a man ſhould once be offered, who ſhould appeaſe the wrath of God (as Chriſt was) and therefore they in remembrance of this man, did ſacrifice men, either to ſee whether they could light on this man, or elſe in remembrance of him till he ſhould come.

Some condemn Jeptha of this cruelty of ſacrificing his own daughter; who yet in Heb. 11. is commended for his faith: Auſten doubts whether it is to be counted Gods Commandment, that he ſlew his own child. But I think no ſuch doubt is neceſſary, ſince there is no ſuch ſtrictneſs of the words in the Text. A Heathen man in Plutarch when he was told that he muſt either ſacrifice his own child to ſuch a Goddeſs, or elſe his affairs and enterpriſes would not proſper, could anſwer, that he would offer with all his heart ſuch ſacrifice as the Goddeſs would accept, but that ſhe would deſire or would be pleaſed with the blood and murder of his child, he could not be perſwaded. I am ſure Jephta had reaſon to be far better inſtructed in ſuch things as theſe, than any Heathen in the world.

Varro holds that it was not fit that any ſacrifice at all ſhould be offered. His reaſon in Arnobius is: Quia Dii veri neque deſiderant ea, neque depoſcunt; ex ære autem facti, teſta, gypſo, vel marmore multo minus hæc curant. For ſaith he, The true Gods deſire not, nor exact any ſuch matter, and thoſe falſe gods that are made of braſs, mortar, marble, &c. care leſs for them. The Heathen man in his own ſenſe ſaith only, for his meaning doubtleſs is, that the Gods that are true Gods are not delighted with this cruelty of ſlaying beaſts, nor do they for their own ſuſtentation or proviſion deſire men to be at this charge. And ſo the true God which is truth it ſelf, though he commanded ſacrifice, yet was it not meerly in reſpect of himſelf, that he did it, any further than this, that men ſhould by this manner of worſhip, acknowledge their ſubmiſſion and humility and obedience to him. For what cares he for beaſt or bullock, ſince the World is his and all that is in it, Pſal. 50. 12. And Lyranus does ſet down the ſpecial ends wherefore God doth command Iſrael ſo many ſacrifices.

As firſt to wean them from Idolatry: for their ſervice of the true God required ſo much, that they could have hardly any time to think of Idols. And the very beaſts they ſacrificed, might teach them the vanity of the Idols of Egypt which they once ſerved:

ved: Slaying of a bullock, a ram, a goat, might tell them that the Egyptians Apis and Hammon which they worſhipped in theſe forms, were but vanity.

Secondly, By their ſacrifices they acknowledged that they had nothing but what they had received from God, and therefore of their beaſts, corn, wine, &c. they offered him in thankfulneſs ſome of his own.

Thirdly, Theſe ſacrifices were to bear Chriſt in their minds till he ſhould come and make a ful attonement for them. And ſo ſays Lyra, The very beaſts ſacrificed, repreſent Chriſt, an Ox for Patience, a Sheep for Innocence, and an ill ſmelling Goat, for his likeneſs to ſinful Fleſh.

A fourth reaſon might be given, That the people ſtanding and ſeeing theſe beaſts ſlain and fired, might remember their own deſervings, and call to mind their ſins for which this beaſt was thus uſed. Their putting of their hands (the right hand ſaith the Chaldee) upon the head of the beaſt, ſeems to import ſome ſuch a matter as their acknowledgment, of their deſerving of that which the beaſt was ready to ſuffer, death and fire. Whoſoever deſires to be taken up with Allegories about this piece of Gods ſervice, Flaviacenſis will furniſh him: and if he will not do, the Fathers are copious enough, and it may be too much this way.

The Heathen Mariners in ſhip with Jonah, are ſaid to ſacrifice and vow vows; which the Chaldee helps out (as thinking the ſhip and a tempeſt unfit time and place for ſacrifice) thus, they promiſed they would ſacrifice, viz. when they ſhould come aſhore, and vowed vows to become Proſelytes, ſaith Jarchi, or to give Alms to the poor, ſaith Kimchi. Endleſs it were to trace the Heathens, and to ſee how near or how far they be to or from the ſacrifices of the Jews.

CHAP. XVII.

A juſt Judgment.

CRantzius the Denmark Hiſtorian as he hath many delightſom paſſages of ſtory, ſo this eſpecially, I could not but copy out at my reading of it, wherein I ſee God juſt, and murder heavy. One was hired for a ſum of money to murder an innocent Dane. He does the bloody fact, and preſently receives in a purſe his wages of iniquity. A heavy purſe of gold for a while, makes a light heart, but where the guiltineſs grones heavy too, the gold is worth nothing. At laſt the murderers conſcience accuſeth and condemns him like both witneſs and Judge for his bloody fact. His heart and eyes are both caſt down, the one as far as Hell, whither the fact had ſunk, and the other to the Earth, whither the blood. He is now weary of his own life, as erewhile he was of anothers. He ties his purſe of gold (which had hired him to kill the other) about his neck, and offers it to every one he meets as his reward if he would kill him. At laſt he is paid in his own coin, and hires his own murderer with that price wherewith he himſelf was hired. And ſo periſh all ſuch whoſe feet are ſwift to ſhed blood, and he that ſtrikes with an unlawful ſword, be ſtrucken with a lawful again. This mans caſe makes me to think of Cain the old grandſire of all murderers. Of his heavy doom and miſery, and burden and baniſhment. David once groaned under the burden of blood guiltineſs, but God at his repenting eaſed him: Pſal. 51. Judas takes a worſe courſe than even Cain did to be releaſed of the ſting of bloodſhed, Matth. 27. God grant I never know what it is to be guilty of ſhedding of blood, but only by reading.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of the name of the Red Sea.

IN Hebrew it is called Suph: the Sea of weeds: Becauſe (ſaith Kimchi) there grew abundance of weeds upon the ſides of it. In Greek, Latine and Engliſh, and other Weſtern Tongues, it is commonly called the Red Sea: Divers reaſons are given by divers perſons why it is ſo called, the beſt ſeems to me to be, from the redneſs of the ground about it. And ſo Herodotus ſpeaks of a place thereabout called Erythrobolus or the red ſoil. It is thought our Country took the name of Albion, from the like occaſion, but not like colour. As from the white rocks or clifts upon the Sea ſide. The Jews hold that Whale that ſwallowed Jonah, brought him into the Red Sea: and there ſhewed him the way that Iſrael paſſed through it, for his eyes were as two windows to Jonah, that he looked out and ſaw all the Sea as he went. A whetſtone, yet they will needs have ſome reaſon for this loud lie, and this is it, becauſe Jonah in Chap. 2. 5. ſaith Suph hhabhuſh leroſhi, which is, the weeds were wrapped about my head: which they conſtrue, the Red

Read Sea was wrapped about my head. And to help the Whale thither, Rabbi Japhet ſaith, that the Red Sea meets with the Sea of Japho, or the Mediterranean: unleſs the Rabbin means that they meet under ground, gueſs what a Geographer he was: and if he find a way under ground, gueſs what a deep Scholar. A long journey it was for the Whale to go up to Hercules pillars into the Ocean, and from thence to the Red Sea in three days and nights: but the fabling Jews muſt find ſome ſleight to maintain their own inventions.

CHAP. XIX.

Of the word Raca. Matth. 5. 22.

Whoſoever ſhall ſay unto his brother Raca, ſhall be worthy to be puniſhed by the Councel. The word is a Jewiſh nick-name, and ſo uſed in the Talmud for a deſpiteful title to a deſpiſed man, as Our Rabbins ſhew a thing done with a religious man that was praying in the high way, by comes a great man, and gives him the time of the day: but he ſaluted him not again: He ſtayed for him till he had finiſhed his prayer; after he had done his prayer, he ſaid to him Reka, is it not written in your law, that you ſhall take heed to your ſelves? Had I ſtruck off thy head with my ſword, who ſhould have required thy blood, &c. And ſo goes the angry man on. Irenæus hath a Phraſe nigh to the ſignification of this word, qui exputt cerebrum, a man that hath no brains, and ſo Raka ſignifies a man empty, whether of underſtanding or goodneſs: ſo the Greek word κενὸς is frequently taken.

CHAP. XX.

Goſpel.

OUR Saviour ſaith to his Diſciples, the harveſt truly is great, but the labourers are few, Matth. 9. 38.

Whoſoever heareth theſe ſayings, and doth them, I will liken him to a man that built his houſe upon a rock: And the rain deſcended, and floods came, &c.

And every one that heareth theſe ſayings, and doth them not, ſhall be likened to a fooliſh man that built his houſe upon the ſand. Matth. 7. 24, 25. &c.

Of every idle word that men ſpeak, they ſhall give account thereof at the day of Judgement. Matth. 12. 36.

With what meaſure you meet, it ſhall be meaſured to you again. Matth. 7. 2.

Jews.

Rabbi Simeon ſaith: to day is the harveſt, and the work is much and the labourers are idle, and the reward great, and the Maſter of the houſe urgent, Pirk Abhoth Per. 2.

He that learneth the Law, and doth many good works, is like a man that built his houſe, the foundation of ſtone and the reſt of brick, and the waters beat, and the ſtone ſtood, &c.

But he that learneth the Law, and doth not many good works, is like a man that built his houſe, the foundation of brick and the reſt of ſtone, &c. and the brick waſted, &c. Abhoth Rabbi Nathan.

The very ſame words almoſt in Orehhoth hhajim.

Rabbi Mair ſaith, With the meaſure that a man meaſureth, they meaſure to him again, Sanhedrin.

The whole Lords Prayer might almoſt be picked out of their works, for they deny not the words though they contradict the force of it. The firſt words of it they uſe frequently, as Our Father which art in Heaven: in their Common Prayer book, fol. 5. and Humble your hearts before your Father which is in Heaven in Roſh haſhava. But they have as much devotion toward the Father while they deny the Son, as the Heathens had which could ſay Ζεῦ πατὲρ ἠμέτερε κεφιδη. * Our Father Jupiter, and worſhipped an unknown god, Act. 17. They pray almoſt in every other Prayer, Thy Kingdom come, and that Bimherah bejamenu quickly, even in our days, but it is for an earthly Kingdom they thus look and pray. They pray, Lead me not into Temptation, fol. 4. Liturg. while they tempt him that lead them in the Wilderneſs, as did their Fathers, Pſal. 95. By this Goſpel which they thus filch, they muſt be judged.

* Frequent in Homer.

CHAP. XXI.

Saint Cyprians nicety about the laſt Petition in the Lords Prayer.

SAint Cyprian it ſeemeth is ſo fearful of making God the Author of evil, that he will not think that God leadeth any man into temptation. The Petition he readeth thus: Ne nos patiaris induci in tentationem, Suffer us not to be lead into temptation, but deliver us from evil, leaving the ordinary current and truth of the Prayer, becauſe he will not be acceſſary to imagine that God ſhould lead man into temptation: whereas all men as well as he do think, that God doth not lead man into evil temptations as Sathan doth, and yet that God doth tempt men. So he is ſaid in plain words to have tempted Abraham: And Rabbi Tanchum wittily obſerves that Abrahams two great temptations begin both with one ſtrain, לך לך Get thee gone. The firſt, Get thee gone out of thy Country from thy kindred and fathers houſe, Gen. 12. The ſecond, Get thee gone to the land of Moriah, and offer thy ſon Iſaac upon one of the mountains, Gen. 22.

May we not ſafely ſay here that God lead Abraham into temptation? But as it follows, liberavit a malo, God delivered him from the evil of the temptation, which is being overcome. And Saint James ſaith ſweetly, (though at firſt he may ſeem to croſs this Petition) πᾶσαν χαρὰν: Brethren account it all joy when ye fall into diverſe temptations, Jac. 1.2. to be in temptation is joy, for God chaſtiſeth every ſon that he receiveth, and yet pray lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: let the latter comment upon the firſt, lead us not into the evil of temptation, which in the Apoſtles Phraſe is, ſuffer us not to be tempted above our ſtrength.

CHAP. XXII.

Septuaginta Interpreters.

I Will not with Clemens, Joſephus, Auſten, Epiphanius, and others, ſpend time in locking them up ſeverally in their cloſets, to make their Tranſlation the more admirable: I will only mind that, They did the work of this Tranſlation againſt their will, and therefore we muſt expect but ſlippery doing: And that appears by them. Their additions, variations, and (without doubt) overſights, may well argue with what a will they went about this buſineſs. It were eaſie to inſtance in thouſands of places. How they add men and years, Gen. 5. & 10. & 11. & 46. How they add matter of their own heads: as how they help Jobs wife to ſkold, Job 2. adding there a whole verſe of female paſſion. I muſt now (ſaith ſhe) go wander up and down, and have no place to reſt in: and ſo forth: And ſo Job 1.21. Naked came I out of my mothers womb, and naked ſhall I return thither: the Lord hath given and the Lord hath taken away, even as pleaſeth the Lord, ſo come things to paſs, bleſſed be the Name of the Lord, which clauſe (even as pleaſeth the Lord ſo come things to paſs) is not in the Hebrew but it is added by them, and ſo is it taken from them into our Common Prayer Book, in that part of the manner of burial. To trace them in their miſtakes is pretty, to ſee how their unpricked Bible deceived them. As to inſtance in one or two for a taſte.

Hebrew.	Septuag.
Gen. 15.11. It is ſaid, that the birds light upon the carcaſſes, and Abraham drove them away: in Hebrew וישב vaijaſhhebh.	They read in ſtead of וישב vajaſhhebh he drove them away, וישב vajeſhhebh, he ſat by them: and of this Saint Auſten makes goodly Allegories.
Judges 5. 8. The Hebrew ſaith, they chooſe new gods, then לחם שערים lahhem ſhegnarim, was war in the gates.	They ſay, they choſe new gods, as לחם שערים lehhem ſegnorim, * barly bread.
Judges 7.11. The Hebrew ſaith, and he and Phurah his ſervant, went down to the quarter (or ſide) of חמשים Hhamuſhim the armed men.	They ſay, he and his ſervant Pharah went down to the quarter of חמשים Hhamiſhim, fifty men.

* Ἄρτος κεί-νων.

Thus do they vary in a world of places, which the expert may eaſily ſee and ſmile at. I omit how they vary names of men and places. I will trouble you with no more but one, which they comment as it were to help a difficulty.

1 King.

1 King. 12. 2. It is ſaid of Jeroboam that he dwelt in Egypt, וישב במצרים vaiješhhebh bemitzraijm.

2 *Chron.*10.2. It is ſaid that he returned from Egypt, וישב ממצרים vaijaſhobh mimmitzraijm.

The Septuagint heals this thus, Tranſlating 2 Chron. 10. 2. Καὶ κατώκησεν ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ, καὶ ἀπέστρεψεν ἐξ Αἰγύπτου· And he (had) dwelt in Egypt, and he returned out of Egypt.

Such is the manner of that work of the Greek: Now to examine the Authority of this we ſhall find it wonderful: That ſome of the Jewiſh Synagogues read the Old Teſtament in Greek and not in Hebrew, Tertullian ſeemeth to witneſs. But thoſe were Jews out of Canaan: for they were not ſo skilful in the Greek Tongue in Canaan, for ought I can find, as to underſtand it ſo familiarly: if they had been, I ſhould have thought the Septuagint to be the Book that was given to Chriſt in the Synagogue, Luke 2. 17. Becauſe his Text that he reads, does nearer touch the Greek than the Hebrew: But I know their Tongue was the Meſſadoed Chaldee.

The greateſt authority of this Tranſlation appeareth, in that the holy Greek of the New Teſtament doth ſo much follow it. For as God uſed this Tranſlation for a Harbinger to the fetching in of the Gentiles, ſo when it was grown into Authority by the time of Chriſts coming, it ſeemed good to his infinite Wiſdom to add to its Authority himſelf, the better to forward the building of the Church. And admirable it is to ſee with what Sweetneſs and Harmony the New Teſtament doth follow this Tranſlation, ſometime even beſides the letter of the Old, to ſhew that he that gave the Old, may and can beſt expound it in the New.

CHAP. XXIII.

The Septuagint over-authorized by ſome.

SOME there were in the Primitive Church, like the Romaniſts now, that preferred this Tranſlation of the Greek (as they do the Vulgar Latine) before the Hebrew fountain: Of theſe Saint Auſten ſpeaks, of their opinion herein, and withal gives his own in his fifteenth book de Civitate Dei, Cap. 11. 13, 14. where treating of Methuſhelahs living fourteen years after the Flood, according to the Greek Tranſlation: Hence came (ſaith he) that famous queſtion, where to lodge Methuſelah all the time of the Flood: Some hold (ſaith he) that he was with his father (Enoch) who was tranſlated, and that he lived with him there, till the flood was paſt. They hold thus, as being loath to derogate from the authority of thoſe books, quos in autoritatem celebriorem ſuſcepit Eccleſia, which the Church hath entertained into more renowned Authority: And thinking that the books of the Jews rather than theſe, do miſtake and err. For, they ſay that it is not credible that the ſeventy Interpreters, which tranſlated at one time, and in one ſenſe, could err, or would lie or err, where it concerned them not: But that the Jews, for envy they bear to us, ſeeing the Law and Prophets are come to us by their interpretation, have changed ſome things in their books, that the Authority of ours might be leſſened. This is their opinion. Now his own he gives Chap. 13. in theſe words, Let that Tongue be rather believed, out of which a tranſlation is made into another by Interpreters. And in *Chap.*14. The truth of things muſt be fetched out of that Tongue, out of which, that that we have, is interpreted.

It is apparent by moſt of the Fathers both Greek and Latine, how they followed the Greek, though I think, not ſo much for affectation as for meer neceſſity, few of them being able to read the Bible in Hebrew.

I will conclude with Clemens Alex. his reaſon, why God would have the Bible turned into Greek. Διὰ τοῦτο Ἑλλήνων φωνῇ ἑρμηνεύθησαν αἱ γραφαί, ὡς μὴ πρόφασιν ἀγνοίας περιβάλλεσθαι δύνασθαι] viz. Ἕλληνας ἢ τοὺς ἀπ' ἐθνῶν] ὕντας τε ὄντας ἐπακοῦσαι θεῖ παρ' ἡμῶν ἣν μονὸν ἐθέλησαν. Strom. 1. Pag. 124. That is, For this were the Scriptures interpreted, in the Grecians Tongue, that they might have no excuſe for their ignorance, being able to underſtand our (Scriptures) if they would.

CHAP. XXIV.

Phraſes taken from Jews in the New Teſtament.

THESE Phraſes are by the great Broughton called Talmudick Greek, when Jewiſh and Talmudical Phraſes are uſed in Holy Writ: Such is Gehenna frequent in all Rabbins. Maranatha 1 *Cor.*16.22. the bitter excommunication. The world to come, ſo often uſed in the Goſpel, and nothing more often among the Jews and Chaldees. *Raka Matth.*5.22. of which ſee Chap.19. Jannes and Jambres, 2 *Tim.*3.8. whoſe names I find in in the Chaldee Paraphraſt with very little difference, and a goodly legend of them. As in *Exod.*1.15. Pharaoh ſlept and ſaw in his dream, and behold all the land of Egypt was put in one ſcale and a * young lamb in the other ſcale, and the lamb weighed down the ſcales of himſelf, * out of hand he ſends and calls all the Sorcerers of Egypt, and tells them his dream: Out of hand Janis and Jimbres chief of the Sorcerers opened their mouths and ſaid unto Pharaoh: there is a child to be born of ſome of the Congregation of Iſrael, by whoſe hands all the land of Egypt ſhall be waſted, therefore the King conſulted with the Jewiſh midwives, &c. And in *Exod.*7.11. He calls them Janis and Jambres. And that you might the better underſtand who theſe two were, the Hebrew comment upon the Chaldee Text ſaith, They were Scholars for their art of enchanting to the noble wizard Balaam: and ſo he fetches Zophar for authority to maintain them: And to prove Janis and Jambres either very conſtant enemies and oppoſers to Moſes, or elſe very good dutiful Scholars to Balaam; the Chaldee ſaith, that theſe two were the two ſervants that went with Balaam, Numb. 22. 22. when he went to curſe Iſrael.

* Chal. Talia bar imera. *Chal. Miiadh. out of hand a Phraſe moſt uſual in Jews Authors, and the very ſame in Eng. out of hand.

Beelzebub, or as the New Teſtament Greek calls it Beelzebul, is a wicked phraſe uſed by the Jews of Chriſt, Mark 3.22. and elſewhere. Now whether this change of the laſt letter were among the Jews accidental or of ſet purpoſe, I cannot determine. Such ordinary variation of letters, without any other reaſon, even uſe of every Country affords. So Reuben is in the Syrian called Rubil, Apoc. 7.5. So the Greek and Latine Paulus, is in the Syrian Phaulus, in Arabian Baulus. But ſome give a witty reaſon of l in Beelzebul, that the Jews in deriſion of the Ekronites god Baalzebub (which was a name bad enough, the god of a flie) gave him a worſe, Baalzebul, the god of a Sir-Reverence, for ſo זבל ſignifies in Chaldean.

To omit any more Jewiſh Phraſes honoured by the New Teſtament uſing them, this very thing does ſhew, the care is to be had for the right reading of the Greek, ſince ſo many idioms and ſo many kinds of ſtile are uſed by it.

CHAP. XXV.

Niniveh's converſion: Jonah 3.

THE book of Jonah is wholly compoſed of wonders. Some hold Jonah to be wonderful in his birth. As that he ſhould be the ſon of the Sarepta widow, whom Eliah raiſed to life: And becauſe the mother of the child ſaid, Now I know that the word of God in thy mouth is true, therefore he is called Ben Amittai, the ſon of my truth: whether the ſtory may be called Ben Amittai, or a true ſtory, let the Reader cenſure, by the two Towns of Sarepta and Gath-hepher. Howſoever Jonah was wondrous in his birth, I am ſure he was wondrous in his life. A Prophet, and a runnagate, before his ſhipwrack, a man drowned, and yet alive, in his ſhipwrack, and a Preacher of Repentance, and yet a Repiner at Repentance, after. The leaſt wonder in the book is not the converſion of Niniveh. It was a great wonder (as D. Kimchi ſays) that Jonah was in the belly of the fiſh three days and three nights and yet lived. And it was another wonder that he was not ſtupid but continued in his ſenſes and intellectuals and prayed: And do but well conſider it, and it will appear almoſt as great a wonder, that Niniveh ſo great a Town, ſo long wicked, in ſo ſhort time ſhould be converted. To ſay as Rabbi Joſhuah doth, That the men of the Ship were got to Niniveh, and had told all the occurrence about Jonah, how they had thrown him over hatches, and yet he it was that was among them, and therefore they believed the ſooner, as it is without Authority, ſo doth it leſſen the wonder of the Towns converſion.

* Aben Ezra gives 2. Reaſons of poor force to prove, that Niniveh feared God in old time. 1. Becauſe otherwiſe he would not have ſent his Prophet to them, and ſo he leſſens the wonder of Gods mercy. 2. Becauſe we read not that they brake their images, therefore they had not any. How far the Rab. is beſides the cuſhion both for conſtruction and reaſon one of ſmall skill may judge.

Jonah an unknown man, of a forraign people, to come into ſo great a City with a Fourty days and Niniveh ſhall be deſtroyed, was ſtrange. But for the King upon ſo ſhort a time, to ſend a cryer to proclaim Repentance, is as ſtrange if not ſtranger. Jonah proclaims the Town ſhall be deſtroyed, the King (in a manner) proclaims, the Town ſhall not be deſtroyed, by proclaiming the means how to ſave it, Repentance. To ſay as * Aben Ezra does, That becauſe the City is called Gnir gedholah leelohim, a great City of God, that therefore they feared God in old time, but now in Jonahs time began to do evil, is ſtill to leſſen the wonder, about their converſion: a ſtranger repentance than which the world never ſaw. The old world had a time of warning, of years, for Ninivehs hours, and yet eat and drunk till the flood came, and then in the floods of many waters, Repentance and Prayers would not come near God, Pſal. 32. Fair warning had Sodom by the preaching of Lot, whoſe righteous ſoul they vexed, and would not repent, till their Hell (as it were) began from Heaven, and fire and brimſtone brought them to the lake of fire and brimſtone: and when the wicked ſeed of him that derided his fathers nakedneſs, periſhed for their naked beaſtlineſs, and their flames of luſt brought them to flames on Earth and in Hell. The men of Niniveh ſhall riſe up in Judgment againſt the generation of the Jews, and condemn them, becauſe theſe at the Preaching of Jonah Repented, and they not for the Preaching of a greater than Jonah, that was among them. When the Maſter of the Vineyard ſent his Servants, nay his own Son, they put him to Death. In the Converſion and Delivery of Niniveh I cannot but admire a double mercy of God, who (to uſe a Fathers words) Sic dedit pœnitentibus veniam, qui ſic dedit peccantibus pœnitentiam: Who was ſo ready upon their Repentance to grant them Pardon, who was ſo ready upon his Threatning to give them Repentance.

Other kind of entertainment (than Jonah had) had he, that came from Gregory Biſhop of Rome, to Preach to our Realm of England. The paſſage of which ſtory our Countryman Bede hath fully related. That when Auſten had Preached the Goſpel to the King, and Dehorted him from his Irreligious Religion; your words (ſaith the King) are good, but I have been trained up ſo in the Religion I now follow, that I cannot forſake it to change for a new. This Argument too many Superſtitious Souls ground upon in theſe days, chooſing rather to Err with Plato, than to follow the Truth with another. Deſiring rather to be, and being as they deſire, of a falſe Religion, than to forſake the Profeſſion of their Parents and Predeceſſors. Not refuſing (like good fellows) to go to Hell for company, rather than to Heaven alone. Such a boon companion was Rochardus King of the Phriſons: of whom it is Recorded, that whereas a Biſhop had perſwaded him ſo far towards Chriſtianity, as that he had got him into the water to Baptize him: the King there queſtions, which way his forefathers went, which died Unbaptized, whether to Heaven or Hell? The Biſhop anſwers, That moſt certainly they were gone to Hell. Then will I go the ſame way with them (ſaith the wicked King) and pulls back his Foot out of the water, and would not be Baptized at all. Hoc animus meminiſſe horret luctuq; refugit.

CHAP. XXVI.

Of the Jews Sacraments, Circumciſion, and Paſſover.

BOTH theſe Sacraments of the Jews were with Blood: both in Figure: the one to carry the Memory of Chriſt till he came, and the other the Paſſion of him being come. Abraham received the ſign of Circumciſion, the ſeal of the Righteouſneſs of Faith which he had when he was Uncircumciſed, Rom. 4. The Iſraelites received the Inſtitution of the Paſſover in Egypt, Exod. 12. I will not ſtand to Allegorize theſe matters, of the time and manner of receiving theſe two, but only of the things themſelves.

Circumciſion given in ſuch a place is not for nothing; but in the place of Generation, it is given Abraham, as a Seal of his Faith, that he ſhould be the Father of all thoſe that believe, Rom. 4. And eſpecially a Seal to him of Chriſts coming from thoſe Loins near to which his Circumciſion was. And appertaining to this I take to be the Oath that Abraham gives his Servant, and that Jacob gives Joſeph, with their Hands put under their Thighs * not to ſwear by their Circumciſion, but by Chriſt that ſhould come from thoſe Thighs. Circumciſion was alſo uſed for diſtinction of an Iſraelite, at the firſt: and hence were they diſtinguiſhed; but in time, Iſmael had taught his race ſo much, and Egyptians, Phœnicians, Arabians, and the Countries about them grew Circumciſed. So was Pythagoras Circumciſed, that he might have acceſs to the recluſe Miſteries of the Egyptians Religion.

* As the Jews think.

Circumciſion was alſo uſed with the Jews as Baptiſm with us, for admiſſion into the Church of Iſrael. And it was Gods expreſs command that the Child on the eighth day ſhould be Circumciſed. And on that day more than any other (ſaith Saint Auſten) to ſignifie Chriſts reſurrection, who reſted the weeks end in the grave, and roſe on the eighth day: And if Ariſtotle ſay true, one may give a reaſon, why not before the eighth day: becauſe a Child for the ſeven days is moſt dangerous for weakneſs. A ſtranger was ſo admitted to their Congregation, Exod. 12.48. And of this does Rabbi Eliezer fantaſtically expound that verſe in Jonah 1.16. Then the men feared the Lord exceedingly, and offered ſacrifice: whereupon the wandring Jew ſaith thus. As ſoon as the Mariners ſaw (when they drew near to Niniveh) all the wonders that the bleſſed God did to Jonah, they ſtood and caſt every one his gods into the Sea. They returned to Joppa, and went up to Jeruſalem, and Circumciſed the fleſh of their fore-skin, as it is ſaid. And the men feared the Lord exceedingly, and ſacrificed Sacrifices: what Sacrifice? But this Blood of the Circumciſion which is as the Blood of a Sacrifice: And they vowed to bring every one his Wife and Children, and all that he had, to fear the Lord God of Jonah: and they vowed and performed.

This was indeed the way to admit Proſelytes, by Circumciſion, but in Salomons time, when they became Proſelytes by thouſands, they admitted them by Baptiſm or Waſhing as ſome Jews do witneſs.

Whether

Whether the neglect of Circumciſion (as I may ſo term it) in the Wilderneſs, were meerly Politick, becauſe of their more fitneſs, for any moments removal, and march, or whether ſome Myſtery were in it I will not decide. Nor need I relate how the Jews uſe to Circumciſe their Children, for the great Buxtorfius hath punctually done it: Nor can I relate how highly the Jews priſe their Circumciſion, for one might gather volums out of them upon this ſubject. For they conſider not, that he is not a Jew, which is one outward: neither is that Circumciſion which is outward in the fleſh. But he is a Jew which is one within, and the Circumciſion is of the Heart in the Spirit, not in the Letter, whoſe Praiſe is not of Men but of God.

CHAP. XXVII.

Of the Paſsover.

THE Paſsover was a full repreſentation of Chriſts paſſion: though to the Jews the Paſsover was more than a meer ſhadow. To run through the parts of it might be more than copious: A word and away.

At the Paſsover the beginning of the Year is changed. } So { At Chriſts Paſsover the beginning of the Week is changed.

The Paſsover was either of a Lamb, to ſignifie Chriſts innocency, or of a Kid, to ſignifie his likeneſs to ſinful Fleſh: as Lyranus.

The Lamb, or Kid was taken up and kept four days, to ſee whether he were ſpotleſs: and (it may be) to ſcoure and cleanſe himſelf from his Graſs.

The Paſsover ſlain at Even.		CHRIST ſlain at Even.
His Blood to be ſprinkled with a bunch of Hyſop.	So	CHRISTS Blood ſprinkled: And of this I think David may be underſtood, Pſal. 51. Cleanſe me with Hyſop. That is, beſprinkle me with the Blood of the true Paſchal Lamb Jeſus Chriſt.
He was to be roaſted with Fire.		So Chriſt tried with Fire of Affliction.

Theſe parts were to be roaſted.

His Head	So was	His Head with Thorns.
His Legs	CHRIST	His Hands and Feet with Nails.
His Inward parts.	Tortured	His Inwards, with a Spear.

Their Eating of him, as it concerned the Iſraelites in their eſtate, ſo may it inſtruct Chriſtians for the eating of the true Paſsover, the Lords Supper.

The Paſsover Eaten	Without Leaven	So the Sacrament of the Supper to be Eaten	Without Leaven of Malice.
	With bitter Herbs		With bitter Repentance.
	With Loins girt		With reſolution of Amendment.
	With Feet ſhod		With preparation to walk Better.
	With Staff in Hand		Leaning on the Staff of true Faith.
	In Haſte.		Haſting to leave this worldly Egypt.

Thus was the Paſsover firſt Eaten in Egypt: after which all Egypt is ſtruck, with death of the Firſt Born, and the Egyptians are now puniſhed with death of their Children for murthering Iſraels Children. This night was ill to them, but the night in the Read Sea was worſe.

At the Death of a Lamb	Egypt is Deſtroyed	So by the Death of a Lamb	Hell is Deſtroyed.
	Iſrael Delivered.		Mankind Delivered.

When Iſrael comes out of Egypt, they bring up with them Joſephs bones, and ſo as he brought them down thither, ſo they bring him up thence.

So when Chriſt comes up out of his Grave, he brings dead bones with him, by raiſing ſome out of their Graves: I cannot think it idle, that the Paſsover was at night, and that S. Paul ſaith, The Iſraelites were Baptized in the Sea, which was alſo by night, and in the cloud: but to ſhew that theſe Sacraments of Iſrael looked for a dawning when the true light, which they foreſignified ſhould appear.

The Jews do find thirteen precepts Negative and Affirmative about the keeping of the Paſsover.

1. The ſlaying of it.	Exod. 12. 6.
2. The eating of it.	8.
3. Not to eat it raw or boiled.	9.
4. Not to leave ought of it.	10.
5. The putting away of leaven.	15.
6. The eating of unleavened bread.	18.
7. That leaven be not found with them.	19.
8. Not to eat ought mixt with leaven.	20.
9. An Apoſtate Jew not to eat it.	43.
10. A ſtranger not to eat it.	45.
11. Not to bring forth the fleſh of it.	46.
12. Not to break a bone of it.	46.
13. No uncircumciſed to eat of it.	48.

How variouſly they Comment upon theſe as they do upon all things, and how over-curious they be in obſerving theſe as they do all things, their writings do witneſs. Their folding of their bitter herbs, their three unleavened cakes, their water, and ſalt, their ſearching for leaven, their caſting forth of leaven, and their curſing of leaven, their Graces over their tables, their Prayers over their hands as they waſh them, their Words over their unleavened bread, their remembring how they lived in Egypt, and came out, their words over their bitter herbs, their Paſsover Pſalms the 113. & 114. all theſe and their other Ceremonies are ſet down accurately in their Common Prayer Book, which I would not have denied to the Reader in Engliſh, both for his recreation, ſatisfaction, and ſome inſtruction, but that I know not whether I ſhould actum agere: do that which ſome one hath done before. And beſides I write theſe things not as ἔργα but πάρεργα, not ſet ſtudies, but ſtoln hours, employing my idle hours to the writing of theſe ſtudies, that I may witneſs to ſome, that my whole time is not idle. But it may be I may ſeem more idle in thus writing, than if I had been idle indeed; to them that think thus, I can only anſwer; It is youth: Age may do better.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Of the Confuſion of Tongues.

THAT the World from Babel was ſcattered into divers Tongues, we need not other proof, then as Diogenes proved that there is motion, by walking: ſo we may ſee the confuſion of Languages by our confuſed ſpeaking. Once all the Earth was of one Tongue, one Speech, and one Conſent, for they all ſpake in the Holy Tongue wherein the World was created in the beginning (to uſe the very words of the Chaldee Paraphraſt and Targ. Jeruſal. upon Gen. 11. 1. But pro peccato diſſentionis humanæ (as ſaith St. Auſten) for the ſin of men diſagreeing, not only different diſpoſitions, but alſo different Languages came into the World. They came to Babel with a diſagreeing agreement, and they come away puniſhed with a ſpeechleſs ſpeech. They diſagree among themſelves, cum quiſque principatum ad ſe rapit, while every one ſtrives for dominion (as the ſame Auſten) They agree againſt God in their Nagnavad lan Siguda, &c. We will make our ſelves a Rendevouz for Idolatry (as the ſame Jeruſelamy.) But they come away ſpeaking each to other, but not underſtood of each other, and ſo ſpeak to no more purpoſe, than if they ſpake not at all. This puniſhment of theirs at Babel, is like Adams corruption, hereditary to us, for we never come under the rod at Grammar School, but we ſmart for our Anceſtors rebellion at Babel.

Into how many Countries and * Tongues thoſe Shinaar rebels were ſcattered is no leſs confuſed work to find out, than was theirs at the Tower. So divers is the ſpeech of men, about the diverſity of Speech, that it makes the confuſion more confuſed. ‖ Euphorus and many other Hiſtorians ſay, that the Nations and Tongues are ſeventy five, liſtning to the voice of Moſes, which ſaith, all the ſouls that came into Egypt out of Jacob were ſeventy five. But in truth the natural Dialects (of Speech) appears to be ſeventy two as our Scriptures have delivered. Thus ſaith Clemens Alexandrinus: of whoſe conceit herein I muſt for my part ſay, as Saint Ambroſe ſaith of Aaron, about the golden calf. Tantum ſacerdotem, &c. So great a Scholar as Clemens I dare not cenſure, though I dare not believe him. The Jews with one conſent maintain, that there are juſt ſeventy Nations, and ſo many Tongues. So confident they are of this, that they dare ſay, that the ſeventy ſouls that went with Jacob into Egypt were as much as all the ſeventy Nations of the World. Jeruſalems

Schools rang with this Doctrine, and the Children learned to high-prize themſelves from their Fathers. A ſtately claim was this to Iſrael, but the keeping of it dangerous. Men of the ſeventy Nations would not be ſo undervalued by one people. Therefore when Iſrael wanted ſtrength to keep this challenge, they do it by ſleight. And ſo it is the thrice-learned Maſter Broughtons opinion, that the Septuagint when they were to Translate the Bible, and were to ſpeak of the ſeventy ſouls of Jacobs houſe, they durſt not put down the juſt number of ſeventy, leſt tales ſhould have been told out of their Schools (concerning their ſcornful Doctrine) and when the rumour and the number ſhould both come to the King of Egypt, the meet number might maintain the truth of the rumour, and by both they might incur danger, therefore they added five more, to ſpoil the roundneſs of the ſum, and Saint Steven follows their Tranſlation: Then Joſeph ſent and called his father Jacob to him, and all his kinred, even ſeventy five ſouls, Act. 7.14.

So in Gen.10. the Septuag. put in two Cainans: and ſo ſpoil the roundneſs of that ſeventy.

As the Jews ſeek to retain this their aſſumed dignity over the ſeventy Nations by this ſleight, ſo do they maintain their Tenet of juſt ſeventy Nations by a double reaſon. Firſt, They count polls in the plain of Shinaar, as Moſes did in the Wilderneſs, and they find in the tenth of Geneſis juſt ſeventy men, and therefore by neceſſary conſequence, juſt ſeventy Nations. The Chaldee upon theſe words of God, Gen. 11. 5. Come let us go down: * loſes the ſweet myſtery of the Trinity, but finds I know not how many ſtrange fancies: for thus he deſcants. The Lord ſaid unto the ſeventy Angels that are before him, come now let us go down, and confound there their Tongue, that a man ſhall not underſtand his fellow. And a little after he ſaith, And with him, (that is, with God) were ſeventy Angels according to the ſeventy Nations. I doubt not but the tenth Chapter was his ground for ſo many men, but I know not where he ſhould find ſo many Angels. Seventy men are indeed named in the tenth Chapter, but were all thoſe at Babel? And if they were, muſt thoſe ſeventy needs ſpeak ſeventy Tongues? A whole dozen of them, Canaan and his eleven ſons ſit down cloſe together, in, or (at leaſt) not far out of the ſmall compaſs of Canaan: where they all differed not, (if any at all did) in Language, being ſeated ſo nigh together. That Edomites, Moabites, Amalekites, and Ammonites ſpake not Hebrew, is * Theodorets opinion, but that all theſe, and Canaan differed in maternal Tongues, before Iſrael planted it, I cannot conceive. Nay, that Canaan ſpake Hebrew before Joſhua came there, I could be perſwaded to believe for three reaſons.

Julian the Heretick both denies the Trinity to be meant in this place, and ſaith God alone was unable for this work. Cyril. Tom.3.l.4.

Firſt, The old names of Canaan Towns are ſignificant in Hebrew: Jebus, troden down, by Heathens then, as it is now by the Turks, Kirjath-arbang, the City of Arbang, Joſh. 14. 15. Jericho, he ſhall ſmell it, the City of Palm-trees. The ſinful City Zeboim hath in the Text a fair Hebrew name, Zebhiim, that is, the Roes, a name too good for ſo bad a Town, therefore the margin gives it another name, Zebhojim. Infinite it is to trace all Hebrew Canaanitiſh names, who will may try at pleaſure and leaſure.

Secondly, Sure I am, that one chief Town in Canaan (if not then alſo as afterward the chiefeſt) that is Jeruſalem, was Hebrew when it was governed by Melchizedek or Sem: who were all one, as the * Chaldees, || Jews, and moſt Chriſtians do hold. Then did Sem make Canaan a ſervant [Gen. 9. 26.] under his rule, and I doubt not but under his Tongue alſo.

|| Vid. Mr. Broughtons Melchiz.

Thirdly, I ſee that a woman Rahab, underſtands the Hebrews at the firſt ſight, and ſpeaks to them (for ought we find) without interpreter.

I find the Amorites and Sidonians differing in the name of Hermon, one calling it Sirion, and the other Shenir, Deut. 3. 9. But I ſee not, but both the Hebrews, and ſome Canaanites agree in the name Hermon. This groundwork then of ſeventy mens being named in the tenth of Geneſis to import neceſſarily ſeventy Tongues in the eleventh Chapter, I cannot entertain: yet refer my ſelf to better judgement.

The ſecond reaſon for ſeventy Tongues they fetch out of Moſes, Deut. 32. 8. from theſe words, When the moſt High divided to the Nations their inheritance, when he ſeparated the ſons of Adam, he ſet the bounds of the people, according to the number of the children of Iſrael. What all Jews thought and gathered from that place, let two ſpeak for the reſt: Thoſe be Jonathan ben Uzziel, and Raſi. Jonathan reads the verſe in Chaldee thus, When the Higheſt gave poſſeſſion of the World to the people that deſcended of the ſons of Noah: when he divided Letters and Tongues to the ſons of men, in the age of the diviſion, &c. at that time he ſets the bounds of the Nations, according to the number of the ſouls of Iſrael that went down into Egypt. Thus the Chaldee. Raſi Comments to the ſame purpoſe in theſe words, When the holy-bleſſed-He gave to thoſe that provoked him, the portion of their inheritance, he overwhelmed and drowned them. When he ſcattered the generation of the diviſion, it was in his power to have paſſed them out of the World, yet did he not ſo, but ſets borders of the people. He reſerves them, and does not deſtroy them. (According to the number) for the number of the children of Iſrael, which were to come of the ſons of Sem, and according to the number of the ſeventy ſouls of the ſons of Iſrael that went down into Egypt: (He ſet bounds of the people) Seventy Tongues. Thus far the Rabbin: Who is ſo confident of this number of Seventy Languages, that he ſaith, there were men of the Seventy Nations in the Ship with Jonah, Jonah 1. Thus are the Jews current for Seventy, the * Greeks for ſeventy two, upon what ground I know not, unleſs the two Cainans in Gen. 10. in the Greek Bible, make up this number to them. Some Linguiſts have ſummed up the uſual Tongues and Dialects, but ſeventy or ſeventy two maternals I never ſaw. Modern Tongues are like the old ſhip Argo, patched up with ſo many pieces, that it is hard to tell which is a piece of old Argo.

* Clem. Alex. Epiphanius, Cometor. &c.

CHAP. XXIX.

Of Letters.

THAT the Hebrew Tongue was from the foundation of the World, none deny, but whether the Letters be ſo ancient, ſome queſtion. Some hold that thoſe Letters that God wrote with his own Hand in the two Tables, were the firſt Letters that ever were written. The ſtudious Pliny thinks, that among the Aſſyrians, letters have been always, but Gellius thinks they were invented in Egypt by Mercury, and others think among the Syrians. If we examine Pliny well, we ſhall find him true in the firſt and laſt, however in the middle. If the Aſſyrian Tongue were the Chaldee Tongue (as moſt like it was) then were thoſe Letters from the beginning of the World: the Hebrew and Chaldee Letter, being all one, unleſs the Aſſyrian differed from both. If you take Syrian in the ſence that Theodoret does for Hebrew, then Pliny ſpeaks true, that Letters were firſt among the Syrians. For Theodoret calls the Hebrew Tongue Syrian, as the Goſpel calls the Syrian Tongue Hebrew, Joh. 19.20. But Pliny concludes that Cadmus firſt brought Letters into Greece out of Phænicia. Juſtin Martyr ſaith, that Greece thinks ſo her ſelf. Athanaſius holdeth the Phænicians for the firſt inventors of Letters. That the Phænicians and Syrians firſt found out Letters, is a received opinion in Clemens Alexandrinus. Eupolemus thinks that the Phænicians received Grammar from the Jews, and the Greeks from the Phænicians. And Euphorus thinks that Cadmus was he that conveyed them. Chærilus in Euſebius makes Phænicians and Jews all one. For he nameth Jews in Xerxes army, and names their Tongue the Phænician, his words be theſe:

Τῶν δ' ὄπιθεν δέβαινε γένος θαύματον ἰδέσθαι
Γλῶσσαν μὲν φοίνισσαν ἔχοντες ἀμφιέποντες
Ὤκεον δ' ἐν Σολύμοις ὀρέσι πλατέη δέ σφι λίμνη.

In Engliſh thus.

A wondrous people marcht behind along:
Their Dialect was the Phænician Tongue.
On hill of Solymæ they dwelt: thereby
A ſpacious lake not far remote doth lie.

Theſe Phænicians (if you will call them ſo) or Jews, were the firſt that had Letters. But the Jews were not Phænicians indeed nor their Tongue the ſame, yet for bordering of their Countries, the Poet makes them all one. The Phænician is not now to be had, unleſs the * Punick or Carthaginian, and Phænick or Phænician, were all one (which moſt like they were.) And then ſome few lines of the Tongue are to be found in Plautus his Pænulus, which as Paræus ſaith, can little or nothing be made of. Euſebius ſpeaks of Sanchuniathon, that wrote the Phænician Hiſtory in the ſame Tongue, but more of the Language he ſaith not: But to the matter. That Letters were ſo long in uſe before the giving of the Law, I am induced to believe upon theſe reaſons.

* The Syrian tranſlating of the word Phænicia in the New Teſtament, ſeems to confirm this for true.

Firſt, Joſephus is of this mind, that Letters were before the Flood. And the Scripture cites Enochs Propheſie, which whether it were written by him or not, is uncertain: yet if there were any ſuch thing, thoſe many places which we find of it in Tertullian, Clemens, and others, do argue, that ſo much could not punctually be kept by word of mouth.

A ſecond reaſon to move me to think of Letters before the giving of the Law is, to think of Joſephs accounts in Egypt, which ſeem almoſt impoſſible without writing.

Thirdly, But omitting that, I cannot ſee how all Arts and Sciences in the World ſhould then flouriſh, as (conſidering their infancy) they did without the groundwork of all Learning, Letters.

Fourthly, Again for the Jews, upon the writing of the Law to be put to spelling (as they that had never seen letters before) and not to be able to read it, had been a Law upon the Law, adding to the hardness of it.

Fifthly, Nor can I think, that when Moses saith, blot me out of thy book, that he taketh the Metaphor from his own books (which it is probable he had not yet written) but from other books which were then abounding in the world.

Sixthly, The Egyptian Chronicles of so many thousand years in Diodorus and Laertius, I know are ridiculous; yet their carefulness of keeping Records I have ever believed. The Greeks were boys to them, as it is in Plato, and Moses was Scholar to them or their learning, Act. 7.

Now I cannot think that this their exceeding Humane Learning was kept only in their brains, and none in writing. Nor do I think that if it were written, that it was decyphered only in their obscure Hieroglyphicks, but that some of it came to ordinary writing of familiar letters.

CHAP. XXX.

Of the Hebrew Tongue.

WHO so will go about to commend the Hebrew Tongue, may justly receive the censure, that he of Rome did, who had made a long book in the praise of Hercules: This labour is in vain, for never any one dispraised Hercules. Other commendations this Tongue needeth none, than what it hath of it self, namely, for Sanctity it was the Tongue of God, and for Antiquity it was the Tongue of Adam: God the first founder, and Adam the first speaker of it. In this Tongue were laid up the Mysteries of the Old Testament. It begun with the World and the Church, and continued and increased in glory, till the Captivity in Babel, which was a Babel to this Tongue, and brought to confusion this Language, which at the first confusion, had escaped without ruine. At their return, it was in some kind repaired, but far from former perfection. The Holy Scriptures viewed by Ezra, a Scribe fit for the Kingdom of Heaven, in whose treasure were things New and Old. In the Maccabean times all went to ruine, Language and Laws and all lost: and since that time to this day, the pure Hebrew hath lost her familiarity, being only known by Scholars or at least not without teaching. Our Saviours times spake the Syrian, Kepha, Golgotha, Talitha, and other words do witness; In aftertimes the unwearied Masorites arose, helpers to preserve the Bible Hebrew intire, and Grammarians, helpers to preserve the Idiome alive; but for restoring it to the old familiarity, neither of them could prevail. For, the Jews have at this day no abiding City, no Commonwealth, no proper Tongue, but speak as the Countries wherein they live. This where of they were once most nice is gone, and this groat they have lost. As the man in Seneca, that through sickness lost his memory, and forgot his own Name; so they for their sins have lost their Language, and forgot their own Tongue. Their Cain like wandring, after the murther of their brother, according to the flesh, Christ Jesus, hath lost them this precious mark of Gods favour, and branded them with a worse mark: Cauterio conspirationis antiquæ, as saith Saint Bernard in another case. Before the confusion of Tongues all the world spake their Tongue and no other, but since the confusion of the Jews, they speak the Language of all the World, and not their own. And that it is not with them so, only of late, but hath been long; Theodoret beareth witness in these words, Other Nations (saith he) have their children speaking quickly in their own mother Tongue. Howbeit, there are no children of the Hebrews who naturally spake the Hebrew Tongue, but the Language of the Country where they are born. Afterward when they grow up they are taught the letters, and learn to read the Holy Scripture in the Hebrew Tongue. Thus Theod. in quæst. on Gen. 59.60.

About this their training up of their Children, and growth of Men, in their own Tongue and Learning: a Rabbin hath this saying in Pirke Auoth. Perek. 1. Ben He (he saith) At five years old for the Scripture, at ten for Mishneh, at thirteen * for the Commandment, at fifteen for the Talmud. At eighteen for Mariage, at twenty for Service, at thirty for Strength, at forty for Understanding, at fifty for Counsel, at sixty for Old age, at seventy for Gray Hairs, at eighty ‖ for Profoundness, at ninety for Meditation, at one hundred he is as Dead and past and gone out of the World. The Jews look for a pompous Kingdom, when Messias the Son of David shall come, whom they watch for every moment till he come, as it is in the twelfth Article of their Creed, in their Common Prayer Book. He shall restore them (as they hope) a temporal Kingdom (and of that mind, till they were better taught, were the Apostles, Acts 1. 6.) and then their Tongue shall revive again, as they surmise. But the divine Apocaliptick writing after Jerusalem was ruined, might might teach them what the ſecond Jeruſalem muſt be, not on Earth but from Heaven, Apoc. 21. 2. But to return to their Tongue.

* Or Philacteries, &c.

‖ Or fortitude (of mind) or God.

The Characters, we now have the Hebrew Tongue in, Scaliger thinks are but of a latter hatch, and not the ſame that the Jews uſed from Moſes, till the deſtruction of the Temple. For, that they uſed the Phœnician or Cananæan Character, which now is called the Samaritan. How truly I refer to the Readers judgment.

The Character we now have is either a ſet or a running letter: the firſt, the Bible is ordinarily Printed in, in the latter the moſt of the Rabbins.

The whole Tongue is contained in the Bible, and no one book elſe in the World, contains in it a whole Language. And this ſhews that the Scripture ſpeaks to all ſorts of people, ſince it ſpeaks of all ſorts of things. This Language is (as God ſaid the Jews ſhould be, if they would keep his Law.) A lender to all, and a borrower of none. All Tongues are in debt to this, and this to none. The Eaſtern moſt eſpecially muſt acknowledge this. Some men in the Eaſt (ſaith Origen) reſerve their old ſpeech, (meaning by likelihood the Hebrew) and have not altered it, but have continued in the Eaſtern Tongue, becauſe they have continued in the Eaſtern Countries. No Eaſtern Tongue that I have heard of, is Hebrew now, ſo that what to ſay to Origen I cannot tell, unleſs he mean that thoſe that have continued in the Eaſt, have kept neareſt this holy Tongue, becauſe neareſt the holy Land: this to be true is known to the meaneſt Learned. In their ſpeech it is apparent, and by their writing confirmed. All of them have learned from the Hebrew, to write from the right hand to the left (or as we uſually call it in England, to write, and read backward: The China and Japan writing excepted, which is indeed from the right hand to the left, but not with the lines croſſing the leaf as other Tongues do, but the lines down the leaf. A ſtrange way by it ſelf.

Again, moſt of the Eaſtern Tongues do uſe the Hebrew Character for quick writing, or ſome other end. The Chaldee letter is the very ſame. The Syrian though it have two or three kinds of its own, yet is content ſometime to take upon it the Hebrew Character. The Arabian doth the like, eſpecially the Jews in Turky uſe in hatred of Mahumetans, to write down their matters of Religion; in the Hebrew Character, though in the Arabian Tongue. So do the Chriſtian Arabians for the ſame cauſe in their holy things, uſe the Arabian Tongue, but Syrian Letter. And I take a place in Epiphanius to be meant to this purpoſe, alſo about the Perſian Tongue. His words out of another are theſe, The Perſians beſides their own Letters do alſo uſe the Letters of the Syrians: as in our times many Nations uſe the Greek, though almoſt every Nation hath a proper Character. I refer to the Reader to judge whether he mean not that the Perſians (as other Countries about them did,) did uſe the Hebrew Character for their quick writing: which is called Syrian by Theodoret.

To ſpeak of the grace, and ſweetneſs, and fulneſs of the Hebrew Tongue, is to no purpoſe to relate, for even thoſe that cannot read this Tongue have read thus much of it.

CHAP. XXXI.

Of Vowels.

EAſtern Tongues, eſpecially the Hebrew and her three Dialects, Chaldee, Syrian, and Arabian, are written ſometimes with vowels, ſometimes without: with, for certainty, without, for the ſpeedier writing: we have Hebrew Bibles of both kinds. The Septuagint it ſeems tranſlated by the unpricked Bible, as St. Hierome in his Commentary upon the Prophets ſeemeth to import, and as to any one that examineth it is eaſie to find. Inſtead of all other places in Gen. 4. 7. it is apparent: where the ſeventy Tranſlators reſerving the Letters have ſtrangely altered the Vowels.

The Hebrew hath it thus, הלא אם תיטיב שאת ואם לא תיטיב לפתח הטאת רבץ Halo imtetibh Seeth, weim lo tetibh, lappethahh hhatath robbets, which is in Engliſh thus, If thou do well ſhalt thou not be accepted? And if thou do not well, ſin lieth at the door: they Tranſlate it as pointed thus, הלא אם תיטיב שאת ואם לא תיטיב לפתח חטאת רבץ Halo im tetibh ſeeth, weim lo tetibh lephatteahh hhatatha rebhats. Which is, If thou do well in offering and do not well in dividing thou haſt ſinned, be quiet. This, follow with one conſent, the Greek and many of the Latine Fathers: They could not thus tranſlate, becauſe they knew not the Text, or becauſe they wanted pointed Bibles, but on ſet purpoſe to hide Pearls from Swine (as the beſt Learned think.) But that they did always miſs on ſet purpoſe (where they miſſed) their many lapſes ſeem to deny: but ſometime they miſtook the unpricked Text, and ſo miſconſtrued. A vowelled Bible they might have had but would not.

Some

Some there be that think the vowels of the Hebrew, were not invented for many years after Chriſt. Which to mee ſeemeth to be all one, as to deny ſinews to a body: or to keep an Infant unſwadled, and to ſuffer him to turn and bend any way till he grow out of faſhion. For mine own ſatisfaction I am fully reſolved, that the Letters and Vowels of the Hebrew were as the Soul and Body in a Child, knit together at their conception and beginning: and that they had both one Author.

1. For, firſt a Tongue cannot be learned without Vowels, though at laſt, skill and practiſe may make it to be read without. Grammar and not Nature makes men to do this, and this alſo helped out with the ſence of the place we read.

2. That Maſorites ſhould amend that which the Septuagint could not ſee, and that they ſhould read righter, than the other (who were of far greater Authority) I cannot believe.

3. Our Saviour in his words of one Iota and one ſmall kerai not periſhing from the Law, ſeems to allude to the leaſt of the Letters, Jod, and the leaſt Vowel and Accent.

4. Laſtly, It is above the skill of a meer man to point the Bible; nay, ſcarcely a verſe as it is. The Ten Commandments may puzzle all the World for that skill.

CHAP. XXXII.

Of the Language of two Teſtaments.

THE two Teſtaments are like the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem (when the confuſion of Tongues at Babel was recompenſed with multiplicity of Tongues at Sion) ſpeaking in different Languages, but ſpeaking both to one purpoſe. They differ from each other only in Language and time: but for matter the New is veiled in the Old, and Old reveiled in the New. Iſaiah in his viſion, heard the Seraphins cry Zeh elzeh, one to another, Holy, Holy, Holy Lord God of tſebhaoth. So the two Teſtaments like theſe two Seraphins, cry Zeh elzeh one to another, the Old cries to the New, and the New ecchoes to the Old. The Old cries, Holy is the Lord that hath promiſed, the New anſwers, Holy is the Lord that hath performed. The Old ſays, Holy is the Father that gave the Law, the New ſaith, Holy is the Son that preached the Goſpel, and both ſay, Holy is the Holy Ghoſt that penned both Law and Goſpel to make men holy. The two Cherubins in Salomons Temple ſtood ſo that with their outmoſt wings they touched the ſides of the houſe, and their other wings touched each other. So the two Teſtaments, one way touch the two ſides of the houſe, and the other way touch each other. In their extent they read from the beginning of the World to the end, from in the beginning, to come Lord Jeſus. In their conſent they touch each other, with He ſhall turn the Heart of the Fathers to the children, Mal. 4. 6, and He ſhall turn the heart of the Fathers to the children, Luke 1. 17. Here the two wings joyn in the middle. Tertullian calls the Prophet Malachi, the bound or skirt of Judaiſm and Chriſtianity, a ſtake that tells that there promiſing ends, and performing begins, that Prophecying concludes, and Fulfilling takes place: there is not a ſpan between theſe two plots of holy ground, the Old and New Teſtament, for they touch each other. What do the Papiſts then when they put and chop in the Apocripha for Canonical Scripture, between Malachi and Matthew, Law and Goſpel? What do they, but make a wall between the Seraphins that they cannot hear each others cry? What do they but make a ſtop between the Cherubins that they cannot touch each others wing? What do they but make a ditch betwixt theſe grounds that they cannot reach each others coaſts? What do they but remove the Land mark of the Scriptures, and ſo are guilty, of, Curſed be he that removes his neighbours mark, Deut. 27. 17. And what do they but divorce the mariage of the Teſtaments, and ſo are guilty of the breach of, that which God hath joyned together let no man put aſunder. Theſe two Teſtaments are the two paps of the Church from which we ſuck the ſincere milk of the Word. One pap is not more like to another, than are theſe two for ſubſtance, but for Language they vary in colour. The Old (as all can tell) is written in Hebrew, but ſome forraign Languages are alſo admitted into Scripture, beſides the Hebrew, as forraign Nations were to be admitted alſo to the Church beſides the Hebrews. A great piece of Ezra is Chaldee, becauſe taken from Chaldee Chronicles. Thoſe parts of Daniels viſions that concern all the World, are written in the Chaldee, the Tongue then beſt known in the World, becauſe the Chaldeans were then Lords of the World. The eleventh verſe of the tenth of Jeremy is in the ſame Tongue, that the Jews might learn ſo much of their Language, as to refuſe their Idolatry in their own Language. Other words of this Idiom are frequent in the Scripture: as I take two names given to Chriſt (as Bar the ſon in *Pſal.*2.10. and Hboter the rod of Jeſſes ſtem, Iſa. 11.) to be natively Chaldee words, and for that they do ſhew the greater myſtery, viz. that this Son and this Rod ſhould belong to Chaldeans and Gentiles, as well as to Jew or Hebrews: Infinite it is to trace all of this nature and Language. The Arabian is alſo admitted into Scripture, eſpecially in the Book of Job a man of that Country: whether Philiſtin Phraſes, and other adjacent Nations Dialects, be not to be found there alſo, I refer to the Reader to ſearch, and (I think) he may eaſily find: of the eloquence of ſome pieces above others, and the difficulty of ſome books above others, thoſe that can even read the Engliſh Bible can tell. I would there were more that could read it in its own Language, and as it were talk with God there in his own Tongue: that as by Gods mercy Japhet dwells now in the tents of Sem, or the Gentiles have gained the preheminence of the Jews for Religion, ſo they would water this graffing of theirs into this ſtock, with the juyce of that Tongue, thereby to provoke them the more to Jealouſie.

the

Rhutra uſed by all the Targums for a rod in divers places.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Of the New Teſtament Language, or the Greek.

THE Greek Tongue is the key which God uſed to unlock the Tents of Sem to the ſons of Japhet. This glorious Tongue (as Tully calls it) is made moſt glorious by the writing of the New Teſtament in this Language. God hath honoured all the letters by naming himſelf after the firſt and the laſt: as Homer ſhews the receit of all the Grecian ſhips, by ſhewing how many the greateſt, and how few the leaſt contained. Javan is held both by Jews and Chriſtians to have planted the Country. The Tongue is likely to be maternal from Babel: The Jews upon Geneſis the forty ninth, think that Jacob curſeth his ſons Simeon and Levies fact, in one word of Greek Macerothehem, that is, μαχαίρας ἀυτῶν their ſwords: but all the Chaldees and other Tranſlations render it better, their habitations, Gen. 49. 5. The ancienteſt Heathen Greek alive is Homer, though the Tongue was long before, and Homers ſubject of Ilias treated of in Greek verſe by Evanders Wife of Arcadia, as ſome have related. Homer watered the Tongue, and in ſucceeding ages it flouriſhed till it grew ripe in the New Teſtament. The Dialects of it familiarly known to be five. The Attick, the Ionick, &c. The Macedonian was ſomething ſtrange, as appears in Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. 5. Eſpecially their devout Macedonian, or about their oraiſons. How God ſcattered and divulged this Tongue of the Greeks over the World, againſt the coming of Chriſt, and writing of the New Teſtament, is remarkable. Alexander the great with his Macedonians, made the Eaſtern parts Grecian. The Old Teſtament at Ptolomæus his requeſt, tranſlated into Greek, was as an Uſher to bring in the New Teſtament, when Japhet ſhould come to dwell in the Tents of Sem. The Jews uſed to keep a mournful faſt for that Tranſlation, but as Jews mourn, ſo have Gentiles cauſe to rejoyce. In like ſort, for the preparation for the Goſpel of late (which as far as Antichriſt his power could reach, lay depreſſed, but not overwhelmed;) the Greek Tongue at the ſacking of Conſtantinople by the Turks, was ſent into theſe Weſtern climates; that we might hear Chriſt ſpeak in his own Language, without an Egyptian to interpret to us, as Joſeph had to his brethren: What need we now to rely upon a Latine foundation, when we have the Greek purity? Never did the Turk any good to Chriſtianity, but this, and this againſt his will, but God worketh all things for his own glory: And we may ſay of the poor inhabitants of Grecia, as of the Jews, by their impoveriſhing we are inriched.

Thucyd. lib. 1

As Athens in old time was called the Grecia of Grecia, ſo the New Teſtament for Language may be ſtiled the Greek of Greek. In it (as upon the croſs of our Saviour, in the title) are three Tongues, Hebrew, Greek, and Latine. Greek the foundation, of the other two ſome few additions. In the Greek Maſter Broughton hath given learned rules and examples of the kinds of it, viz. Septuagint, Talmudick, Attick and Apoſtolick. The Hebrew or Syrian (for ſo that word Hebrew in the title of the croſs muſt be underſtood) is eaſily found out even in Tranſlations. Latine there is ſome in the Goſpels, but not much. Κῆνσος, Cenſus for tribute. Κουστωδία a ward or watch, *Matth.*28.11. Σπεκουλάτωρ ſpiculator, Mark 6. 27. which word is uſed by Targum Jeruſelamy in Gen. 37. of Potiphar, that he was Rabh Sapulachtaria: Princeps ſpiculatorum. And ſome other words of the Latine Tongue, which Language in our Saviours time the conqueſt of the Romans had ſcattered in Jeruſalem: and in the parts adjoyning, and ſo may one find ſome Latine in the Syrian Teſtament: and abundance of Greek.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Of the Chaldee and Syrian Tongues.

THE Chaldee and Syrian Tongue was once all one, as appeareth in Gen. 31. 47. Ezra 4.7. *Dan.*2.4. In Character indeed they differed, they of Babilon uſing one kind of letter, they of Syria another: This was that that nonpluſt the Babilonian wizards about the writing of the wall, ſo that they could not read it, though it were in their own Language, becauſe it was not in their own letter. In after-times the very Languages themſelves began to vary: as the Chaldee in Daniel, and Onkelos and Jeruſelamy and Jonathan, and the Syrian in the Teſtament do witneſs. The Paraphraſts do much differ between themſelves for purity of ſpeech, and all far ſhort of the Bible Chaldee. They are very full of Greek words, and ſo the Syrian: a relick of Alexanders conqueſts: ſome think they find ſome Greek in Daniel. Montanus himſelf renders Oſphaia σφοι all along. Four kind of Characters is the Chaldee to be had in, or if you will the Chaldee in two, and the Syrian in two. Our Bible and Paraphraſts and Rabbins Chaldee is in the Hebrew letter, and the other kind of letter is the Samaritan. The Syrian hath either a ſet letter, ſuch as we have the New Teſtament imprinted in, or their running hand, ſuch as the Maronites uſe in their writing for ſpeed: there is no great difference betwixt them, as you may ſee by their Alphabet.

CHAP. XXXV.

Of the Arabian Language.

THIS is the moſt copious of the Hebrew Dialects, and a Tongue that may brag with the moſt of Tongues from fluency, and continuance of familiarity. This Tongue is frequent in Scripture, eſpecially in Job, a man of that Country: How other parts of the Bible uſe it, I think may be judged by the nearneſs of Judea and Arabia, and of the two Languages. In this one thing it differs from its fellow-Dialects and its Mother Tongue, that it varieth terminations in declining of Nowns, as the Greek and Latine do, and that it receiveth dual numbers, in forming Verbs, as doth the Greek. Of the largeneſs of the Alphabet, and difference from other Alphabets, and quiddits of the Tongue, or indeed any thing of the Tongue, I cannot ſay, which I have not received of the moſt Induſtrious and thrice Learned (both in this and other the noble Tongues) Maſter William Bedwell, whom I cannot name without a great deal of thankfulneſs and honour: To whom I will rather be a Scholar, than take on me to teach others. This Tongue was Mahomads Alcoran written in, and is ſtill read in the ſame Idiome under pain of death, not to miſtake a letter, which is as eaſily done in this Tongue as in any.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Of the Latine Tongue.

THIS is the firſt Idiom of our Grammar Schools: A Tongue next the ſacred Tongues, moſt neceſſary for Scholars of the beſt profeſſion. Whether Latine were a Babel Language I will not controvert pro & contra. Sure I dare ſay, that what Latine we read now, was not at Babel: if we may believe Polybius, who ſaith that the Latine Tongue that was uſed in Junius Brutus time was not underſtood in the time of the firſt Punick War, but only by great Scholars. So much in few years it had degenerated. The old Poets compared with ſmooth Ovid and Tully ſhew much alteration. This ſpacious Tongue once almoſt as big as any, and as large as a great part of the World, is now bounded in Schools and Studies. The Deluge of the North (the treaſury of Men) overwhelmed the Romane Empire, ſcattered the Men, and ſpoiled the Latine. Goths, Vandals, Lombards, and the reſt of the brood of thoſe frozen Climates, have beaten the Latine Tongue out of its own faſhion, into the French, Spaniſh, and Italian. But ſome ſparks of their hammering are flown into other Languages of the Weſt: So that moſt Countries hereabout may own Rome for a ſecond Babel for their ſpeech confuſed.

CHAP. XXXVII.

The Language of Britain near a thouſand years ago. Ex Beda lib. 1. de Hiſt. Angl. Cap. 1.

Britania in præſenti juxta numerum librorum, &c. Britain in my time (ſaith Bede) doth ſearch and confeſs one and the ſame knowledge of the High Truth, and true ſublimity in five Tongues, according to the five Books wherein the Law of God was written: namely, in the Engliſh, Britain, Scotiſh, Pict and Latine Tongues: And in the nineteenth Chapter of the ſame Book, he ſaith, that when Auſten the Monk came from Gregory the great to Preach the Goſpel in England, he brought with him Interpreters out of France to ſpeak to the Engliſh: That Language it ſeems was then uſual in England, but whether the French that France ſpeaks now, is a queſtion. William the Conqueror took great care and pains to have brought in his Tongue with his Conqueſt, but could not prevail.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Jonathan the Chaldee Paraphraſt his conceit of Levies choſing to the Prieſthood: tranſlated out of his Paraph. on Gen. 32. 24.

*AND Jacob was left alone beyond the foord, and an Angel in the likeneſs of a man ſtrove with him and ſaid, Didſt thou not promiſe to give Tithe of all that thou hadſt, and behold thou haſt * twelve ſons, and one daughter, and thou haſt not tithed them: Out of hand he ſets apart the four firſt born to their four mothers* (for ſaith the margin, they were holy becauſe of their primogeniture) and then were eight left: He begins again to count from Simeon, and ended in Levi, for the tenth or tithe. Michael anſwereth and ſaith, Lord of the World this is thy lot, &c. thus the Chaldee. On whoſe words, if they were worth Commenting on I could ſay more.

* He had but eleven ſons as yet: but the Hebrew Comment upon the Chaldee Text helps out at this dead lift, and ſaith, that Rachel was great with child of Benjamin, and ſo he is counted before he is born.

CHAP. XXXIX.

Of the Jews abbreviature. עה

THIS ſhort writing is common in all their Authors. When they cite any of the Doctors of their Schools, they commonly uſe theſe words, Amerù rabbothenu Ziceronam libhracah, in four letters thus: ארזל thus ſay our Doctors of bleſſed memory. But when they ſpeak of holy men in the Old Teſtament, they uſually take this Phraſe Gnalau haſhalom, on him is peace, in brief thus, עה. Thus when they mention Moſes, Solomon, David, or others, this is the memorial they give them. The Arabians have the like uſe in their Abbreviation of Gnalaihi alſalemo: on whom is peace. The words in Hebrew want a verb, and ſo may be conſtrued two ways: On him is peace, or on him be peace. The learned Maſter Broughton hath rendered it the former way, and his judgement herein ſhall be my Law. To take it the latter way, ſeems to reliſh of Popiſh ſuperſtition, of praying for the dead: which though the Jews did not directly do, yet in manner they appear to do no leſs, in one part of their Common Prayer Book, called Mazkir neſhamoth, the remembrancer of Souls: which being not very long, I thought not amiſs to Tranſlate out of their Tongue, into our own, that the Reader may ſee their Jewiſh Popery, or Popiſh Judaiſm, and may bleſs the Creator, who hath not ſhut us up in the ſame darkneſs.

CHAP. XL.

Mazkir neſhamoth: or the Remembrancer of ſouls: in the Jews Liturgy: Printed at Venice.

THE Lord remember the ſoul (or ſpirit of Abba Mr. N. the ſon of N. who is gone into his world: wherefore I vow (to give) Alms for him, that for this, his ſoul may be bound up in the bundle of life, with the ſoul of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, Sarah, and Rebecca, Rachel and Leah, and with the reſt of the righteous men and righteous women, which be in the garden of Eden. Amen.

The Lord remember the ſoul of Mrs. N. the Daughter of N. who is gone to her World. Therefore I vow, &c. as in the other before. Amen.

The Lord remember the ſoul of my father and my mother, of my grandfathers and grandmothers, of my uncles and aunts, brethren and ſiſters, of my coſens and coſeneſſes, whether of my fathers ſide, or mothers ſide, who are gone into their world. Wherefore I vow, &c. Amen.

The Lord remember the ſoul of N. the ſon of N. and the ſouls of all my coſens and coſeneſſes, whether on my fathers or mothers ſide, who were put to death, or ſlain, or ſtabd, or burnt, or drowned, or hanged for the ſanctifying of the Name of God. Therefore I will give Alms for the memory of their ſouls, and for this let their ſouls be bound up in the bundle of life, with the ſoul of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, Sarah and Rebecca, Rachel and Leah, and with the reſt of the righteous men and righteous women which are in the garden of Eden. Amen.

Then the Prieſt pronounceth a bleſſing upon the man that is thus charitable, as it followeth there in theſe words.

He that bleſſed our father Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, Moſes and Aaron, David and Salomon, he bleſs Rabbi N. the ſon of N. becauſe he hath vowed Alms for the ſouls whom he hath mentioned: for the honour of God, and for the honour of the Law, and for the honour of the day: for this the Lord keep him, and deliver him from all affliction and trouble, and from every plague and ſickneſs: and write him and ſeal him for a happy life, in the day of Judgment: and ſend a bleſſing and proſper him in every work of his hands, and all Iſrael his brethren, and let us ſay Amen.

Thus (courteous Reader) haſt thou ſeen a Popiſh Jew interceding for the dead: have but the like patience a while, and thou ſhalt ſee how they are Popiſh almoſt entirely, in claiming the merits of the dead to intercede for them: for thus tendeth a prayer which they uſe in the book, called Sepher Min hagim ſhel col Hammedinoth, &c. which I have alſo here turned into Engliſh.

Do for thy praiſes ſake. Do for their ſakes that loved thee, that (now) dwell in duſt. For Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacobs ſake. Do for Moſes and Aarons ſake. Do for David and Salomons ſake. Do for Jeruſalem thy holy Cities ſake. Do for Sion the habitation of thy glories ſake. Do for the deſolation of thy Temples ſake. Do for the treading down of thine Altars ſake. Do for their ſakes who were ſlain for thy holy Name. Do for their ſakes who have been maſſacred for thy ſake. Do for their ſakes who have gone to fire or water for the hallowing of thy Name. Do for ſucking childrens ſakes who have not ſinned. Do for weaned childrens ſakes who have not offended. Do for infants ſakes who are of the houſe of our Doctors. Do for thine own ſake if not for ours. Do for thine own ſake and ſave us.

Tell me gentle reader ἰπλαίτων φιλονίζει, &c. whether doth the Jew Romanize, or the Roman Judaize in his devotions. This interceding by others, is a ſhrewd ſign they have both rejected the right Mediator between God and Man, Chriſt Jeſus. The prophane Heathen might have read both Jew and Papiſt a lecture in his, Contemno minutos iſtos Deos, modo Jovem propitium habeam, which I think a Chriſtian may well Engliſh: let go all Diminutive Divinities, ſo that I may have the great Jeſus Chriſt to propitiate for me.

CHAP. XLI.

Of the Latine Tranſlation of Matth. 6. 1.

ALms in Rabbin Hebrew are called צדקה Tſedhakah righteouſneſs, which word the Syrian Tranſlator uſeth, Matth. 6. 1. Act. 10. 2. and in other places. From this cuſtom of ſpeech, the Roman vulgar Tranſlateth, Attendite ne juſtitiam veſtram faciatis: One Engliſh old manuſcript Teſtament, is in Lichfield Library, which hath it thus after the Latine: Takith hede that you do not your rightwiſnes before men to be ſeyne of hem, ellis ye ſhullen have no mede at your fadir that is in hevenes. Other Engliſh Tranſlation, I never ſaw any to this ſenſe; nor any Greek copy. It ſeems the Papiſt will rather Judaize for his own advantage, than follow the true Greek. The Septuagint in ſome places of the Old Teſtament, have turned Tſedhakah Righteouſneſs, ἐλεημοσύνην Almſdeeds, or little or to no ſenſe. As the Papiſts have in this place of the New Teſtament, turned ἐλεημοσύνην Almſdeeds, by δικαιοσύνην Righteonſneſs, to as little purpoſe. In the Hebrew indeed, one word is uſed for both: Tſedhakah for Almſdeeds, which properly ſignifies Righteouſneſs; upon what ground I know not, unleſs it be, to ſhew that * Alms muſt be given of rightly gotten good, or elſe they are no righteouſneſs: or they are called Zadkatha in Syrian, Hu ger zadek le mehwo, they are called righteouſneſs, becauſe it is right they ſhould be given, and given rightly. The Fathers of the Councel of Trent ſpeak much of the merit of Alms; whom one may anſwer in the very words of their vulgar, Attendite ne juſtitiam veſtram faciatis. Take heed you do not make them your Juſtification.

* St. Chryſoſtom hath ſuch a touch.

An Emblem.

A Wall in Rome had this picture. A man painted naked with a whip in one hand, and four leaves of a book in the other, and in every leaf a word written. In the firſt, Plango, I mourn; Is the ſecond, Dico, I tell; In the third, volo, I will; and in the fourth, facio, I do. Such a one in the true repentant. He is naked, becauſe he would have his moſt ſecret ſins laid open to God: He is whipped, becauſe his ſins do ſting himſelf: His book is his repentance: His four words are his actions: In the firſt he mourns, in the ſecond he confeſſes, in the third he reſolves, and in the fourth, he performs his reſolution. Plango, I mourn, there is ſight of ſin and ſorrow; Dico, I tell, there is contrition for ſin and confeſſion; Volo, I will, there is amending reſolution: Facio, I do, there is performing ſatisfaction.

Mahhanaiim. Gen. 32. 2.

AND Jacob went on his way, and the Angels of God met him: And Jacob ſaid when he ſaw them, This is the Hoſt of the Lord, and he called the name of the place Mahanaim.

The word is dual, and tels of two Armies and no more, what theſe two Armies were, the Jews according to their uſual vein, do find ſtrange expoſitions. To omit them all, this ſeems to me to be the truth, and reaſon of the name. There was one company with Jacob, which afterwards he calls his army; and there was another company of Angels, which he calls the Army of God. Theſe are the two Armies that gave name to Mahanaim; two Armies, one heavenly, and the other earthly: and from this I take it, Salomon compares the Church, * to the company of Mahanaim: for ſo the Church conſiſteth of two Armies, one heavenly like theſe Angels, which is the Church triumphant, and the other travailing on earth like Jacobs Army, which is the Church militant. Cant. 6. 12.

CHAP. XLIV.

The book of Pſalms.

THE Pſalms are divided into five books, according to the five Books of Moſes: and if they be ſo divided, there be ſeventy books in the Bible; the unskilful may find where any one of theſe five books end, by looking where a Pſalm ends with Amen, there alſo ends the book. As at Pſal. 41. 72. 89. 106. and from thence to the end.

Theſe may even in their very beginnings be harmonized to the books of the Law.

Geneſis. The firſt book of Moſes telleth how happineſs was loſt, even by Adams walking in wicked counſel of the Serpent and the Woman.

Pſal. 1. The firſt book of Pſalms tells how happineſs may be regained, if a man do not walk in wicked counſel, as of the Serpent and Woman, the Divel and the Fleſh.

This alluſion of the firſt book Arnobius makes.

Pſal. 42. The ſecond book of Pſalms begins in groaning affliction, Pſal. 42. 43.

Leviticus. The third book of Moſes is of giving the Law.

Pſal. 73. The third book of Pſalms tells in the beginning, how good God is for giving this Law. This alluſion. Rab. Tanch. makes very near.

Numbers. The fourth book of Moſes is about numbring.

Pſal. 90. The fourth book begins with numbring of the beſt Arithmetick: numbring Gods mercy, Pſal. 90. 1. and our own days, verſ. 12.

Deuteronomy. The laſt book of Moſes is a rehearſal of all.

Pſal. 107. So is the laſt book of the Pſalms from Pſal. 107. to the end.

In the Jews diviſion of the Scripture, this piece of the Pſalms, and the books of the like nature, are ſet laſt: not becauſe they be of the leaſt dignity, but becauſe they be of leaſt dependance with other books, as ſome of them being no ſtory at all, and ſome, ſtories and books of leſſer bulk, and ſo ſet in a form by themſelves. The Old Teſtament books, the Jews acroſtically do write thus in three letters אנך or תנך, every letter ſtanding for a word, and every word for a part of the Bible. א or ת for Aorajetha, or Torah, the Law: נ for Nebhiim the Prophets: כ for Cethubhim, or books of Holy Writ: this diviſion is ſo old, that our Saviour himſelf uſeth it in the laſt of Luke, and verſ. 44. All things written in the Law of Moſes, and in the Prophets and the Pſalms. By the Pſalms meaning, that part of Cethubhim, in which the Pſalms are ſet firſt.

CHAP. XLV.

Of the Creation.

TWO ways we come to the knowledge of God; by his Works and by his Word. By his Works we come to know there is a God; and by his Word we come to know what God is. His Works teach us to ſpell; his Word teacheth us to read. The firſt are as it were his back parts, by which we behold him a far off: The latter ſhews him to us face to face. The World is as a book conſiſting of three leaves, and every leaf Printed with many Letters, and every Letter a Lecture. The leaves Heaven, the Air, and Earth with the Water. The Letters in Heaven, every Angel, Star, and Planet. In the Air, every Meteor and Soul. In the Earth and Waters, every Man, Beaſt, Plant, Fiſh, and Mineral: all theſe ſet together, ſpell to us that there is a God, and the Apoſtle ſaith no leſs though in leſs ſpace, Rom. 1.20. For the * inviſible things of him, that is, his eternal Power and Godhead are ſeen by the creation of the World, being conſidered in his Works. And ſo David, Pſal. 19. 1. It is not for nothing that God hath ſet the Cabinet of the Univerſe open, but it is becauſe he hath given us Eyes to behold his Treaſure. Neither is it for nothing that he hath given us Eyes to behold his Treaſure, but becauſe he hath given us Hearts to admire upon our beholding. If we mark not the Works of God, we are like Stones that have no Eyes, wherewith to behold. If we wonder not at the Works of God, when we mark them, we are like Beaſts that have no Hearts wherewith to admire. And if we praiſe not God for his Works, when we admire them, we are like Devils that have no Tongues wherewith to give thanks. Remarkable is the ſtory of the poor old man, whom a Biſhop found, moſt bitterly weeping, over an ugly Toad: being asked the reaſon of his Tears, his anſwer was, I weep, becauſe, that whereas God might have made me as ugly and filthy a creature as this Toad, and hath not, I have yet never in all my life been thankful to him for it. If the works of the Creation would but lead us to this one Lecture, our labour of obſerving them were well beſtowed. How much more when they lead us far further.

* In the Syrian tranſlation it is the hid things of God.

CHAP. XLVI.

The time and manner of the Creation.

MOSES in the firſt verſe of the Bible refutes three Heathen opinions: namely, theirs that thought the World was Eternal, for he ſaith, in the beginning, &c. Secondly, theirs that thought there was no God, for he ſaith, Elohim created. Thirdly, theirs that thought there were many gods, for he ſaith, * Elohim he created Heaven and Earth. The firſt word in the beginning may draw our minds and thoughts to the laſt thing, the latter end, and this thought muſt draw our affections from too much love of the World, for it muſt have an end as it had a beginning. I will not ſtand to comment upon the word Beriſhith in the beginning, for then I know not when to come to an end. To treat how the divers expoſitors labour about the beginning of the world, is a world of labour. How the Jeruſ. Targ. tranſlates it, In wiſdom, and is followed by Rabbi Tanchum, and many Jews: How Targ. Jonath. uſeth an Arabian word, Min Awwala, a primo; Onkelos, in primis or in principio: Jarchi in principio creationis creavit. How Baſil the great, Saint Ambroſe, and hundreds others do interpret this, is a work endleſs to examine. Satisfied am I with this, that the world and all things had their beginning from God, that in the beginning created Heaven and Earth. Some of the Jews do invert the word Bereſhith, and make it Betiſri that is in the month Tiſri was the world created. This month is about our September, and that the world was created in this month (to let

* Even thoſe that have not Hebrew, can tell there is a myſtery of the Trinity in Elohim, bara, but few mark how ſweetly this is anſwered with the ſame Phraſe in manner, in the Haphtara which is read by the Jews to this portion of Moſes, viz. Eſa. 42.5. Jehovah bore ha ſhamaiim, venotehem: Jehovah being ſingular, and notchem plurall, which might be rendred, Deus creans cœlos, & Deus extendentes eos.

other reaſons alone') this ſatisfies me, that the Feaſt of Tabernacles which was in this month, is called the end of the year, Exod. 23.16. And this I take to be the reaſon, why the Jews began to read the Bible in their Synagogues, at the Feaſt of Tabernacles, viz. that they might begin the lecture of the Creation, in *Gen.*1. at that time of the year that the world was created.

The manner of the Creation ſhews the workman powerful and wiſe. The making of the Angels concealed by Moſes, leſt men ſhould (like thoſe hereticks in Epiph.) think they helped God in the Creation. For if their day of their Creation (* which was in moſt likelihood the firſt) had been named, wicked men would have been ready to have taken them for actors in this work, which were only ſpectators. Therefore as God hides Moſes after his death, ſo Moſes hides the Creation of them, leſt they ſhould be deified, and the honour due to the Creator given to the creature. God in framing the world, begins above and works downward; and in three days he lays the parts of the world, and in the three other days, he adorns thoſe parts.

* Rab. Solom. holds they were made the ſecond day. Many Divines hold for the fourth.

The firſt day he makes all the Heavens, the matter of the Earth, and comes down ſo low as the Light.

The ſecond lower, and makes the Firmament or Air.

The third loweſt of all, and makes diſtinction of Earth and Water.

Thus in three days the parts, or body of the World is laid, in three days more, and in the ſame order they are furniſhed. For on

The fourth day the Heavens, which were made the firſt day, are deckt with Stars.

The fifth day the Firmament, which was made the ſecond day, is filled with Birds.

The ſixth day the Earth, which was laid fit the third day, is repleniſhed with Beaſts, and laſtly * Man.

Thus God in the ſix days finiſhed all his work of Creation. || For the ten things that the Chaldee Paraphraſt ſaith, God created on the evening of the Sabbath, after the World was finiſhed: I refer them to their Authors to believe them.

* The Seventy Interpreters on Gen. 2.2. inſtead of God had finiſhed on the ſeventh day, read he finiſhed on the ſixth day.

|| Chaldee Paraph. on Numb. 22. and Jarch. on Deut. 34. and Pirke Abboth.

R. Jarchi on Gen. 2. obſerves, that God created one day ſuperior things, and another day inferior: his words are to this purpoſe.

On the firſt day he created Heaven above and Earth beneath. On the ſecond day, the Firmament above. On the third, let the dry Land appear beneath. On the fourth day, Lights above. On the fifth day, let the Waters bring forth beneath. On the ſixth, he muſt create both Superiour and Inferiour, as he had done on the firſt, leſt there ſhould be confuſion in his Work, therefore he made Man of both, his Soul from above, and his Body from beneath.

R. Tanchumah ſhews how the making of the Tabernacle harmonizeth with the making of the World: The Light of the firſt day anſwered, by the Candleſtick, for Light the firſt work; and the ſpreading of the Firmament, like a curtain, anſwered by the Curtains the ſecond work, and ſo of the reſt.

Every one knows the old conceit of the worlds laſting ſix thouſand years, becauſe it was made in ſix days: and of Elias Propheſie among the Jews, of the world ending, at the end of ſix thouſand: which Propheſie of his is ſtat againſt the words of Chriſt: Many believe theſe opinions, yet few prepare for the end which they think is ſo near.

God hath taught us by the courſe of the Creation of the old world, what our proceedings muſt be, that we may become a new Creation, or new Heavens, and a new Earth, renewed both in Soul and Body.

1. On the firſt day he made the Light, ſo the firſt thing in the new Man muſt be Light of Knowledge, ſo ſaith Saint Paul, Heb. 11. He that cometh to God muſt know that he is.

2. On the ſecond day he made the Firmament, ſo called, becauſe of its * ſureneſs, ſo the ſecond ſtep in Mans new Creation muſt be Firmamentum Fidei, the ſure foundation of Faith.

* Χάλκεον ἔσσε in Heſiod. ἔσαν δὲ πολυχάλκω Hom. Odyſ. 3

3. On the third day, the Seas and Trees bearing fruit: So the third ſtep in the new Man is that he become Waters of repentant Tears, and that he bring forth Fruit worthy of theſe Tears. Bring forth Fruit worthy of Repentance, ſaith the Baptiſt, Matth. 3.

4. On the fourth day, God created the Sun: that whereas on the firſt day there was light but without heat; now on the fourth day, there is light and heat joyned together. So the fourth ſtep in the new Creation of a new Man is, that he joyn the heat of Zeal with the light of his Knowledge: as in the Sacrifices fire and ſalt were ever joyned.

5. The

5. The fifth days work, was of fiſhes to play in the Seas, and the fouls to flie toward Heaven: So the fifth ſtep in a new creature is, to live and rejoyce in a Sea of troubles, and to flie by prayer and contemplation to Heaven.

6. On the ſixth day, God makes man: and all theſe things performed, man is a new creature. To reckon them altogether then, as S. Peter does his golden chain of vertues, 2 Pet. 1. Add to your light of Knowledge, the firmament of Faith, to your Faith, Seas of repentant Tears, to your Tears, the fruitful Trees of good Works, to your good Works, the hot Sunſhine of Zeal, to your Zeal, the winged fouls of Prayer and Contemplation; Et ecce omnia facta ſunt nova. Behold you are become a new Creature.

As the Bible begins, ſo it ends with a new Creation, of a new Heaven and a new Earth, and a new Paradiſe, and a new Tree of Life, Apoc. 21. unto all which, O thou whom my ſoul loveth, ſay come.

CHAP. XLVII.

Of the fall of Adam.

Cypriano di valer.

THE fall of Adam was the death of himſelf, the death of us, and the death of Chriſt. At his fall were three offenders, three offences, and perſons offended. Three offenders, Satan, Adam, Eve: three offences, Ignorance, weakneſs, and malice: three perſons offended, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. Eve ſinned of Ignorance, and ſo ſinned againſt the Son, the God of knowledge, and ſhe was forgiven; and ſo S. Paul ſinned, and was forgiven, 1 Tim. 1. 13. Adam ſinned of weakneſs, and ſo ſinned againſt the Father, the God of power, and he was pardoned; and ſo S. Peter ſinned, and he was pardoned, Matth. 26. But Satan ſinned of ſet malice, and ſo ſinned againſt the Holy Ghoſt, the God of love, and he was not forgiven: For he that ſpeaketh againſt the Holy Ghoſt, ſhall never be forgiven, Mark 3. 29. And in Gods cenſuring of theſe three, Gen. 3. He queſtioneth Adam and Evah before he ſentenceth, becauſe he had mercy for them, nay more, he promiſeth Chriſt before he inflict puniſhment: but for the Serpent, he never queſtioned, becauſe he would ſhew him no mercy. God left Adam to his own free-will, and ſuffered him to fall, quia ſciebat ſe, &c. becauſe he knew how to turn that fall of his, to his ſalvation. When Lazarus died, Chriſt was not there, that the raiſing of Lazarus by Chriſt might be the more glorious; So when Adam fell (as I may ſay ſo) God would not be there (for he left Adam to his own free-will) that the repairing of Adam through Chriſt might be the more glorious. Hereupon one ſings, O fœlix lapſus. Unhappy was the fall of Adam, ſince by his fall we all fell, but yet happy was that unhappy fall, ſince it muſt be recured by Chriſt. Joſeph ſuffered his brother Simeon to go into priſon for a while, that at laſt he might bring him out with greater comfort. So God ſuffered Adam to go into Satans Newgate for a while, that at laſt he might bring him out with greater comfort. The day thou eateſt hereof thou ſhalt dye, there is the priſon; And the man took and eat, there Adam goes into priſon: The ſeed of the woman ſhall break the head of the Serpent, there Joſeph delivers Simeon out of priſon, God brings man out of Hell through Chriſt. Whereupon a Doctor in admiration, queſtions, utrum mirabilius, homines juſtos creare, an injuſtos juſtificare: whether is more admirable, that God created man righteous, or that he juſtified man, when he had made himſelf unrighteous? Whether was more miraculous, for God to make man of nothing, or to repair him from worſe than nothing? Wonderful he was in both, in his firſt and his ſecond creation, for Juſtificatio eſt ſecunda hominis creatio, mans Juſtification is his new creation.

CHAP. XLVIII.

Ophitæ Evia.

SOme Hereticks in Epiphanius think themſelves beholden to the Devil, for his pains that he took to overthrow Adam: for they uſed to worſhip a Serpent, becauſe (ſay they) he brought knowledge into the world. Clemens Alexandrinus doth partly think, this conceit was got among the Heathens: who at their Feaſts of Bacchus uſed to carry a Serpent, as it were in proceſſion, and to cry Evia Evia. Εὐία ὁ Διόνυσσον, &c. And Evia (ſaith Clemens) if it be aſperated Hevia, it ſignifies in the Hebrew Tongue, a female Serpent. Where the good man calls the Chaldee Tongue, the Hebrew: For in the Hebrew I do not find ſuch a word for a Serpent: But all the Chaldee tranſlations of the Bible in the third of Geneſis and diverſe other places, do uſe the word חויא Hivia for a Serpent: which I take to be the word he means.

CHAP. XLIX.

Of the Greek Tranſlation of the fifth of Geneſis.

HOW the Septuagint does add hundreds of years to mens ages before and after the Flood, few Scholars but they know. This bred the difference of computation of the times, while ſome followed the Hebrew, ſome the Greek, Hence came two notorious doubts. About Methuſelah living after the Flood, who died a month or two before. And of Sem his death before Abrahams birth, who lived as long after Abraham came to Canaan, as Abraham was old when he came thither, viz. ſeventy five years. And ſo might well be Melchizedek. The Greeks had a great deal of ſtir where to put Methuſhelah all the Flood-time for fear of drowning: At laſt ſome laid him on the top of Noahs Ark, and there he was all that watry year. The Jews lay Og the Giant there alſo (as the Chaldee Paraphraſt upon the fourteenth of Geneſis ridiculouſly obſerveth:) Whoſe words (for your fuller ſport) I will not ſpare to ſet down. The thirteenth verſe he renders thus in Chaldee. And Og came who was left of thoſe that died in the Flood: for he rode upon the Ark, and was as a covering upon it, and was nouriſhed with Noahs victuals, but he was not preſerved for his own ſake or merit, but that the inhabitants of the world might ſee the power of the Lord, and ſay: Did not the Gyants in old time, rebel againſt the Lord of the world, and he deſtroyed them from the earth, yet aſſoon as theſe Kings make war, behold Og is with them, Og ſaith with himſelf, I will go and ſhew Abraham, Lots caſe, that he is taken priſoner, that ſo he may come to reſcue him, and may himſelf fall into their hands: He goes and comes to him about the Paſsover day, and finds him making unleavened cakes, then he told Abraham the Hebrew, &c. Thus far the Chaldee: of whoſe conceits here, and in one thouſand of places more, and ſo of his Nation the Jews; I know not whether to ſay, Riſum or fletum teneatis amici? But to return to my purpoſe. The Greek Bible makes Methuſhelah live fourteen years after the Flood, their reaſon of this their addition of years, many render, which I omit. But S. Auſten ſaith, ſome fall ſhort of this mans age. In three Greek books, ſaith he, and one Latine, and one Syrian book, all agreeing one with another, Methuſalem is found to die ſix years before the flood. So Auſten in Civ. Dei, lib. 15. cap. 13. Such differences may incite men to apply themſelves to the Hebrew Text, where is no falſifying nor error.

The Chaldee Paraphraſe of Jonathan, does alſo miſtake in the age of Methuſelah, but I think it only falſe Printing.

CHAP. L.

Upon the words: The ſeed of the woman ſhall break the Serpents head.

THE New Teſtament affords a rich Commentary upon theſe words, in the Goſpel of Saint Luke, who in his third Chapter, ſhews how through ſeventy five generations. Chriſt is this ſeed of the woman, and in the fourth Chapter, how through three temptations this ſeed began to bruiſe the head of the Serpent: where the Reader may obſerve, how the Devil tempts Chriſt, in the very ſame manner that he had tempted Eve, though not with the ſame ſucceſs. All the ſins of the world are brought by Saint John to theſe three heads, Luſt of the fleſh, luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life, 1 John 2. 15. By theſe three Eve falls in the garden: She ſees the tree is good for meat, and the luſt of the fleſh inticeth her; ſhe ſees it fair to look on, and the luſt of the eye provokes her; and ſhe perceives it will make her wiſe, and the pride of life perſwades her to take it. By theſe three the Devil tempts Chriſt; when he is hungry, he would have him turn ſtones into bread, and ſo tries him by the luſts of the fleſh: He ſhews, and promiſeth him all the pomp of the World, and ſo tries him by the luſt of the eyes, and he will have him to flie in the air, and ſo tempts him to pride of life. But as, by theſe three, the Serpent had broken the head of the woman, ſo againſt theſe three the ſeed of the woman breaks the head of the Serpent. David Prophecied of this conqueſt, Pſal. 91. 13. The Dragon thou ſhalt tread under thy feet: The very next verſe before this, the Devil uſeth to tempt Chriſt withal, but to this he dare not come, for it is to his ſorrow.

Jerus: and Babilon: targums do both apply theſe words to the Meſſias.

Jewiſh hypocritical prayers, reproved by our Saviour, Matth. 6. 5. Becauſe they love to ſtand praying in the Synagogues and corners of the ſtreets.

THIS Sermon upon the Mount, is much in reproof of the Jews Talmudical traditions, by which they made the Word of God of none effect. This verſe reproveth one of their tenets, for their high-way Oraiſons: for which they have this tradition in their * Talmud. Rabbi Joſe, ſaith, On a time I was walking by the way, and I went into one of the deſerts of Jeruſalem to pray, then came Eliah, || of bleſſed memory, and watched me at the gate, and ſtayed for me, till I had ended my prayer: after that I had ended my prayer, he ſaith unto me, Peace be unto thee Rabbi; I ſaid unto him, peace be upon thee Rabbi, and Maſter. Then ſaid he to me, my ſon, wherefore wenteſt thou into this deſert; I ſaid unto him, To pray; He ſaid to me, Thou mighteſt have prayed in the way. Then ſaid I, I was afraid, leſt paſſengers would interrupt me: He ſaid unto me, Thou ſhouldeſt have prayed a ſhort prayer. At that time I learned of him three things; I learned that we ſhould not go into the deſert; and I learned that we ſhould pray by the way, and learned, that he that prayed by the way muſt pray a ſhort prayer. Thus far their Talmud maketh them theſe Letters Patents for Hypocriſie; fathering this baſtard upon bleſſed Elias, who was not a high-way prayer, or one that practiſed his own devotions in publick: for he was John Baptiſts type for retiredneſs.

CHAP. LII.

Iſraels affliction in Egypt.

OF Iſraels being in Egypt, many Heathen Authors do touch, though every one a ſeveral way, and all of them the wrong. Joſephus againſt Appion is angry at their fables about it. Of the famine that brought them thither (if we take the want of Nilus flowing to be the natural cauſe, as moſt like it was) there ſeems then to be ſome remembrance of thoſe ſeven years in Seneca, in his natural queſtions; where he ſaith, Per novem annos Nilum non aſcendiſſe ſuperioribus ſæculis, Callimachus eſt Author: that is, Callimachus writes, that in old time Nilus flowed not of nine years together: where he outſtrips but two of the number. But of Iſraels affliction in Egypt, I find the Heathens ſilent. God had told Abraham of this their hardſhip long before, and ſhewed him a token of it, by the fowls lighting upon his carcaſſes, Gen. 15. A type of Iſraels being in Egypt, and of Pharoahs being plagued for their ſakes, was, when Pharoah ſuffered, for taking Sarah from her husband, and keeping her in his houſe: as it is, Gen. 12. How long they were in that land, few there be but know: but how long their affliction laſted, is uncertain. Probable it is, that it was about an hundred and twenty years, the time of the old Worlds repentance, and Moſes his age: This is to be ſearched by Levi his age, which within a little one may find certain. All the generation of Joſephs time die, before they are afflicted: as all the generation of Joſhuahs time die, before they fall to Idolatry; Judges 2. 10. The reaſons why God ſhould thus ſuffer them to ſuffer: whether it were to fit them for the receiving of him and his Law, or whether it were to whip them for their Idolatry: or for ſome other cauſe, I dare not enter too near to ſearch: this I ſee, that when the foundation (as it were) of the viſible Church is laid thus in affliction, the Church cannot but look for affliction, whileſt it lives in the Egypt of this World. But as Iſrael increaſed under perſecution: ſo does the Church, for even when ſparſum eſt ſemen ſanguinis Martyrum, ſurrexit ſeges Eccleſiæ: Nec fruſtra oravit Eccleſia pro inimicis ſuis crediderunt, & qui perſequebantur: Auſt. Ser. de Temp. 109. To omit the Jews fancy, that the Iſraelitiſh women bare ſix at a birth, and to omit queſtioning whether fœtifer Nilus, the drinking of the water of Nilus, which (as ſome ſay is good for generation) did conduce to the increaſing of Iſrael, I can only look at God, and his work, which did thus multiply and ſuſtain them in the furnace of affliction. Si Deus nobiſcum quis contra nos? God had promiſed this increaſe to Jacob, as he fled to Haran, Gen. 28. in a dream from the top of Jacobs ladder. And here he proves faithful who had promiſed.

Nilus the wonder of Affrick the river of Egypt flows every year on t over his banks: and if it flow not at all, or not to his right height, it cr ſeth famine, for Egypt hath no rain. From this river, under God comes their plenty or famine: and it is remarkable that the fat and lean kine in Pharoah his dream (which betokened the plenty or ſcarſity of the Country) came out of the River. Of the reaſon of the flowing of this River, Pigaffetta eſpecially is large. And I wonder that Jordan was not as much wondred at, or it did ſo alſo, Joſh. 1.

Iſraels Camp: according to the Chaldee Paraphraſt his deſcription, Numb. 2.

THE Chaldee is preciſe about pitching Iſraels Camp: I have not thought much to tranſlate a whole Chapter out of him, that the Reader may ſee (at the leaſt) his Will, if not his Truth.

Numb. 11. 1. And the Lord ſpake to Moſes and to Aaron ſaying,

18. The Standard of the Camp of Ephraim by their hoaſts, pitched Weſtward, and their Camp was four mile ſquare, and his Enſign was of three party colours, like the three ſtones in the breſtplate, a Turky, an Achat, and an Hamatite, and in it was deciphered and expreſſed the names of three Tribes, Ephraim, Manaſſeh, and Benjamin, and in the middle was written:

24. All the number of the Camp of Ephraim, one hundred eighty thouſand and one hundred, by their Armies, and they went in the third place.

25. The Standard of the Camp of Dan Northward, and their Camp four miles ſquare; and his Enſign was of three party colours according to the three ſtones in the breſtplate, a Chryſolite, Onyx, and Jaſper, and in it were deciphered and expreſſed the names of three Tribes, Dan, Naphtali, Aſher, and in the middeſt was written and expreſſed

ובנחה ואמר שובה יהוה רבבות אלפו ישראל

And when it reſted, he ſaid, return O Lord to the ten thouſand of Iſrael, and in it was drawn the figure of a Serpent, or Arrow-ſnake, and the Prince that was ſet over the hoaſt of the Children of Dan, Ahiezer the ſon of Ammiſhaddai. From thence to the end of the Chapter, he goes on juſt with the Hebrew Text, ſo that I will ſpare further labour about Tranſlating: only I muſt tell the Reader thus much, that the Pearls he ſpeaks of, I have not punctually followed the Chaldee in rendring their names, but have followed the Geneva Bible, which was at that inſtant the only Engliſh Bible about me. As alſo for perfect and future tenſe, I find the Chaldee confuſed, and for this I have been the leſs curious.

CHAP. LIV.

Of Job.

ABOUT Iſraels being in Egypt, Job lives in Arabia: a heathen man and yet ſo good: and ſo St. Gregory ſaith, his Country is purpoſely named, that the goodneſs of the man may be the more illuſtrated. His times may be picked by the genealogy of himſelf, and his friends that come to ſee him. And God in the firſt and ſecond Chapter ſaith, that there was not a man on earth like him for goodneſs: which is a ſign that Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and Joſeph, were not alive, nor Moſes: but in the times 'twixt Joſeph and Moſes, Iſrael corrupt themſelves with Egyptian Idols, and in Iſrael (the likelieſt place to find a good man in) is not one to be found like Job. Thus when Iſrael idolizes, and the Church begins to fail in Jacob, God hath one in Arabia that hath a little Church in his houſe. It is not amiſs for every one for his more watchfulneſs to mark, that Satan knows Job as ſoon as ever God ſpeaks of him.

When the Angels appear before God, Satan the Devil is among them. } So { When the Diſciples are with Chriſt, Judas a Devil is among them.

Pharoah in Egypt is afflicted by God. His afflictions harden him againſt God. } { Job in Arabia is afflicted by the Devil. His afflictions harden him againſt the Devil.

Jobs Children feaſting overwhelmed by an houſe. } { The Philiſtins ſporting, overwhelmed by an houſe, *Judg.*16.

Job is afflicted as the ſouldiers, 2 King. 1. by fire.
As the Ziklagites, 1 Sam. 30. by Captivity.
As the Egyptians with loſs of Children, *Exod.*12.
And as the Egyptians with boils, Exod. 9.
And which was not his leaſt croſs, like Adam, with an ill counſelling wife.

Job

Job hath three with him when he is changed by affliction. } So { Chriſt hath three with him when he is changed in transfiguration: which three as they were by Chriſt when Moſes and Elias, Law and Propheſie told him in the mount of his departing which he ſhould accompliſh at Jeruſalem, Luke 9. 31. So theſe three were with him when he began to accompliſh theſe things, Matth. 26.37.

CHAP. LV.

Egyptians Deities, ex Athenæ. Deipn. Lib. 7.

A Naxandrides in his book of Cities, turning his ſpeech to the Egyptians, ſaith thus:

Οὐκ ἀνδυνάμην συμμαχεῖν ὑμῖν ἐγώ
Οὐθ' ὅτι τέρποι χὠ ὁμοῦς ἐθ οἱ νόμοι
Ἀπ' ἀλλήλων ἡ διέχουσιν πολύ.
Βῶν προσκυνεῖς, ἐγὰ δὲ θύω τοῖς θεοῖς.
Ἰῶν ἔγχελυν μέγιστον ἐγὼ δάμονα.
Ἡμεῖς ἡ πρὸ ὄψων μέγιστον ὦ δεσπολύ.
Οὐκ ἐσθίεις ὕεια ἔγω ἡ γ' ἥδομαι
Μάλιστα τούτοις· Κυνασίβεις πόπω δ' ἐγὼ
Τὸν ὄφιν κατεσθίουσαν ὠνίκην λάβω.
Τὰς ἱερὰς ἐνταῦθα μὴ ὁλοκλήρως νόμῳ
Εἶναι παρ ὑμῖν ἡ ὡς ἔοικεν ἀπεγμύους.
Σὺ μὴν τὸ δείλαιον κακὸν ἔχοντ' ἴν ἴδῃς
Κλαίοις ἐγὰ δ' ἴδις' ἀποκτείνας δ' ἔρω.
Δύναλαι παρ ὑμῖν μυγαλῆ, παρ ἐμοί δὲ γ' ὦ.

Thus does one Heathen Idolater deride another, becauſe he worſhips (as the other thinks) the more ridiculous Deities. The very Heathen could deride and ſcoff at their vain gods. Dionyſius was moſt notorious this way: and knaviſh in this kind was the Painter, who when he ſhould have drawn the picture of ſuch a goddeſs for a Grecian City to worſhip, he drew the portraiture of his own ſweet-heart, and ſo made her to be adored: And indeed what man could have held laughing, to have ſeen (as my Poet ſaith here) an Egyptian on his maribones adoring a Dog, or praying to an Ox, or eſpecially to ſee him mourning and howling over a ſick Cat: fearing leſt his ſcratching God ſhould die?

CHAP. LVI.

Of the Law broken by Adam.

THE Law was Adams leaſe when God made him tenent of Eden: The conditions of which bond when he kept not, he forfeited himſelf and all us. God read a lecture of the Law to him before he fell, to be * a hedge to him to keep him in Paradiſe, but when Adam would not keep within compaſs, this Law is now become as the flaming ſword at Eden gate to keep him and his poſterity out: Adam heard as much in the garden, as Iſrael did at Sinai, but only in fewer words and without thunder. The Law came more gently to him before his fall, but after his fall, comes the thunder with it.

* The Jews in their writings uſe this phraſe frequently for the Law, as in Pirke Ahhoth.

Adam at one clap breaks both the Tables and all the Commandments.

1. He choſe him another god when he followed the Devil.
2. He idolized and deified his own belly, as the Apoſtles phraſe is, his belly he made his god.
3. He took the name of God in vain, when he believed him not.
4. He kept not the reſt and eſtate wherein God had ſet him.
5. He diſhonoured his Father which was in Heaven, therefore his days were not long in that land which the Lord his God had given him.
6. He maſſacred himſelf and all his poſterity.
7. From Eve he was Virgin, but in eyes and mind he committed ſpiritual fornication.
8. He ſtole that (like Achan) which God had ſet aſide not to be medled with, and this his ſtealth is that which troubles all Iſrael, the whole world.

9. He bare witneſs againſt God, when he believed the witneſs of the Devil above him.

10. He coveted an ill covetouſneſs (like Amnon) which coſt him his life and all his progeny.

What a neſt of evils here were committed at one blow? The pride of heart and deſire of more knowledge (like Hamans ambition) overthrew us. This ſin was hatched in Heaven by the wicked Angels, but thrown out with them, and never will come in there again. Hence is this ſin ſo lofty becauſe it affects its firſt neſt. It is not for nothing that Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit, are the firſt words in Chriſts Sermon, Matth. 5. 3. but becauſe the proud in ſpirit were the firſt ſinners.

CHAP. LVII.

Of the Law given at Sinai.

WHEN Iſrael is got from the hard ſervice of Egypt, God binds them apprentiſe to a new Maſter, himſelf. Their Indentures he draws upon Mount Sinai: a place where Moſes before had kept a flock of ſheep, now he keeps a troop of men. In the Delivery of the Law there, if you will ſtand with Iſrael in your place you may conſider many paſſages.

CHAP. LVIII.

Why the Law was publiſhed then and not before.

AT Sinai was delivered no new thing, the Law in ſome kind was known before. Sacrifice was uſed by Adam in the garden, when the body of the beaſts went for an offering for his ſoul, and the skins for a covering for his body: Cain and Abel learn this part of worſhip from their father. The diviſion of clean and unclean beaſts is known to Noah, when they come to him for their lives as they had done to Adam for their names. Abraham when God made a * covenant with him, Geneſis 15. Divides and divides not his beaſts and fowls, juſt as God commands, Lev. 1. 6. 17. and ſo of the reſt. Fathers could teach their Children theſe things as they themſelves had learned them of their Fathers. But when men began to multiply, and multitude to be more wicked, than would they not be ſo eaſily bridled by a Law, whoſe author they knew no more of, but their Fathers: And when men lived but a ſhort time in compariſon of the firſt men, and ſo could not ſee the full ſetling of the Law in their houſes: And when God had fetched him a people out of Egypt, and laid the foundation of a glorious Church, with ſigns and wonders, then he thought it fit for their reſtriction, as alſo || for their diſtinction from the Heathen, to give the Law from his own mouth, the more to procure reverence to him: For Heaven and Earth muſt needs hearken when the Lord ſpeaketh, Iſa. 1. 2. And thus did † the Heathen fain they received their Laws from a Deity that was never ſeen, and yet their Laws were the better obſerved for that reaſon.

* So ſays the Geneva Bible in marg. but Rab. Solomon long before ſaith thus, It is the cuſtom of thoſe that make covenants, to divide beaſts into two parts, and paſs between the parts: as Jer. 24. 18. And God paſſes between theſe in this ſmoking furnace and fire brand, for making covenants in like kinds Homer ſpeaks near this.

CHAP. LIX.

Of the place where it was given, and manner.

GOD gave the Law in Arabia: ſo wicked Mahomet gave his Law in Arabia; A worſe and a better thing no one Country every afforded. God gave his Law in Sinai, a buſhy place as it ſeems by * the name, agreeable to the giving of ſo perplexing a matter. Carry along with thee (gentle Reader) as thou readeſt the Scripture, thus much care (at my requeſt) as to mark that the Law of Moſes was given in two places, Sinai, and the Tabernacle, as alſo to conſider that ſome part of this Law did only concern the Jews, and ſome part did alſo concern all the World. The Ceremonial Law that concerned only the Jews, it was given to Moſes in private in * the Tabernacle, and fell with the Tabernacle when the veil rent in twain. The Moral Law concerns the whole World, and it was given in ſight of the whole World on the top of a mountain, and muſt endure as long as any mountain ſtandeth. The Judicial Law (which is more indifferent, and may ſtand or fall, as ſeems beſt for the good of a Common-wealth) was given neither ſo publick as the one, nor ſo private as the other, but in a mean between both.

* Seneh ſignifies a buſh, Exodus 3.

* Levit. 1.

The Law on Sinai was with fire and trumpets, ſo ſhall Chriſt come with fire and trumpet at the latter day, to take an account how men have kept this fiery Law, as it is called, Deut. 33. 2. Fiery, becauſe given out of the fire, as the Jeruſalem and Babilonian Targums

Targums hold: though I think there is more meant by the words than ſo: for it is Eſh-dath, which may be rendred the fire of a Law.

CHAP. LX.

Of the effects of the Law.

THE letter of the Law is death: but the Spirit giveth life. The Jews ſtand upon the letter, and think to gain life by the works of it, but them the Apoſtle frequently confuteth. And I take the aim of Chriſts Parable, *Matth.*20. about the penny to extend to no leſs. Some came into the Vineyard at the Dawning of the Day or the Age before the Flood, and ſome at the third hour, or in the time before the Law, and ſome at the ſixth and ninth hour, or under the heat and burden of the Jewiſh Law, and ſome at the laſt, under the Goſpel: Thoſe under the Law plead for merit, we have born the heat and burden of the day: that is, coſtly Sacrifices, ſore Ceremonies, &c. To whom the Maſter anſwers that his penny is his own, and if he give it, it is not for their merit, but his good will. St. Paul calls the Law a School-Maſter, and ſo it is indeed: and ſuch a School-Maſter as that that Livy and Florus ſpeak of in Italy, who brought forth his children that were truſted with him, to Hannibal, who if he had not been more merciful than otherwiſe, they had all periſhed. So they that rely upon the works of the Law, are in fine conſtrained by the Law to come to Chriſt, who more merciful than the Law, does deliver them. And if you well weigh it, you ſhall find that as the whole Law, ſo every part from one to another, brings us to Chriſt. The Moral Law ſhews us what we ſhould do, and with the ſame ſight we find that we cannot do it: This makes us to ſeek to the Ceremonial for ſome Sacrifice or Ceremony to anſwer for our not doing it: There we ſee that burning a dead beaſt is but poor ſatisfaction for the ſins of men living, and that outward purifyings of mens ſelves can avail but little to the cleanſing of a ſoiled ſoul: this then delivers us to the Judicial Law, and by it we ſee what we deſerve, and thus in fine we are conſtrained to ſeek to Chriſt * Jeſus, for there is no other name whereby we muſt be ſaved. The Parable that our Saviour propounds in the tenth of Luke, I think tends ſomethink to this purpoſe. A man (ſaith he) went from Jeruſalem to Jericho and fell among theeves, and they robbed him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed leaving him half dead. A certain Prieſt came that way, and when he ſaw him he turned aside. A Levite came that way, and when he ſaw him, he paſſed by on the other ſide. But a good Samaritan came, (as the Text imports) and pitied him, and ſalved him, and lodged him, and paid for him. Such a one is man fallen among Satan, Sin and Death, and by them ſtopt, ſtript and ſtriped. Satan diſmounts him off his Innocency that ſhould ſuſtain him: Sin ſtrips him of all Righteouſneſs that ſhould array him: Death ſtrikes him with guiltineſs and wounds him. Here is a man in a woful caſe, and none to aid him. By comes a Prieſt, that is, firſt come the Sacrifices of the legal Prieſthood, and they may paſs by him, but they do not, nor they cannot help him. By comes a Levite, that is, the Ceremonies of the Levitical Law, and they may paſs by him, but they do not, they cannot help him. Or by comes a Prieſt, that is, the Angels may ſee him thus, but they let him lie, for they cannot help him. By comes a Levite, that is, Men and the World may ſee him thus, but they let him alone for ever, for they cannot ſuccour him. But by comes a good Samaritan, that is, our Saviour himſelf, who is called a Samaritan, and is ſaid to have a Devil, and he pities him, ſalves him, lodges him, and pays for him. He pities him in very bowels, therefore he ſays, as I live I would not the death of a ſinner. He ſalves him with his own blood, therefore tis ſaid, By his ſtripes we are healed. He lodges him in his own Church, therefore the Church ſaith, He brought me in the winecellar, and love was his banner over me. And he pays for him what he deſerved, therefore he ſaith, I have troad the Winepreſs alone.

Vid. Hillar. & Hieron. in loc.

* It was Jeſus or Joſuah, and not Moſes or the Law that brought Iſrael into the Land of Canaan.

It is ſaid in the Book of Kings that when the Shunamites dead child was to be raiſed, Eliſha firſt ſent his ſtaff to be laid upon him, but that did no good: but when Eliſha came himſelf, and lay upon him, with his mouth to the Childs mouth, his eyes to his eyes, and his hands to his hands, then the Child recovered. So when man was dead in treſpaſſes, and ſin, as it is, Eph. 2. God lays his * ſtaff or rod of the Law upon him, but what good did this toward his recovery? Even make him to long the more for Eliſha or Chriſt, who when he came, and laid his mouth to mans mouth, and kiſſed humanity in his Incarnation, and laid his eyes to his eyes, and his hands to his hands, and ſuffered for mans actions at his paſſion, then is man recured. God in the book of Iſay when he is to ſend a Prophet to Iſrael, ſays thus, Mi eſhlah: whom ſhall I ſend, or who will go for us? Iſa. 6. 8. Upon which words the Jew Kimchi paraphraſes thus: Shalahti eth Micah, wehem maccim otho, Shalahti eth Amos, wehem korin otho * Peſiluſa, I have ſent Micah, and him they ſmote, I have ſent Amos, and him they called a ſtammerer. Whom ſhall I ſend or who will

* Pſal. 23.

* Amos in Heb. ſignifies one that is heavy tonged which Kimchi calls Peleleuſa from the Greek ψελλος Blæſus.

will go for us? Then ſays Eſay, Behold I am here, ſend me. Imagine that (upon the fall of man) you ſaw God about to ſend the great Prophet not to Iſrael alone, but to all the World, nor only to teach, but alſo to redeem. Suppoſe you heard him thus queſtioning, whom ſhall I ſend to reſtore fallen man? And who will go for us? Should I ſend Angels? They are creatures and conſequently finite, and ſo cannot anſwer mine infinite Juſtice. Should I ſend man himſelf? Alas, though he once had power not to have fallen, yet now hath he no power to raiſe himſelf again. Should I ſend beaſts to ſacrifice themſelves for him? Alas can the burning of dead beaſts ſatisfie for the ſins of all men alive? Whom ſhall I ſend, or who will go for us? Our Saviour is ready to anſwer with Iſay, Behold I am here, ſend me. Here am I that am able to do it; ſend me, for I am willing. I am able, for I am God; I am willing, for I will become a man. I am God, and ſo can fulfil the Law which man hath broke. I will become man, that ſo I may ſuffer death which man hath deſerved. Behold I am here, ſend me. Then as one of our Country Martyrs at his death, ſo may we ſing all our lives; None but Chriſt, none but Chriſt: None but Chriſt to cure the wounded travailor, None but Chriſt to raiſe the dead Shunamite, None but Chriſt to reſtore decaid mankind, None but Chriſt that would' None but Chriſt that could. No Angel, no Man, no Creature, no Sacrifice, no Ceremony, that would and could do this for us, which we could not do for our ſelves, and ſay for us I have trod the Winepreſs alone.

When the Ceremonial and Judicial Law have thus brought us to Chriſt, we may ſhake hands with them and farewel, but for the Moral, as it helps to bring us thither, ſo muſt it help to keep us there. For Chriſt came not to diſannul this Law, but to fulfil it. He does not acquit us from this, but furthers us to the keeping of it. What elſe is the Goſpel, but this in milder terms of Faith and Repentance: which is, ſince we cannot keep this Law, yet to ſtrive to keep it as we can, and to repent us for that we have not kept it, and to relie upon his merits that hath kept it for us. Thus as love to God and to our neighbours was the ſum of the Old, ſo true faith and unfained repentance is the total of the New. This was the tenour of Chriſts firſt words after his Baptiſm, Mark 1.15. and of his laſt words before his Aſcenſion, Mark 16.16.

CHAP. LXI.

Of the Ten Commandments.

THE Ten Commandments may be called the Word of the Word of God: for though all Scripture be his Word, yet theſe in more ſpecial be his Scripture, to which he made himſelf his own Scribe or Pen-man: upon theſe Commandments hang all the Law and the Prophets, and theſe Commandments upon two duties, to love God and to love our neighbour. A ſhorter and yet a fuller Comment needs not to be given of them, than what our Saviour hath given, Luke 10. 27. Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul, and with all thy ſtrength, and with all thy mind: and thy neighbour as thy ſelf. The four Commandments of the firſt Table he expounds in four words.

The Lord thy God, there is the Preface, I am the Lord, &c.
Thou ſhalt love the Lord, &c. with all thy

Heart Soul Strength Mind	for the	First Second Third Fourth	Commandment.

If we need any further Expoſition upon this Expoſition of our Saviours, it is eaſie to find: as, thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thine Heart Soul Strength Mind	for it he hath	Created. Redeemed. Preſerved. Inlightned.

And therefore thou ſhalt love him with all thine

Heart Soul Strength Mind	without	Only talking and no more. Diſſembling, Revolting. Erring.

This is the firſt and the great Commandment, and the other is like unto this, thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf. This adds great light to the ſecond Table, for half of the Commandments of that Table want an object whereupon to faſten the duty. The firſt hath one, Honour thy Father, &c. the laſt but one, hath one, thou ſhalt not witneſs falſely againſt thy neighbour: And ſo the laſt hath, Thou ſhalt not covet ought of thy Neighbours. But Thou ſhalt not kill, ſteal, and commit adultery, theſe have no object, viz. none named whom, from whom, and with whom we muſt not kill, ſteal, nor adulterate: becauſe we muſt make our ſelves alſo the object here: and reflect the Commandments upon our ſelves, as thus: Thou ſhalt not kill, firſt not thy ſelf, and ſecondly, not thy neighbour, and ſo of the reſt. The Jews have been too bold in adding too ſtrict an object, as you may ſee in their explaining theſe three precepts. And ſome Hereticks have been too nice in giving ſome of them too * large a one.

The fifth Commandment in the Ten, is with a Promiſe, and the fifth Petition in the Lords Prayer, is with a Condition.

I omit the exquiſiteneſs of the pricking of this piece of Scripture of the Commandments extraordinarily: Some ſpecial thing is in it.

The Jews do gather ſix hundred and thirteen Precepts Negative and Affirmative to be in the whole Law, according to the ſix hundred and thirteen letters in the two Tables, and ſo many veins and members in a mans body. The order of theſe Precepts they have ſet down in the margin of the Pentateuch with the threefold Targum printed at Hannow, and in Sepher Habbinnuch. I had tranſlated ſome hundreds of them into Engliſh, which I thought to have finiſhed, and preſented to the view of the Reader, but I find, that without the Jews Comments upon theſe their Diviſions, they can hardly be underſtood: which to bring withal, is a pains of no ſmall time and labour. Theſe my Obſervations and Collections in my Reading, accept gentle Reader, and the ſlips paſs over with a gentle Eye, as ſlips of Youth: which more mature years may recure, if God proſper and ſecond. To whom I commit my ſelf, and commend thee, and to whom be all honour and glory for evermore. Amen.

DESCRIBED

By JOHN LIGHTFOOT, D.D. and Maſter of Katharine-Hall or College in the Univerſity of CAMBRIDGE.

LONDON,

Printed by W. R. for Robert Scot in Little-Britain, Thomas Baſſet in Fleet-Street, Richard Chiswell in St. Paul's Church-yard, and John Wright on Ludgate-Hill. MDCLXXXIV.

READER.

I Could with as little pains and travail have journied to Jerusalem to have taken a view of the Temple, had it now ſtood, as this hath coſt me to ſurvey it by the Eyes of others in their Writings, as I have done: And for all my labour, how I ſhall ſpeed in the acceptance of the Reader, I muſt leave it to the common doubtful fate of Books, being neither willing to beg it, nor to deſpair of it. If I have come ſhort either of the worth of the matter treated of, or failed the expectation of the Reader, the difficulty of the Subject may plead my Apology, and my deſire to benefit, may lighten my cenſure.

There is hardly a harder Task in Study than to deſcribe Structures and places not ſeen, and at diſtance; and the Scripture hath hardly a more obſcure deſcription of any thing than of this Fabrick. In that I have added ſo much of Jewiſh intelligence about it, it is becauſe I find not where better information (after the Scriptures) is to be had. I know they hear as ill as any Men for their Writings, and that very oft not without very good cauſe; yet give them leave to tell the ſtory of their own Cuſtoms and Antiquities aſſoon as another Man: and if you will not believe them what they ſay, to produce others that ſpeak more credibly in the matter in hand I believe will be next impoſſible.

I ſhall not plead for them in all they Write, leſt I ſhould be like unto them; in things of Hiſtorical nature, I cannot but give ſome credence to them, as being likely to be the beſt Recorders of their own Antiquities.

It is well known to the Studious how much light hath been held out by ſome Learned Men towards the explication of abundance of difficulties in Scripture, by the diſcovery of the Jewiſh Cuſtoms and Antiquities, to which the New Teſtament ſpeaketh and alludeth exceeding copiouſly and frequently: I need not go far for examples of Learned Men that have been choicely happy in ſuch illuſtrations: A matchleſs pair in our own Nation, ſecond to none in any Nation whatſoever, Mr. Hugh Broughton in the laſt Generation, and Mr. Selden in this, may be inſtances ſufficient. Now though it is far enough from my thoughts and hopes to dream of atchieving to the leaſt degree and meaſure of their skill in theſe Studies, and their happineſs in ſuch explanations: yet can I not but from ſuch incouragements of experience in others, go on with the more delight in the peruſal of ſuch Monuments my ſelf, not without hope that I may reap ſome profit by them to my ſelf, and hold out ſomething from them which may not be altogether uſeleſs to others.

What may redound of this kind out of this preſent Volume, I muſt leave to the Readers cenſure, and not be my own judge: This I hope I may ſay of it without arrogance or falſhood, that this Subject hath ſcarcely been ſo largely handled in our Engliſh Tongue heretofore, and that what is here produced out of Jewiſh Records, doth for the moſt part carry ſo fair poſſibility and probability with it, and is ſo little diſſonant either to Scripture or reaſon, and ſo conſonant to Joſephus, whoſe credit is commonly reputed above Talmudical, that that if on the one hand there is not undeniable ground to believe it, neither is there on the other hand, undeniable ground to gainsay it.

I had undertaken a Task of a far larger Time, Toil, and Volume, and the same way of Workmanship that I have done this; namely, from Scripture, and from Talmudical and Jewish Writers, to have given a Description of the Land of Canaan; so far am I satisfied of the benefit of these Authors, if dexterously managed. And certainly if my judgment do not much fail me, exceeding singular use might be made of them in such a Work, and hundreds, or rather thousands of Learned Rarities as to that Subject produced out of them, not to be found in any Authors but themselves, which tend not a little to the illustration of the Chorography and Story of that Land: But when I had spent a good large time and progress in that Work, I found that I was happily prevented in that Subject by a more Learned and Acute Pen; which though it went not the same way in that Work that I had done, yet was it so far before me both in progress and in accuracy, that I knew it would be lost labour for me to proceed further. Hereupon I left off that Task, left I should* actum agere, and diverted my thoughts to this survey, because of a promise which had a tie upon me for something of this nature.

* Mr. Tho. Fuller, B. D.

With the working up of this piece, I also drew up a large Map of the Temple structures, according to the verbal Description of them in this Volume, the sight and comparing of which would have made the things here described a great deal more easie and pleasant to be understood, could it have been published; but I have not yet met with the faculty and fortune of bringing it to that issue: and I thought to have suppressed this Tract till that also might have come forth with it; but I have been overcome to let it out, partly by the importunity of others, and partly by this Reason of mine own, that it might not be amiss to try what acceptance this Treatise will find, before I add more pains and charge for the ingraving of the Map. If any of my Learned Friends upon perusal of this Tract, shall think the publication of that may be material, I shall be ready to embrace such animation, and use my best endeavour to effect the thing, if it will be effected.

CHAP. I.

Of the Situation of Mount MORIAH: הר הבית

MORIAH * the Mountain of the Lords House, from whencesoever it had its denomination (about which there are various conjectures) it is certain, it had its designation for that use and honour to which it was imployed, ‖ by fire from Heaven, and of old time, * by Abraham's offering up his Son Isaac there in a figure. a Some are of opinion that it was called Moriah from הוראה Instruction, because from thence there went forth a Law and Doctrine for all Israel: b others conceive the name to have been derived from the word מור Mor, which betokeneth Myrrh, and spicery, because it was to be the only place of offering Incense; c others from מוראה יה Morech jah, The Lord will be visible, because the Son of God was to appear there in humane flesh. And so they all repute, that it carried a notation prædictive, or referring to something that was to occur there in time to come. But if we will apply the Etymology of it to that time present, when it and the Country about it did first take that name of the Land of Moriah, we may construe it, The Land of a teacher of God, (as John III. 2.) or the Land of the Lord my teacher, as being the Territory of Sem, or Melchisedeck, the great Teacher of the ways of the Lord, (while the Canaanites round about did walk in blindness, and were led by Teachers only of delusion) and the Land which the Lord his teacher had designed to him in the prediction of his Father Noah.

d This Mount was so seated in the midst of Jerusalem, that the City lay Κατ' ἐφεδρας, in form of a Theatre round about it. e On the South lay Jerusalem it self built upon Mount Acra, and Acra naturally higher than Moriah, f but much levelled by the Asmonean Family in the time of their reign, and the valley betwixt, well raised and filled up with Earth, that both the Temple might over-top the buildings on Acra, and that the coming up from the City to the Temple, might be the more plain and easie, compare Luke III. 5. g On the North side lay Mount Sion, furnished with the gallant buildings of the Palace, Court, and City of David. These two Mountains Acra and Sion, and the Cities built built upon them (the London and Westminster, City, and Court of the Land of Canaan) did so decline and descend upon their South-East and North-East points, that on the East and West of the Temple they met and saluted each other in a valley, having also a deep valley betwixt them and the Temple on every side, but only on the South, where it was the less deep, because of the levelling, mentioned immediately before.

Although this Mount Moriah were not so high of it self as the two Hills on either side it, yet was it of a great pitch and steepness, h Λόφος κραταιὸς ὀπόκειμαι ἐν ἀπάντῃ τῷ περίξ, A strong heap, steep, and deep on every side. And it was a discerning note of a young male child, i That he was bound to appear before the Lord, at the three Festivals, if he were once come to be able, to go up the Mountain of the Temple holding his Father by the hand.

h Id. de Bell. lib. 5. cap. 14.

This Mount fell so in the division of the Land, that part of it was in the lot of one Tribe, and part of it in another; k For most part of the Courts was in the portion of Judah, but the Altar, Porch, Temple, and most holy place were in the portion of Benjamin. And that part that lay in the portion of Judah was made hollow under וכיפין על גבי כיפין הוו בנויות מפני אהל הטומאה with arches built upon arches underneath, (saith Maimony) l because of the Tent of defilement.

Now this that he calleth the Tent of defilement, might very well be supposed to be a Sink, or common Shore, made under ground, and arched over for the conveyance of all the filth and wash of the Courts away, (and that there was such a thing we shall see hereafter) but he explaineth himself in another place, and saith that כל הר הבית והעזרות תחתיהן היה חלול מפני קבר התהום m All the Mountain of the house (that is the outmost space) and all the other Courts were hollow under, because of an abyss or deep grave. Now the Talmudicks do use to call a Sunk, unseen or unsuspected grave, קבר התהום n an abyss grave, τὸ μνημεῖον τὸ ἄδηλον, in the Gospel language, Luke IX. 44. And so they call an unseen or unknown uncleaness, טומאת התהום o An abyss of uncleannesses, and they oppose to it טומאת ידוע An uncleanness known of. Wherefore that they might be sure that there should be no graves secretly made in any of the Courts of the Temple, by which they might be defiled, they arched all the Courts under ground, so as that there were כיפין על גבי כיפין Arches upon arches (as my Author expresseth it, which he explaineth in another p place, in another story of the like nature) כיפין על שני כיפין One arch set upon two arches, so that the feet of an arch stood upon two arches that were under it. And so it was either impossible to bury above the Arch for want of soil, or if it were possible to bury below the arches, it was deep and far enough from defiling.

CHAP. II.

The measure of the floor of the Mountain of the Temple.

Ἀνωτάτω χθαμαλόν.

THE compass of the floor of Moriah a did increase by time and industry (somewhat, though not much) above what it was when Solomon first began the Temple there: For b whereas David by divine direction had built an Altar, and God by divine Fire upon it, had fixed that very place for the place of the Altar of the Temple; the Mountain possibly in some part of it, might want here and there somewhat upon the edge of it, by bendings and windings in, so that the square for all the Courts which was intended, and which was to be measured from the Altar as from the standing mark, could not run even, but did meet with some small hiatus through the want and pinching in of the hill in certain places: whereupon Solomon and the succeeding generations, were still encreasing the spaciousness and capaciousness of it, by filling up the valley or precipice where the want was, insomuch that the compass and space of it at the last, under the second Temple was c חמש מאות אמה על חמש מאות אמה five hundred cubits upon five hundred cubits: that is, a perfect square of five hundred cubits upon every side, two thousand cubits in the whole compass about: d And this square piece of ground was inclosed with a Wall. Not but that there was some more space upon the floor of the Mount than barely this measure, for e ההר חיה גדול הרבה מזה עד תק אלא לא היה קדוש: The Mount was far larger than five hundred cubits square, but only so much was taken in for the holy ground.

account: and although his large measure, do differ far from this of ours, yet doth his cubit measure and state the cubit that we have in hand, so well, that it would be very hard, if not impossible otherwise among the various sizes of cubits that we meet withal, to determine any thing of it. For we find mention of the g common cubit of five hand bredth, h of the middle of six, of the cubit half a fingers bredth larger than the cubit of Moses, and the cubit half a fingers bredth larger than that: but Ezekiel hath stinted his i cubit to be a cubit and a hand bredth (that is the common cubit of five hand bredths, and one hand bredth over;) And so the Jews conclude upon the same measure in this received Maxim: הבנין ו' טפחים ושל כלים ה' k The cubit by which the Temple buildings were measured was six hand bredths, but the cubit by which the Vessels were measured was but five.

g Kimch. in Ezek. 45. & 43. 13. & R. Sol. ibid. h Kelim. per. 17. i Ezek. 4. 5. k Kelim. ubi supr. Kimch. in 2 Chron. 3. 3.

The hand bredth therefore being l the four fingers bredth as they be laid close together, which make but three inches, the cubit of six hand bredths, (which is the cubit we imbrace here) ariseth to eighteen inches or just half a yard, and so by this computation, the five hundred cubits upon every side of the square was two hundred and fifty yards, and the whole compass of the Wall was a thousand yards about.

l Kimch. in Michol. in voc. טפח

Josephus m hath alotted a just furlong to every side of the square: Ἑκάστης γωνίας σταδίου μῆκος ἀπολαμβανούσης, and so hath made the whole compass to be exactly half a mile about, reckoning according to the common cubit, and according to the measure best known among the Greeks and Romans, for whom he wrote.

m Antiq. lib. 15. cap. 14.

And now if any one will take up the full circuit of the wall that encompassed the holy ground, according to our English measure, it will amount to half a mile, and about one hundred sixty six yards. And whosoever likewise will measure the square of Ezekiel, Chap. XLII. 20. he will find it six times as large as this, Chap. XL. 5. the whole amounting to three miles and an half, and about one hundred and forty yards, a compass incomparably larger than Mount Moriah divers times over; and by this very thing is shewed that that is spiritually and mystically to be understood.

The description of the Temple and City, that he hath given in the end of his Book, as it was a prediction of some good to come, so was that prediction true, thus far according to the very letter, namely that there should be a Temple and a City newly built: and so it was a promise and a comfort to the people then in captivity, of their restoring again to their own Land, and there injoying Jerusalem and the Temple again, as they had done in former time, before their removing and captivating out of their own Country: But as for a literal respondency of that City and Temple, to all the particulars of his description, it is so far from it, that his Temple is delineated larger than all the earthly Jerusalem, and his Jerusalem larger than all the Land of Canaan. And thereby the scope of the Holy Ghost in that Ichnography is clearly held out to be, to signifie the great inlarging of the spiritual Jerusalem and Temple, the Church under the Gospel, and the spiritual beauty and glory of it, as well as to certifie captived Israel, of hopes of an earthly City and Temple to be rebuilt, which came to pass upon their return under Cyrus.

Yet had this his space of the holy ground its bounds, though they were exceeding large; but when John in his Revelation is upon the measure of his Temple, this outer Court or space is left boundless, and not measured nor inclosed at all, and the reason is given, because that Court was given to the Gentiles, and they should tread the holy City (as men trod Gods Courts when they came to worship) two and forty months, Rev. XI. 1, 2, 3, &c. still clearing the reason of the Prophetical inlarging of the holy ground, which was to denote the abundant and numerous worshippers of God which should be under the Gospel.

The Wall that encompssed and went about the square of the holy ground, was of very fair stone, o and it was five and twenty cubits, or twelve yards and an half high, that is, as one stood within the compass of it, in the holy ground; for without it stood over a very deep and sharp precipice, and so there was an exceeding great height from the bottom of the trench beneath, to the top of the wall, but within it was no higher than five and twenty cubits, and that height is carried about whole the square.

o Jos. de Bell. lib. 5. cap. 14.

Now whereas it is a very common Tenet amongst the Talmudists that כותל המזרחי גובהו ו' אמות p The Eastern wall was six cubits high and no more, it is not to be understood of the whole East side Wall, for that was five and twenty cubits high as well as the rest, but it is to be understood only of the Wall or Battlement that was just over the East Gate: and so it is explained by some of them thus, כמה ראה למעלה לתוך פתח חיכל צריך שיהא חכותל של מעלה של שער מושן גמוך: q For whereas the Priest that was sprinkling the blood of the red Cow upon Mount Olivet, was to look directly by this East Gate, upon the Gate of the Temple, and whereas r the floor of the Porch of the Temple was two and twenty cubits higher ground than the floor of this East Gate, and so the Priest looking from Olivet through this Gate s could not see

CHAP. III.

IN the ſurveying of the Gates and Buildings that were in this outmoſt Wall, and virge of the holy ground, we will begin at the Eaſt quarter which faced Mount Olivet, and in which ſide of the ſquare there was only one Gate: this and all other the Gates, both in this Wall and in the other that incompaſſed the Courts a were twenty Cubits high and ten cubits broad, as the Hebrew Writers do conſtantly reckon.

a Mid. per. 2.

In which account they and their Country-man Joſephus, who wrote in another language, do not differ (although that b his conſtant meaſure that he gives of all the Gates, be thirty cubits high and fifteen cubits broad) but they do in this diverſity explain the thing the better. The height of the whole Gate-houſe of every Gate, or of the pile where the Gate was ſet, was thirty cubits, and ſo it roſe five cubits above the Wall, but the very entrance of the Gate, or the door of it, was but twenty cubits high. And ſo the very bredth of the entrance of the doors of every Gate was but ten cubits, but the cheeks of the Gate on either ſide was two cubits and an half, and ſo the bredth of the whole pile, was fifteen cubits in all: The height of this Eaſt-Gate only came ſhort of the reſt, four cubits, for c it roſe but ſix cubits above the entry or light that was paſſed through, whereas the reſt did riſe ten, and ſo it roſe but one cubit above the height of all the Wall, whereas the reſt did five; and the reaſon was given immediately before, becauſe the Prieſt that burned the red Cow on Mount Olivet might look over it upon the Temple; for ſo they conceive that command bound him when he ſprinkled her blood. He ſhall ſprinkle of her blood directly before the Tabernacle of the Congregation ſeven times, Numb. XIX. 4. This Gate ſtood not juſt in the very middeſt of this Eaſtern Wall, as if it had two hundred forty five cubits of the wall on either ſide it, but it ſtood more toward the North, becauſe it was to ſtand directly in the front, or over againſt the Porch of the Temple. Now the Altar being pitched and fixed ſo by a divine appointment, that the Mountain did not allow an equal ſpace of ground on either ſide it, they were forced to build the Temple ſo, as to ſtand in its proper parallel with the Altar, and to caſt the Courts ſo, as that רובו לו מן הדרום ב לו מן המזר שלישי לו מן הצפון מיעוטו מן המערב d The greateſt ſpace of the Mount was on the South, the ſecond on the Eaſt, the third on the North, and the leaſt Weſtward.

This Gate is called the Kings Gate, 1 Chron. IX. 18. not for any ſpecial or ordinary entrance of the King through it (for his common coming in, was at the clean oppoſite quarter, quarter, namely on the West-side) but it is so called, because King Solomon built it and the rest of the Wall that way, at an extraordinary pains and charge, fetching up the foundation with huge stones, from the bottom of the deep valley that lay under: of which anon.

But before we part from this Gate, let us stand a little in it and take the prospect that is there before us Eastward, for the better understanding of some places of Scripture, that speak of the places thereabout.

Mount Olivet faced Jerusalem, and the Temple, and Sion upon the East, winding likewise Northward, so as that it faced Sion also something upon the North. Betwixt Jerusalem and it, was the valley of Hinnom or Tophet, where was the horrid and hideous practice of their irreligious Religion, of butchering their Children, in causing them to pass through the fire, or burning them to Molech. For Solomon had built an high place for Chemosh the abomination of Moab in the hill that was before Jerusalem, and for Molech the abomination of the Children of Ammon, 1 King. XI. 7. namely on the right hand of the Hill, as you looked upon it from Jerusalem, 2 King. XXIII. 13. In this Text of the Kings it is called הר המשחית Hor Hammashchith, instead of הר המשחה Har Hammishchah, The Mount of Corruption, instead of The Mount of Unction, or of Olives, the Holy Ghost branding the fact, and the place for the fact, with so visible and notable a mark of distaste and displeasure at it. To so great a contrariety to what he once was, when he was himself, had Solomons Idolatrous Wives bewitched him, that as he had built a sumptuous Temple on Mount Moriah to the true God, so they perswade him to build an Idolatrous Temple to their abominations on Mount Olivet, in the face of the Temple, and affronting it. The valley beneath this accursed Idoleum, was called The valley of Tophet, and the valley of the Son or the Sons of Hinnom, Jer. VII. 31, 32. and XIX. 6, &c. The valley of Tophet, that is, k The valley of Drums, or Tabers: from the noise that was made with such kind of instruments to drown the cries and shrieking of the burning Children: And the valley of the Sons of Hinnom, that is, the valley of Children of shrieking and roaring; from the woful cries of those poor Children frying in the fire. This was probably that which is called the valley of the carkasses, or the dead bodies, Jer. XXXI. 40. of which name the Chaldee Paraphrast in that place hath given this reason, Because the dead bodies of the Camp of the Assyrians fell there: and to which Josephus also giveth testimony when he relateth that a place was called l The Assyrian Camp. And here may we give a check a little to the peremptoriness of Rabbi Solomon upon the Text of Jeremy, lest he grow too proud, who glosseth the fortieth verse thus, m The valley of dead bodies is the valley where the carkasses of the Camp of Senacherib fell: and the valley of the Ashes, is the place whither they carried the ashes forth, which was without Jerusalem: These places they shall bring within the City even within the walls: And this Prophesie is to be accomplished in the last redemption in despight of the Hereticks, for it was not accomplished under the second Temple. By Hereticks he virulently meaneth Christians, who deny any other Messias yet to come, and that there shall be any more an earthly Jerusalem. For he would construe those words of the Prophet strictly according to the letter, as if there should be a time when these valleys should be walled within Jerusalem, really and indeed; whereas the Prophet in mentioning of those most defiled and polluted places to be taken into the City, meaneth only the bringing in of the Heathens, who had been polluted with all manner of defilement of Idolatry and other abominations, into the spiritual Jerusalem which is above, or the Church. And yet if we would follow him even in his literal construction, we might shew, out of his own Authors the Talmudists, how Bethphage, the Town that stood even in these places mentioned by the Prophet, though it stood out of the Walls of Jerusalem, yet by their own confession it is reckoned as a member or part of Jerusalem: and so was that prophecy literally fulfilled by their own Chorography at the coming of our Messias; But here is not a place for such disputes.

This was the prospect that you had before you on the right hand as you stood in the East-Gate of the Mountain of the Temple; namely a part of Mount Olivet divided from the City Jerusalem by the valley of Tophet, and by the valley of Ashes; on the side of the valley, near Jerusalem stood the Town Bethphage, and on the further side of the valley over against it, stood Bethany, renowned for the raising of Lazarus from the dead there; and for our Saviours frequent resort thither, and ascension thence.

Directly before you, was the place upon Mount Olivet where they used to burn the Red Cow into purifying ashes, when they had occasion to do such a work: and n thither went a double arched Causey, of the same manner of arching that we have mentioned under the Temple Courts: and for the same caution, namely for security against graves, by which the Priest that went about that imployment might have been defiled, and so the work mar'd.

Upon your left hand as you stood, ran Mount Olivet still, and the valley betwixt you and it and all along on the East point and on the North side of Sion, was called the valley valley of Kidron, of famous memory and mention in Scripture, 2 Sam. XV. 23. 2 King. XXIII. 6. John XVIII. 1, &c. At the foot of the hill, beyond this valley you might see Gethſemany or the place of the Oyl Preſſes, whither they brought the Olives they had gathered upon Mount Olivet to be preſſed, and the Oyl got out. And there it was whither our Saviour went after his laſt Supper, and where he was apprehended, having ſupped that night, as it is moſt likely, in Sion or the City of David.

CHAP. IV.

Of the two South-Gates : שערי חולדה The Gates of Huldah.

AS the Eaſt quarter of the encloſing Wall, did face Mount Olivet, ſo did the South quarter face Jeruſalem the City it ſelf; For take we the whole City, either built upon ſeven Hills a as Tanchuma aſſerts it, or upon three, Acra, Moriah, and Sion, as it is commonly deſcribed, or add Bezetha and Ophla if you will, the ſituation of it will be found thus, הר הבית לצפון ירושלים b That the Mountain of the Temple will be found lying Northward of Jeruſalem, and Sion Northward of the Mountain of the Temple. And thus do the Jews in their Antiquities generally ſeat it, and that not without ſufficient warrant of the Scripture. For how can thoſe words of the Pſalmiſt, Beautiful for ſituation, the joy of the whole Earth is Mount Sion on the ſides of the North, Pſal. XLVIII. 2. be more properly and plainly interpreted than as Aben Ezra doth interpret them; c Sion on the North ſide of Jeruſalem? And thoſe words of Ezekiel, He ſet me upon a Mountain, by which was the frame of a City towards the South, Ezek. XL. 2. who can give them a ſenſe more genuine and proper than Kimchi hath done, when he ſaith d The Mountain is the Mountain of the Temple, and this City is Jeruſalem on the South?

On this ſide therefore that faced Jeruſalem, or that looked South, there were two Gates that were called e The Gates of Huldah, and they were ſo placed, as that they were in an equal diſtance from the two Angles of the Wall, Eaſt and Weſt, and of the ſame diſtance one from another. And ſo is Joſephus to be underſtood when he ſaith, τὸ δὲ τέταρτον μέρος, τὸ πρὸς μεσημβρίαν εἶχε δύο καὶ αὐτὸ πύλας ἐπὶ μέσου, f The fourth part of the Wall was towards the South, and had Gates in the middle; that is, the Gates were ſo ſet, as that there was an equal ſpace betwixt Gate and Gate, and betwixt either Gate and the corners of the Wall.

From whence theſe Gates did take their name to be called The Gates of Huldah, is hard to determine, whether from חולדה Huldah, which ſignifieth a Weeſel, of which creature g the Hebrews write many Stories; or h from the Syrian word חלך which tranſlateth the Greek word ἐνδύνειν, To creep into, 2 Tim. III. 6. or from חול זאת This, or hither is common ground, or i from the Propheteſs Huldah, who was of ſo great eſteem in her time among the Jews, as that they ſay k there was never any buried within Jeruſalem, either Man or Woman (unleſs of the Houſe of David) but only ſhe: or from whence elſe they were denominated, it will not countervail the labour to ſearch, nor is it very hopeful to find.

We ſhall not need to ſpend time in deſcribing the form, fabrick and dimenſions of theſe Gates, ſince theſe and the reſt of the Gates were all ſuitable to that in the Eaſt quarter which we have deſcribed before, ſaving that their Gate-houſe was higher, and that they were not characterred with the picture of Shuſhan as that Gate was. Let us therefore only take the proſpect as we ſtand in either of theſe Gates before us, towards the South upon which they opened, as we did in the other toward the Eaſt.

What Streets, Houſes, Turrets, Gardens, and beauteous buildings were to be ſeen in Jeruſalem as it lay before you, may better be ſuppoſed in ſo goodly a City, than deſcribed: only if you will obſerve the ſituation of it, or how it lay, you may view it ſituate thus. It lay upon the Hill Acra, which riſing in the middle, deſcended with an eaſie declining towards the Eaſt and Weſt, and with a deſcent alſo toward the North or toward the Temple. Upon the very higheſt pitch of the Hill, and from whence it had a fall either way there ſprang the ſweet and gentle Fountain Siloam, without the City, and ran to either end of the City, both Eaſt and Weſt in a contrary channel; as it made toward the Eaſt, it left the Fullers field upon the right hand, and ſaluted the Sheep-Gate on the left, and ſo turned, Eaſtward and fell into the Pool called Solomons Pool, which may well be ſuppoſed to be Bethesda. As it ran Weſtward, it coaſted along the broad Wall, the Tower of the Furnaces, the Valley-Gate, and Dung-Gate, and after a while fell into the Pool of Siloam.

CHAP. V.

Of the West-Gates Shallecheth or Coponius, Parbar, Asuppim.

IN the Talmuds Survey of the Temple, there is but one Gate mentioned or spoken of upon the West quarter, but Josephus doth mention four, and that agreeably to the Scripture. Not but that the Talmudists did very well know there were so many Gates upon this quarter, but they reckon only those by name, a that had Guards kept at them, wheras Josephus reckons all that were in being: His words are these; Ἐν δὲ τοῖς ἐσωτέροις μέρεσι τῶ δυσβόλω πύλας δ'' ἐφίσασαν, ἡ μὲν, εἰς τὰ βασίλεια τείνουσα, τὴν ἐν μέσω φάραγγα εἰς δι'ὁδον ἀπειλημμένην· Αἱ β'' δὲ εἰς τὸ προάστειον, ἡ λοιπὴ δὲ εἰς τὴν ἄλλην πόλιν. Βαθμῶν πολλῶν κάτω τε εἰς τὴν φάραγγα διειλημμένην, κἀκ ταύτης ἄνω πάλιν ὀφειλόντων τὴν προσβασιν. b On the West quarter of this outmost bound, there were four Gates: The first leading to the Kings Palace, the valley between being filled up for the passage: Two others went into the Suburbs, and the other into the other City, having many steps down into the valley, and many up again to the pitch or coming up. We will survey these Gates particularly, and take them in the order that he had laid down, beginning first with that Gate that led to the Kings Palace.

SECT. I.

The Gate of Shallecheth, or Coponius.

THE Gate that led towards the Kings Palace, was that that stood most North in this West quarter, of all the four, being set directly and diametrically opposite to the Gate Shushan in the East. In the time of the first Temple, this Gate was called Shallecheth, 1 Chron. XXVI. 16. but in the time of Herod's Temple, it was called a The Gate of Coponius: The Jews write it קיפונוס Kiponus; about the derivation of which word there are various conjectures. Some deduce it from b קופה A hole, or entrance; Some from c κηπαῖα, A back door. Some from קיפנדר A thorough-passage; but I should rather derive it from Coponius, the Roman Cammander. Josephus recordeth that when Cyrenius was sent by Augustus to be Governour of Syria, Coponius also General of the Horse, was sent with him for Ruler in Judea, d Κωπώνιός τε ἅμα συγκαταπέμπεται πάσης ἱππέων ἡγησόμενος Ἰουδαίων τῆ ὅτι πᾶσιν ἐξουσία. Now this was so near about the time of Herod's finishing the building of the Temple, that it giveth fair occasion to think that he named this Gate in honour of that great Commander Coponius, as he did a building hard by it, Antonia, in memory and honour of his great Friend Antony.

d Joseph. Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 1.

The word Shallecheth, by which name this Gate was first called, in the time of Solomon, doth signifie a casting up, and so saith e Kimchi, it is rendred by the Chaldee Paraphast in the sense of השלכה. Now this Gate is said in 1 Chron. XXVI. 16. to have been by the Cawsey going up; which going up is that renowned ascent that Solomon made for his own passage up to the Temple 1 King. X. 5. 2 Chron. IX. 4. And the Cawsey is that that Josephus meaneth, when he saith, A Gate led to the Kings House from the Temple, the valley betwixt being filled up for the passige, which was a very great work, for the valley was large and deep: Therefore it may very well be concluded that it was called Shallecheth, or the casting up, from the Cawsey that was cast up to lead to it from the Kings Palace, this being his ordinary way to the Temple.

e Michol in שלך

This Cawsey is held by some f to have been set on either side with Oaks and Teyle Trees, which grew up there, and served for a double benefit, the one to keep up the Cawsey on either side, that it should not fall down; and the other was to make the King a pleasant walk, and shade, with Trees on either side, as he came, and went. And so they render that Verse in Esai. 6. 13. where the word is only used besides in all the Bible: In it shall be a tenth, and it shall return and be eaten, as a Teyle-Tree, or as an Oak by Shallecheth: that is, as the rows of Trees on the sides of this Cawsey.

SECT. II.

Parbar Gate, 1 Chron. XXVI. 18.

FROM the Gate Shallecheth or Coponius, that lay moſt North on this Weſtern quarter, let us walk toward the South, and the next Gate we come to, was called Parbar; of this there is mention in the Book of Chronicles in the place alledged; where the Holy Ghoſt relating the diſpoſal of the Porters at the ſeveral Gates of the Mountain of the Houſe, ſaith, At Parbar Weſtward, two at the Cawſey, and two at Parbar. By which it is apparent ſufficiently, that this Gate was in the Weſt quarter, and reaſonably well apparent that it was the next Gate to the Cawſey, or Shallecheth, becauſe it is ſo named with it, but by that time we have fully ſurveyed the ſituation of it, it will appear to have been ſo plain enough. The word Parbar, admitteth of a double conſtruction, for it either ſignifies פלפי בר An outer place, [a] as many of the Jews do conſtrue it, or it concurrs with the ſignification of the word Parvar, (which differs but one letter from it, and that very near, and of an eaſie change) which betokeneth Suburbs, both in the Hebrew Text, 2 Kings XXIII. 11. and in the Chaldee Tongue, as [b] David Kimchi averreth there.

[a] Gloſſ. in Tamid. per. 1. Kimch. in 1 Chron. XXVI. Aruch. in voce, &c.

[b] Kimch. in 2 King. XXIII.

And here Joſephus his words which we produced a little before, may be taken up again, and out of all together we may obſerve the ſituation of the Gate in mention. He ſaith, That of the four Gates upon this Weſtern quarter, one led towards the Kings Palace, (that is Shallecheth that we have viewed already) and the two next, εἰς τὸ προάστιον, into the Suburbs. Theſe Suburbs that he meaneth, were indeed that part of the City which in Scripture is called Millo, which was the valley at the Weſt end of Mount Moriah, in which Jeruſalem and Sion met and ſaluted each other, repleniſhed with buildings by David and Solomon in their times, 2 Sam. V. 9. and 1 Kings 11. 27. and taken in as part and Suburbs of Sion, and ſo owned always in after times.

And to this purpoſe is the expreſſion of Joſephus in his words that we have in hand, obſervable, when he ſaith, that two of theſe Weſtern Gates were into the Suburbs, ἡ λοιπὴ δὲ εἰς τὴν ἄλλην πόλιν, and the other into the other City, that is, into Jeruſalem, which he maketh as another City from the Suburbs of which he ſpake. Take the word Parbar therefore in either of the ſignifications that have been mentioned, either for an outer place, or for the Suburbs; this Gate that we have in ſurvey might very properly be called by that name, becauſe it was a paſſage from the Temple into Millo, which was an outer place, and the Suburbs of Sion diſtinguiſhed and parted from Sion by a Wall, yet a member of it, and belonging to it.

Now whereas the other Gate that ſtood next to this that we are about, toward the South, did lead alſo into the Suburbs as well as this, as is apparent from Joſephus, yet, is it not called by the ſame name Parbar: the reaſon of this may be given, becauſe it bare a name peculiar and proper, ſuitable to that ſingular uſe to which it was deſigned, or to that place where it was ſet, rather than ſuitable to that place whither it gave paſſage.

And here becauſe we are in mention of the Suburbs, it may not be amiſs to look a little upon that Text, that ſpeaketh of the Suburbs, and out of which we have taken that ſignification of the word Parbar, namely, 2 Kings XXIII. 11. It is ſaid there, that Joſiah took away the Horſes that the Kings of Judah had given to the Sun, at the entring in of the Houſe of the Lord, by the Chamber of Nathan Melech the Chamberlain which was in the Suburbs. Whether theſe Horſes were given to the Sun, to be ſacrificed to it, or to ride on to meet and ſalute the Sun-riſing, as the Jews ſuppoſe, we ſhall not trouble ourſelves to enquire into, it is the place that we have to look after at this time, rather than the thing.

Theſe Stables of ſuch Horſes, (and it is like the Kings common Stables were in the ſame place) are ſaid to be in the Suburbs, and at the entring in of the Houſe of the Lord, and we cannot better allot the place, than that whereupon we are, namely that they ſtood here in Millo, before this Gate Parbar, or thereabout, and from thence there was a way to bring the Horſes up to the Kings Houſe, when the King would uſe, either thoſe Horſes that they had dedicated to the Sun for their irreligious uſe, or their other Horſes for their common uſe. As they went out of Millo to riſe up into Sion, they paſſed through a Gate which was in the Wall that parted between Millo and Sion, which Wall and Gate was but a little below the Cawſey that went up to the Gate Shallecheth: and this helpeth to underſtand that paſſage about Athaliah's death, 2 Kings XI. 11. They laid hands on her, and ſhe went by the way by which the Horſes came into the Kings Houſe, and there ſhe was ſlain. That is, they got her out of the Mountain of the Temple, brought her down by the Gate Shallecheth and the Cawſey, and when ſhe came near the Horſe Gate, through through which the horſes went up out of the Stables in Millo, to the Kings houſe, there they ſlew her. There was a Horſe gate indeed in the main wall of the City, on the East part of it, Neh. III. 28. Jer. XXXI. 39. but that was diſtinct from this, which was peculiar for the Kings Horſes, and therefore a diſtinctive Character is ſet upon this, namely, that it was the Horſe gate towards the Kings Houſe, 2 Chron. XXIII. 15. It ſhould be rendred towards the Kings Houſe rather than by the Kings Houſe, for neither of theſe gates, either that on the East which was a gate of the City, nor this on the Weſt which was a gate into Millo, were near the Kings Houſe, but a good diſtance off; See the Seventy there.

SECT. III.

The two Gates and Houſe of Aſuppim.

IN the ſtory of the deſigning of the Porters to their ſeveral places and charges, in Chron. XXVI. 15, 17. it is ſaid thus, To obed Edom South ward, and to his Sons the Houſe of Aſuppim. Eaſtward were ſix Levites, Northward four a day, Southward four a day, and toward Aſuppim two and two.

Now there are two things that have juſtly moved divers learned men to conceive, that Aſuppim doth betoken the Treaſuries of the Temple, or the places where the offered and dedicate things were reſerved and laid up. The one is the ſignification of the word it ſelf, for it betokeneth gatherings or collections; and the other is, becauſe Obed Edom, whoſe Sons are ſaid here to be at Aſuppim as at their charge, is ſaid in 2 Chron. XXV. 24. to have had the keeping of the Treaſury. For there it is recorded that Joaſh the King of Iſrael took all the gold and ſilver and Veſſels that were found in the Houſe of God with Obed Edom.

Now if this be granted, that Aſuppim did betoken and mean the Treaſuries, yet are we ſtill to ſeek where Aſuppim was, and indeed there is not a more difficult matter, in all the ſurvey of the Temple, and of the buildings and affairs belonging to it, than to determine aright and clearly concerning the Porters, Treaſuries and Treaſures and all their charges; there is ſo much variety of expreſſions about theſe in Scripture, and ſo little explanation and reſolution of this matter in other Writers, we ſhall do the beſt we can for their diſcovery as we come to the view of the ſeveral places that refer to any ſuch thing.

The word Aſuppim is uſed again, in ſpeech concerning the Porters, Neh. XII. 25. where ſix men there named are ſaid to be Porters keeping the ward כאספי משערים at the Aſuppim of the gates. Aben Ezra and Kimchi ſay it is but the ſame with Sippim the threſholds, and ſo is rendred in our Engliſh Text. But if it be taken in that ſenſe in the is place of the Chronicles that we have in hand, there can be no difference between the Sons of Obed Edom and the reſt of the Porters in this reſpect, for all of them may be ſaid to be Porters at Aſuppim as well as they, ſince they were all alike Porters at the threſholds.

In the naming of the Porters, and placing them in their ſtations, there are the East Weſt, North, and South quarters mentioned, and Aſuppim comes in as if it were out at all: At the East gate were ſix of Shelemiahs younger Sons; And his Eldeſt Son Zechariah and his Sons at the North. At the Weſt were ſix Sons of Hoſa and Shuppim, four at Shallecheth, and two at Parbar. And four of Obed Edoms eight Sons at the South, and the other four at the Houſe of Aſuppim, which ſeems out of ſquare, and who can tell where?

For the ſearching out of this place, which lies ſo very covert, and obſcure in the Text, it may not be impertinent to conſider theſe four particulars:

1. That there were four Gates on the Weſt ſide, as hath been obſerved, namely the gate Coponius, two gates into the Suburbs, and one into the City.

2. That the Holy Ghoſt reckoning the Porters as they were diſpoſed after the return out of Captivity, placeth them only upon the four quarters of this outmoſt wall, 1 Chron. IX. 23, 24. (for the wall that encompaſſed the Courts had no gate on the Weſt at all, and therefore thoſe verſes cannot be underſtood of that, but of this outmoſt boundary wall) And why ſhould we hold that he goeth in a different ſtyle here?

3. Thoſe Porters lodged round about the houſe of God, and opened the doors every morning, 1 Chron. IX. 27. Now neither Prieſts nor Levites had any lodgings in the gates of the Court, nor did the Levites open thoſe doors, but the Prieſts. And

4. That though there were four and twenty guards, three of Prieſts, and one and twenty of Levites every night about the Temple, yet was there not any ſuch by day at the Court gates, or at thoſe places by the Court wall where they were by night: But here the Text doth expreſly tell that theſe Porters attendance was by day.

Theſe

Theſe things therefore conſidered, 1. We cannot place the Houſe of Aſuppim in any other part, than in ſome place in this outmoſt wall that incompaſſed the Mountain of the Houſe, even as the reſt of the gates and the Porters ſtood. 2. The expreſſion uſed in the Text doth argue that theſe Sons of Obed Edom that ſtood Porters at Aſuppim, attended in two places or at two gates, for he ſaith that at Aſuppim there were two and two. 3. Since the Porters at two of the gates only of the four that were on the Weſt quarter are named, namely, Shalleeheth and Parbar, it cannot be otherwiſe conceived in reaſon, but that the other two gates on that quarter go here under the name of Aſuppim, and had their Porters two and two. For 1. Since there were four gates there, why ſhould two of them go without Porters, when all the reſt were ſo exactly manned? And 2. why ſhould we go place theſe four Sons of Obed Edom as Porters we know not where, and where we never read of any Porters at all, and let theſe two gates ſtand void and none to attend them?

I make no ſcruple therefore to conclude, that Aſuppim were the two gates in this Weſtern wall, which ſtood moſt South or neareſt to Jeruſalem, and the Houſe of Aſuppim, was a large piece of building, that ran between them, which was a Treaſury, or divers rooms for treaſuring and laying up ſomething for the uſe of the Temple. The treaſuries of the Temple were divers and in divers places, and committed to divers perſons; but the general diſtinction of them is, into the Treaſuries of the Houſe of God, and the Treaſuries of the dedicate things, 1 Chron. XXVI. 20.

By the Treaſures of the Houſe of God, is meant thoſe things that were in ordinary uſe and employment, as the Veſſels, Veſtments, Tithes, Wine, Oyl, and other things which were commonly uſed, and with theſe we may joyn whatſoever was offerd to the Treaſury, either as due, as was the half ſhekel, or voluntary, as mony or veſſels for the repair of the Houſe and advancement of the Service. But by the Treaſures of dedicate things, is underſtood whatſoever the Kings, Captains or great men had conſecrated and dedicated, which lay as the ſtock of the Temple, and as the Monuments of their devotion. The former Treaſures were ſome of them under the care and charge of the Porters, 1 Chron. IX. 26, 27, &c. and the reſt and the later, under the hand of other Levites, 1 Chron. XXVI. 20, 22, 26, &c. The Porters had their Treaſuries at every one of their gates: and ſo ſhould I render אסופי שערים The Treaſuries of the Gates in Neh. XII. 25. whereas ſome of them kept veſtments, ſome inſtruments, ſome one thing, and ſome another, and the Sons of Obed Edom kept the ſilver and gold veſſels, which were the richeſt Utenſils of the Temple, and therefore their gates and the buildings between are called Aſuppim or Treaſuries, by an Emphatical dignity above the reſt.

Before we part with this Weſt quarter, let us take our proſpect outward, as we have done from the two ſides we have been upon before. As you ſtood on the middle of this wall, Millo lay before you, and there might you ſee, beſides the Kings ſtables and other buildings, the Pool of Siloam, and the Kings Gardens: On the left hand was the deſcent of Acra and the buildings of Jeruſalem upon it: on the right hand, the riſing of Sion, and the ſtairs that went up into the City, and by which the King came down to Shalleeheth, and ſo into the Temple. And as you roſe higher, was the place of the Sepulchers of Davids family, and another Pool, Neh. III. 15, 16.

CHAP. VI.

The North-Gate. טדי Tedi or Tadde.

ON the North-ſide, to which we are now come, there was but one gate (as there was but one on the Eaſt quarter) which was ſituate juſt in the middle of the wall between the Eaſt and Weſt end of it, but how to give it its right name there is ſome diſpute. a Some write it טרי Teri with r, which ſignifieth moiſtneſs or purulency, becauſe that they of the Prieſts, whoſe ſeed went from them by night, went through this gate to bath themſelves from that uncleanneſs. But the reading of old, hath been ſo reſolved טרי with d Tedi, b or as ſome vowel it c Tadde, that Pisk. Toſaphoth ad Middoth goeth about to give its Etymology. He mentions a double notation: namely, that either it betokens חצנע obſcurity and ſhamefac'dneſs, becauſe of its rare uſe and paſſage, and becauſe the Prieſts that had ſuffered Gonorrhœa by night, went out through it to the Bath with ſome ſhame and dejectedneſs: Or that the word refers to Actors or Poets, and he produceth a ſentence in which by its conjunction with another word, it ſeems seems so to signifie, for other sense I know not to put upon it. The sentence is this טיידי ופיוטי רגילי בהו קמי ריש גלותא Tragedians and Poets used it before the chief of the Captivity. But what sense he would make of this Etymology, I do not understand. But be the notation of the word what it will, the Talmud setteth two distinguishing marks upon the Gate it self, for which it was singular from all the rest of the gates that we have mentioned. d The first is, that it had not so fair a rising Gate-house and chambers above it as the rest had, but only stones laid flat over it, and the battlement of the wall running upon it and no more. And the other is לא משמש כלום e That it was not a common and ordinary passage in and out, as the other Gates were, but only a passage upon occasion; the uselessness whereof we shall have occasion to look at again ere it be long.

The Mount Moriah did afford some space of ground upon this side, without the Wall and compass of the Holy ground, which it did upon none of the sides beside; for here was built the large and goodly Tower of Antonia, which we shall survey by and by, whereas on every one of the other sides the incompassing Wall that closed in the Holy ground, did stand near upon the very pitch and precipice of the hill. So that looking about you as you stood out at this Gate, this Tower Antonia stood on your left hand and spoyled your prospect on that side, and you could see nothing that way but it. Before you was Mount Sion, and the goodly buildings of the Kings Palace and other houses; upon the bending toward the East angle, was the place called Ophel or Ophla, the habitation of the Nethenims, Neh. III. 26. and when Ophla was turned East, then was there the horse-gate and water-gate before the Temple.

Thus lay the Mountain of the Lords House, incompassed with the City round about, and enclosed with a fair and high Wall which separated it from the common ground: On the one side of it lay Sion the seat of the King, on the other side Jerusalem, the habitation of the people, and the Temple and its service in the middle between, even as the Ministery is in mediation betwixt God and his people. That Wall that encompassed it, had eight gates of goodly structure and beauteous fabrick, all of one fashion, save only that the North and East gates were not topped, the one in height, and the other in fashion, as the other were. At all these gates were Porters by day, and at five of them were guards by night, as we shall observe hereafter: the access to them on the East and West was by a great ascent, but facilitated by steps or causeys for the peoples ease, and for the coming up of the Beasts that were to be sacrificed, of which there were some that came up dayly. On the South side the ascent was not so very great, yet it had its rising in the like manner of access as had the other. On the North what coming up there was, it was more for the accommodation of the residents in the Tower Antonia, than for the entrance into the Temple, the North gate Tedi being of so little use, as hath been spoken.

At any of the Gates as you passed through, the entrance if self, through which you went, was ten cubits wide, twenty cubits high, and twelve cubits over, six of which cubits were without the Holy ground, and six within: and as you entred in at the East gate, had you seen the ground before any buildings were set in it, or any thing done to it, but only the building of this Wall, you might have seen the hill rising from the East to the West, in such an ascent, that the Western part of it was very many cubits higher than where you stood, as we shall have occasion to observe as we pass along.

This bank was once well stored with bushes and brambles, Gen. XXII. 13. and afterward with worse briers and thorns, the Jebusites, who had it in possession till David purchased it for divine use and structure, that we are looking after: Here was then a poor threshing floor of Ornan the Jebusite, but afterward the habitation of the God of Jacob: A place and fabrick as sumptuous and eminent, as it was possible for man, and art, and cost to make it; the glory of the Nation where it was, and the wonder of all the Nations round about it; but in fine, as great a wonder and monument of desolation and ruine, as ever it had been of beauty and gloriousness. Before we step further toward the survey of it as it stood in glory, we must keep yet a while along this Wall about which we have been so long, and observe some buildings and beauties that joyned and belonged to it, besides the Gates that we have surveyed in it alread.

CHAP. VII.

The Tower ANTONIA. Βάεις.

UPON the North ſide a and joyning up to the Weſtern angle (but on the outſide of the wall that we have ſurveyed) ſtood the Tower of Antonia, once the place where the High-Prieſts uſed to lay up their Holy garments, but in aftertimes a Garriſon of Roman Souldiers for the awing of the Temple. When it ſerved for the former uſe, it was called Baris, (it may be from בר ad extra, becauſe it was an outer building) but when for the later, it bare the name of Antonia: Herod the Great having ſumptuouſly repaired it, as he did the Temple, and called it after the name of the Roman Prince Antony. It ſtood upon the North-weſt point of Moriah, and was a very ſtrong and a very large Pile: ſo ſpacious a building with all its appurtenances, that it took up two furlongs compaſs. The rock it ſtood upon, was fifty cubits high, and ſteep, and the building it ſelf was forty cubits above it; it was four ſquare, incompaſſed with a wall of three cubits high, which encloſed his Courts, and had a Turret at every corner, like the white Tower at London, but that it was more ſpacious, and that the Turrets were not all of an height, for thoſe at the North-Eaſt and North-Weſt corners were fifty cubits high, but thoſe on the South-Eaſt and South-Weſt were ſeventy cubits high, that they might fully over-look the Temple. It had cloiſters or walks about it, and Baths and lodgings and large rooms in it, ſo that it was at once like a Caſtle and like a Palace. There was a paſſage out of it into the North and Weſt Cloiſters of the Mountain of the Houſe (of which we ſhall ſpeak next) and by that the Roman Garriſon Souldies went down at every feſtival of the Jews, to take care againſt tumuls and ſeditions in thoſe great concourſes of the people: And the Governour of this Tower is called the Captain of the Temple, Acts IV. 1. Luke XXII 52.

a Joſeph Antiqu. lib. 15. cap. 14. & de Bell. lib. 5. c. 25.

b Hyrcanus the High Prieſt the firſt of that name, took up this place for his Manſion, and for the laying up of his holy garments, and ſo did his ſucceſſors after him: and Herod when he repaired it and called it Antonia, he ſuffered the High-Prieſts to lay up, and to have the keeping of the Robes here ſtill, and ſo did Archelaus his Son after him. But when the Romans put Archelaus from his Kingdom, they took the cuſtody of theſe garments into their own power, but yet they let them lie in the ſame place, till Vitellius the Conſul of Syria (in the time of Tiberius) coming to Jeruſalem, and well pleaſed with his entertainment there, upon the Jews Petition reſtored the keeping of thoſe robes to them again. Howbeit they injoyed not that priviledge very long, but in the time of ſucceeding Emperors and Governours the cuſtody of them was taken from them again.

b Id. Ant. lib. 18. c. 6.

And now that we have ſeen Antonia on the outſide of the North wall, let us come in again at the North gate Tedi, and look a little more upon that, as we come through it. We obſerved before, the name of this gate to ſignifie Hiding or obſcurity, and as for the nature of it, we ſaw that it was in a manner altogether unfrequented: Now two things may be conjectured toward the reaſon and cauſe of both theſe; as 1. The inſolency of the Roman Garriſon might make the people have but little mind to come that way, and it might be to them, Porta Tædii, a gate of grievance; for let us caſt out a Latine Etymology, ſo near a Latine Garriſon. And 2. a reaſon why it carrieth hiddenneſs in its name, Joſephus ſeemeth to give in this paſſage Βεζεθὰ λόφος μόνος πρὸς ἱερῷ κατ' ἄρκτον ἐπισκότει, c becauſe the hill Bezetha did ſhaddow the Temple on that North ſide, and ſpoil its proſpect, whereas no other ſide of the ſquare had any ſuch cloudings.

Cloiſters along this outmoſt Wall within. סטיו

THUS hath the outmoſt virge and bounds of the Mountain of the Houſe been laid before us; Now there is a thing that deſerves our pains and obſervation again in another ſurvey, and that is, the Walks or Cloiſters that were along the Wall within between gate and gate round about.

a The Talmud in one place expreſſeth it, סטיו כפול Porticus duplicata, and ſo b Joſephus Διπλαῖ αἱ στοαὶ πᾶσαι; which both the Talmud c in another place and alſo Maymony do utter more largely סטיו לפנים מסטיו וסטיו היה מקורה כולו It was all floored or roofed over, and one porch was before another.

a Shabbath f. 6. b Jos. de Bell. lib. 5. c. 14. c Shab. f. 13. Maym. in Beth habbechir per. 5.

The word סטיו is ſo plainly the Greek word στοὰ, that I make no ſcruple to render it by that word in Greek and by Porticus in Latine, but how to tranſlate any of them into our our Engliſh Tongue, is of ſome doubtfulneſs, becauſe our word Porch by which they are conſtantly rendred, doth not reach to their ſenſe in our Engliſh uſe, but is commonly taken in another. For what d Kimchi ſaith concerning the word אולם that it meaneth the ſame thing that by the Language of the Talmud is called בית השער The houſe of the gate, is alſo moſt true concerning the proper ſignification of the Engliſh word Porch, for that moſt ordinarily and commonly is taken among us for the building over or before the houſe door. But theſe words that we are about, do ſignifie Cloiſter-walks or rows, where men uſed to walk or ſit free from rains and weather, the one ſide open, ſupported with Pillars, and all floored, or covered over head.

d Kimch. in 1 Kings VI. 4.

So was this large compaſs along the Wall, it was double Cloiſtered round about (for give me leave to uſe that word, till I find a better) having a roof or floor over head, which lay almoſt as high as the top of the Wall, ſave what was left for the Walls battlements: and it was ſupported with a treble row of Marble Pillars (the inmoſt row joyning to the Wall) and it was diſtinguiſhed by the middle row of Pillars into a double walk. We need not go far for a copy, the ſtately new building (Piazza, walk, cloiſter, call it what you will) at the Weſt end of Pauls, may very well be our pattern. For it was much about that height, twelve yards and an half; it joyned on one ſide to the Wall, as that to the Church, and was born up with gallant white Marble Pillars: It was thirty cubits, or fifteen yards broad; either walk, half that breadth Pillars and all, and had battlements above the leads, both at the wall, and on the other ſide, as that at Pauls is creſted on the outſide. Where buildings ſtood out into the Mountain of the Houſe (as we have obſerved they did) there theſe Cloiſters were carried accordingly: being either cut off at the building, if it ſtood thirty cubits out, or the one half or more of the Cloiſter cut off if the building were narrower, and the reſt of the Cloiſter carried on before it.

Only upon the South ſide of the Square there was ſome difference of the Walks or Cloiſter from what was in the other parts.

For here was the Στοὰ βασιλικὴ the Cloiſter Royal as e Joſephus calls it, and of which he makes a very large and eminent deſcription to this purpoſe:

e Ant. lib. 15. cap. 4.

1. That it was treble walked or rowed all along from Eaſt to Weſt, whereas the Cloiſters of any of the other ſides were but double.

2. That this whole frame was born up by four rows of Pillars that ſtood even one againſt another, the inmoſt row joyning to the wall as it was on the other ſides.

3. The inmoſt and the outmoſt Walk of theſe three (that is, that that was next to the Wall, and that that was outmoſt towards the open ſpace of the Mountain of the Houſe) were equal in height and breadth with the Walks or Cloiſters on any of the other ſides, namely fifteen cubits high and fifteen cubits broad apiece: but the middlemoſt walk was two and forty cubits and an half broad and fifty cubits high, and ſo the two rows of Pillars that ſtood on either ſide of this middle walk were fifty cubits high, ſo that the roof of this walk was as high again as the roof of the walks on either ſide, and theſe altogether were as the upper and lower Leads of a Church, and every one of them had a creſt or battlement round about: Finally the whole Fabrick was ſo gallant and ſumptuous, ὡς ἀπιστότατα τοῖς ὐκ εἰδόσι μὴ σὺν ἐκπλήξει θεατὰ τοῖς ἐντυγχάνουσιν εἶναι, that it is incredible, ſaith my Author, to thoſe that never ſaw it, and an amazement to thoſe that did.

4. Had one ſtood at the top of the higheſt Leads at either end and looked down, there was ſo ſteep a trench or vally under ὡς σκοτοδινίαν ὐκ ἐχούσης ἄνωθεν εἰς ἀμέτρητον βάθος, that to look down it would make one giddy, and he could hardly ſee to the bottome; and Joſephus proclaimeth this fabrick to be ἔργον ἀξιοθαυμαστοτάτων ὑφ' ἥλιον, one of the goodlieſt works under the Sun.

Now through this gallant Southſide Cloiſter, did, and that very deſervedly, bear the name of The Cloiſter Royal Στοὰ βασιλικὴ, yet is not this the ſame with that, which in the Scripture is called Solomons Porch, of which there is mention, John X. 23. Act. III. 11. for that (as the ſame Joſephus giveth us intimation) was upon the Eaſt ſide of this ſquare (that we have in hand) and not upon the South, his words are theſe f Ἐπειδὴ τὸ βασίλεια τῷ ἀνατολικὴν στοὰν ἀναγείραι: ἦν δὴ ἡ στοὰ τῷ μὲν ἔξωθεν ἱερῷ: κειμένη δὲ ἐν φάραγγι βαθείᾳ, πλεσσοῖαν πηχῶν τὸς τοίχους ἔχουσα: ὃν λίθων δὲ πλεγαώνων κατεσκεύασο καὶ λευκῶν παυύ· τὸ μὲν μῆκος ἑκάστυ λίθυ πήχεις εἴκοσι, τὸ δὲ ὕψος ἓξ: ἔργον Σολομῶνος δὲ βασίλεως: πρῶτος δειμαμένυ τὸ συμπᾶν ἱερὸν: The people perſwaded the King Agrippa (the ſecond) to repair the Eaſt Porch or Cloiſter: Now this Cloiſter was in the outmoſt ſpace of the Temple: ſtanding over an exceeding deep valley: raiſed upon a Wall of 400 cubits which was made of ſquare white ſtones of 20 cubits long, and 6 cubits high apiece, the work of King Solomon who firſt built the Temple.

f Id. ib. lib. 20. cap. 8.

His meaning about the foundation of this Eaſt wall and cloiſter he tells elſewhere to this purpoſe, g that Solomon to find room enough this way, was put to fill and bring up a part of the deep trench with ſuch great ſtones, and ἐπετέθη στοὰ τῷ χώματι, and upon this ſtrong foundation, ſo brought up from the bottom of the valley, he built this Porch, or Cloiſter that we have in mention.

g De Bell. lib. 5. cap. 14.

Now

Now when the Temple was deſtroyed by the Babylonian, and all the buildings ruined, yet this great and wonderful foundation that Solomon had brought up ſo high as to equal the floor of the Mount, was not ruined or pulled down, but continued ſtill; and in aftertimes, the Porch or Cloiſter of that Eaſtern quarter, was built upon the ſame foundation of Solomons: and from that it took and bare the name ſtill of Solomons Porch; and the Eaſt gate here, upon the ſame occaſion was called the Kings Gate, as was ſaid before.

And now to take a Proſpect of this place, and wall, and buildings, and Cloiſters that we have ſpoken of at one view: By many ſteps, or at the leaſt by a great riſing, you were to come up to any of the gates that have been mentioned, let the Eaſt gate (or the gate of Shuſhan) be conceived for our entrance. h The Gate-houſe or threſhold was twelve cubits over, ſix without the doors and ſix within; being got within you ſaw the great ſquare within, moſt ſtately double cloiſtered round about on every ſide, but only on the South, where the cloiſter was treble: on the Weſt ſide were four gates, on the South two, on the North one, and one on the Eaſt where you came in: and at all theſe gates more or leſs buildings. i In five of theſe gates (namely in the Eaſt gate Suſhan, the two South gates Huldah, the North gate Tedi, and the Weſt Shallecheth) was a guard kept of the Levites by night for the ſafety and honour of the Temple, and ſo there was in every corner of this great ſquare within.

h Ezek. XL. 6.

i Mid. per. 1.1.

Theſe gallant and ſumptuous Walks thus round about the whole compaſs, were for the people to ſtand, walk or ſit under, in heat or rain, or according as they had a mind or occaſion: And ſo it is ſaid that our Saviour walked here, Joh. X. 23. the Apoſtles James and John ſtood here and the people about them, Acts. III. 11. And there were benches ſet by the walls round about for people to ſit down when they thought good: And therefore D. Kimchi k Interprets סטיו to be ספסל שיושבים בו a bench on which men ſit: And R. Nathan l makes it to be the ſame with אצטווה which he ſaith, is benches on which men ſet down their wares, and on which they ſit themſelves.

Tabernæ Shops: The great Sanhedrin ſitting thereabout.

THERE is very frequent mention in the Talmuds and Talmudical Writers, of a place in the Mountain of the houſe which was called חניות Hhanoth or Hhanijoth, which the learned in theſe Antiquities, do commonly render by the Latine word Tabernæ: which though in that Language it be a proper expreſſion of the Hebrew word, yet cannot we ſo properly in Engliſh render it Taverns: becauſe, that, in our uſual acceptation, that word is taken for houſes where Wine only is ſold; whereas theſe were ſhops where Wine, Oyl, Salt, Meal and ſuch like things were ſold, which were in conſtant uſe for Sacrifices and Offerings in the Temple. And Rabbi Nathan relateth that a there were Clerks of that Market appoynted to look to the weights and meaſures of theſe Shops, and to ſee the Shopkeepers did not ſell too dear.

a Aruch in אנרדמין

But the moſt famous thing concerning theſe Tabernæ that the Jewes ſpeak of, is, that the great Sanhedrin ſate here, having removed hither from the room Gazith the place of their common ſitting. The ſtory hereof is diſperſedly mentioned in the Talmud in ſeveral places, particularly it is thus at large in the Gemara of the Treatiſe Roſh haſhana per. 4. b Rabbi Johanan ſaith, The divine glory had ten ſittings: 1. From the Mercy ſeat to one of the Cherubs. 2. From that Cherub to the other. 3. From the Cherub to the threſhold. 4. From the threſhold to the Court. 5. From the Court to the Altar ſide. 6. From thence to the Altar top. 7. From thence to the outmoſt wall. 8. From that wall to the City. 9. From the City to Mount Olivet, 10. From Mount Olivet to the Wilderneſs, and from the Widerneſs it went up. So alſo the great Sanhedrin had ten ſittings: From the Chamber Gazith to Hhanoth (the Tabernæ or place of the Shops) From Hhanoth to Jeruſalem. From Jeruſalem to Jabneh. From Jabneh to Oſha אושא From Oſha to Shepharaam שפרעם From Shepharaam to Beth Shaaraim. From Beth Shaaraim to Tſipperis in Galilee. From Tſipperis to Tiberias.

b Tal. in Roſh. haſhan. fol. 31.

Now whereas there are but eight removes here mentioned, yet they ſpeak of ten, it to is be underſtood, as the Gloſs gives us notice, that from two of theſe places they removed forward and backward and forward again, as from Jabneh to Oſha, from Oſha back to Jabneh, and from Jabneh to Oſha, a ſecond time.

c Their first coming to Jabneh was in the days of Rabban Johanan ben Zaccai; from Jabneh to Osha, in the days of Rabban Gamaliel the last; and to Jabneh back again in the days of Rabban Simeon. To Shaaraim and to Tsipperis in the days of Rabbi Judah: And to Tiberias in the days of Antonius. c Gloss. ibid. Rab. Simeon.

These their flittings, by their own confession, began forty years before the destruction of the Temple. מ שנח עך שלא חרב הבירת גלחה לה סנחדרי וישבה לה בחנורת d Forty years, say they, before the destruction of the Temple, the Sanhedrin flitted and betook it self to sit in Hanoth, or the Tabernæ. And the reason is given e Because there were then many Thievs and Murderers, and they judged not of capital matters: which meaneth to this purpose: they held that while they sate in the room Gazith, they were bound to judge and determine of all matters that came before them, and that all their determinations were obliging, but now, when beside the curb of the Roman power that was upon them, by which their power was abridged, villany and insolency was also grown too strong for them, they thought as the Gemara in Avodah Zarah, speaks their mind, f It is good for us to rise and flit from this place, of which it is written, And thou shalt do according as the men of that place shall shew thee. d Shabbath fol. 15. e Ib. & Aruch. in חנורת f Avodah Zarah, fol. 8.

Now in what part of the Mountain of the House Hhanoth or the Tabernæ were placed, may be best conceived, by observing the place of the great Sanhedrins sitting, before they came to sit in the room Gazith; and for this purpose a Text of Jeremy doth give us light, which is in Chap. XXXV. 4. where it is said thus, I brought the Rechabites into the House of the Lord, into the Chamber of the Sons of Hanan the Son of Igdaliah a man of God, which was by the Chamber of the Princes, which was above the Chamber of Maaseiah the Son of Shallum the keeper of the door. Now by the Princes we cannot understand the Princes of the blood, for what had Jehojakims Sons to do here? Their residence was in the Palaces of Sion, and their way into the Temple, was at the gate on the West quarter, which was called Shallecheth and Coponius, whereas this gate whereof the Son of Shallum was keeper or Porter, was the East gate, as is apparent from 1 Chron. IX. 17, 18.

By the Princes therefore are to be understood, the great men of the Sanhedrin, Ἄρχοντες τῷ λαῷ, Acts IV. 8. who sate in Council and Judicature in a Chamber near the East gate or the gate Susban, namely, over the Porters lodge. Here they sate in the time of the first Temple, but under the second Temple, namely, from the times of Simeon Ben Shetah, they removed further inward and sate even by the side of the Court of Israel, in the room called Gazith, which we shall survey in its due place.

Now when they were put to remove and flit out of Gazith, and to sit there no more, whither should they betake themselves, but to some room near to the East gate again, where the place of the Sanhedrins sitting had been of old? It is observable in Jeremy, that in his time, they sate in two East gates of the Temple, sometimes in the one and sometimes in the other, namely, in this East gate of the Mountain of the House, as appeareth by the Text produced: and in the East gate of the Court, which was also called The New Gate, Jer. XXXVI. 10. of which hereafter.

Now in after times when they sate in the room Gazith, there was a Sanhedrin of three and twenty Judges sate in either of these gates, as is copiously testified by the Jewish records and antiquities. By the East gate therefore of the Mountain of the house may we best conclude, the Hhanoth or Tabernæ, to have been seated, namely, that they were as Shops in the lower rooms of the buildings that stood on either side of the gate Susban, and the rooms over head were imployed for some other use, and among the rest, one for the sitting of the great Sanhedrin, when they were removed from Gazith; and when they sate in Gazith, for a Sanhedrin of twenty three.

And whereas Maimony speaketh of מדרש g A Divinity School in the Mountain of the House, where the Sanhedrin sate upon Holy days, we know not where better to place it than hereabout, where their sitting was in the first and last times of the Temple. All the gates that we have viewed, were beautified with gallant buildings on either side them, but the East most eminent, because the greatest and commonest entrance into the Temple. And whereas there is mention in Scripture of women lodging in the Temple, as 2 Chron. XXII. 11, 12. Jehoshebeath and Joash and his Nurse lodged many years there: and Luke II. 37. Hanah is said not to have departed from the Temple for many years more: their lodgings were in the buildings near some of the gates of this outmost wall (but which undeterminable) for that all within this incloſing was called The Temple in the Scripture, and the common Language, is so apparent, that it needeth no demonstration. g Maym. in Sanhedr. perek.

CHAP. X.

The dimensions and form of Solomons Temple, and of that built by the returned out of Captivity.

HAving thus gone through and observed the compass of the Mountain of the Temple, and the wall that did inclose it in so large a square, with the Cloisters, gates and buildings that were in that wall and affixed to it: before we can come to cast out the Courts, Partitions and buildings that were within, and speak of their places and uses particularly; it will be necessary in the first place, to take a survey of the measure and situation of the Temple it self, that from it, and from this outer wall as from standing marks, we may measure all the proportions, fabricks and distances, that we are to go through.

The floor of the Mountain of the House was not even, but rising from East to West, so much in the whole, a that the floor of the Porch of the Temple was two and twenty cubits higher than the floor of the Gate Shushan, or the East-gate in the outmost wall: which in equality was cast into several levels one above another; and the outmost wall accordingly did sometime run level, and sometime rise from level to level, even as the evenness or risings of the floor it self did call for it.

a Mayn. in Beth habbechir. per. 6

The measures of the Temple built by Solomon, are said to have been, by the first measure, 2 Chron. III. 3. that is, by the same cubit, that measured the first Tabernacle, which is the same that we fix upon; and by this measure to have been seventy cubits long, 1 Kings VI. 2. 2 Chron. III. 3. in these several spaces. The most holy place twenty cubits, the holy place forty cubits, and the Porch ten. And the breadth of all these was twenty cubits.

About the height there is some obscurity, for the Book of Kings saith it was thirty cubits, but the Book of Chronicles nameth no sum at all; only it saith that the Porch was one hundred and twenty cubits high. Now b David Kimchi doth dispute it, whether this was the height of the Porch only, or of the whole house throughout: and he shews how it may be construed of the whole house; namely, that the height of it to the first floor was thirty cubits (according to the reckoning of the Book of Kings) and then the chambers over in several stories did rise to ninety cubits more. Yet both he and c R. Levi Gershom could well be perswaded to think that the Temple it self was but thirty cubits high, but are somewhat swayed by the opinion of some of their Rabbins which runneth another away. For from their words it appeareth. (say they) that there were chambers over the Temple and over the Porch: and this they hold from 1 Chron. 28. 11.

c Ralbag. in 1 Kings VI. Abin. Ezr. in Ezr. VI.

The words of that Text are these, David gave to Solomon his son the Pattern of the Porch and the houses thereof, and the Treasuries thereof, and the upper chambers thereof, and the Parlours thereof, and the place of the mercy seat: where all these particulars are so couched together (except the last) as if they were all within the Porch: But the Holy Ghost speaketh of the Porch, as the first part in sight, as you came up, it being the front of all, and the rest of the parcels mentioned, are to be conceived of, not as all crowded in it, but as distributed and disposed in other parts of the fabrick, as the Holy Ghost relateth and layeth down elsewhere. And as for the upper chambers here spoken of, we need not to confine them so, as to set them all either over the Porch (though there were some,) nor over the body of the Temple, but to place them also as the Text doth elsewhere, round about the house without, in several stories.

The careful considering the measures of the Temple built by the Children of the Captivity, will reasonably help to put us out of doubt about the matter that we have in dispute. The measures they brought along with them out of Persia, in Cyrus his Commission, d I he foundations to be strongly laid, the height sixty cubits, and the breadth sixty cubits, with three rows of great stones, and a row of new timber, and the expences to be given out of the Kings house.

d Ezr. VI. 3, 4.

Where we may observe, e 1. That the length is not mentioned, because that was to be of the former measure. 2. That the breadth, doubled the breadth of Solomons building, the side chambers and all taken in. And 3. That the height was double to the height of Solomons, as it is expressed in the Book of Kings, and as indeed the height of the Temple was, though the Porch were higher. For it seemeth utterly against reason, that Cyrus should offer to build the house as broad again as it was before, and yet not so high as it was before by half. It is no doubt but Cyrus had consultation with some of the Jews about the building, and that either they counselling him, should advise the abatement of so much of the height, or he inlarging the breadth and the house one way, should

ſhould cut it ſhort of the height and leſſen it the other way, is exceeding improbable; the length could not be doubled, becauſe that would have leſſened the meaſure of the Courts before it, which might not be indured, but the two other ways of dimenſion which could be allowed, he allowed double to what they were before.

Therefore the two Texts in Kings and Chronicles, are to be taken properly as they there lie before us, namely, that the Porch was one hundred and twenty cubits high, and that the reſt of the Temple was but thirty; and the form of the whole Houſe was thus. It ſtood Eaſt and Weſt, the moſt Holy place Weſtward, and the Porch or Entry Eaſtward, and the length of all from Eaſt to Weſt was ſeventy cubits, the breadth twenty cubits, beſides the breadth of the ſide Chambers: The height of the Holy and moſt Holy place thirty cubits, and the Porch ſtood at the Eaſt end like one of our high Steeples one hundred and twenty cubits high: And indeed Solomons Temple did very truly reſemble one of our Churches, but only that it differed in this, that the Steeple of it (which was the Porch) ſtood at the Eaſt end.

Now round about the ſides thereof, North and South, and the Weſt end, Solomon built Chambers of three ſtories high and five cubits was the height of every ſtory, the whole being fifteen cubits high in all, and they joined to the wall of the Houſe without. The higheſt ſtory was a cubit wider than the middle, and the middle a cubit wider than the loweſt, and yet the outmoſt wall of them was even and ſtraight, and jutted not over at one ſtory or other, any whit at all. But the reaſon of this different breadth of the Stories was this, the wall of the Temple for five cubits from the ground upward, was thicker by a cubit than it was from thence above. At the height therefore of thoſe five cubits there was a bench of the wall of a cubit breadth left outerly round about the Houſe, on which they laid one end of the beams and timber, which was the roof of the loweſt rooms, or the floor of the ſecond Story. And then again for five cubits above that, the wall was thicker by a cubit, than it was above; and at the height of thoſe five cubits there was ſuch another bench left again, and on that they laid the beams for the roof of the ſecond ſtory, which was the floor of the third. And ſo likewiſe for five cubits above that, the wall was yet thicker by a cubit, than it was above, and there the like bench was left again, and there were laid the beams of the roof of the third Story and of the whole building.

And this is the meaning of that verſe, 1 King. VI. 6. The neathermoſt Chamber was five cubits broad, the middlemoſt ſix cubits broad, and the third was ſeven cubits broad, for he made abatings to the Houſe on the outſide round about: that the beams ſhould not have hold of the very walls of the Houſe.

And thus did theſe Chambers take up half the height of the Houſe, being as the lower Leads of our Churches to the higher: the uſe of the Chambers we ſhall obſerve hereafter.

Now above theſe Chambers in the wall of the Temple, and in the outer wall of theſe Chambers themſelves there were Windows to let in light, which the Text ſaith were שקופים אטומים open and ſhut, or broad and narrow, which f the Chaldee Paraphraſt and g Theodoret have well interpreted, wide within and narrow without: namely, narrow without to receive the light, and wide within to diſperſe and dilate it. Though there h be ſome Jews, that conſtrue it the clean contrary way, viz. broad without and narrow within, different from all other Windows שאינו צריך לאורה for God, ſay they, had no need of ſuch light.

f Chald. par. in 1 Kings VI. 4. g Vid. Nobil. in LXX in loc. h Vid. R. Sol. & Kimch. in loc.

The people that returned out of Captivity, were i forty and ſix years in building their Temple before they could compleat it, and bring it to perfection, and yet when all was done, it proved ſo far inferiour in beauty and ſtatelineſs to that of Solomons, as that to thoſe that had ſeen both, k it was as nothing: the dimenſions made not the difference, for it was two ways, as large again as his, (even as his was every way as large again as Moſes Tabernacle) but this wanted that ſumptuouſneſs and bravery of building that his had. And it wanted thoſe five things which were the glory and excellency of the former, namely, l The Ark, Urim and Thummim, Fire from Heaven, The Cloud of glory upon the Mercy ſeat, and The Spirit of Propheſie: The m weeping therefore of thoſe perſons that had ſeen the former Houſe, at the laying of the foundation of this, was not as if they ſaw any leſſening of the Houſe in compariſon of the former, in compaſs and meaſure, (for the foundations promiſed a larger) but it was upon remembring the glory of the former, both in its magnificence, and in theſe five excellencies, and to think of the burning of that, and it was alſo in comparing their preſent ſervile and poor condition, with the liberty, ſtate and gallantry of the Nation when the other ſtood.

m Ezr. III. 10.

Their meaſures were preſcribed by Cyrus, not becauſe he would curb the building, but inlarge it, for whereas Solomons Temple was but thirty cubits broad, Chambers and all, he gave liberty of ſixty cubits bredth; and whereas Solomons was but thirty cubts high all the body of the Houſe, he doubled the meaſure to ſixty.

And therefore those words of Josephus are cautelously to be understood, when he saith, That n they brought up the roof of Solomons Fabrick, of white stone, the height sixty cubits, the length as much, and the breadth twenty. In which account of the height of it, he differs both from Scripture and from all other of his own Nation, and by what measures or counters he reckons it is hard to understand: And so it is also to construe that which follows: κατὰ τοῦτο δὲ ἄλλος ἦν ἐπηρμένος ἴσος τοῖς μέτροις· ὡς τε εἶναι τὸ πᾶν ὕψος τοῦ ναοῦ πηχῶν ἑκατὸν κ) εἴκοσι: which I English thus, And by this there was another piece raised of equal measures: so that the whole height of the Temple was an hundred and twenty cubits: By which piece I conceive he means the Porch, and his own words clear it; but how to apprehend that it was of equal measure with what he had spoken of before, I acknowledge I do not understand. And whereas, he saith, That the whole height of the Temple was an hundred and twenty cubits, his own context shews that he cannot mean, that it was so high throughout, but it is to be construed of the Porch of which he is speaking, namely, that the Temple in some part of it rose to an hundred and twenty cubits high.

n Joseph. Antiq. lib. 8. c. 2.

And so are those words of Herod to be understood in the Oration that he made to the people, when he tells them of his resolution to build the Temple. o Our Fathers (saith he) built the Temple to the great God, after their coming up again from Babylon, Ἐνθεῖ δὲ αὐτὸ πρὸς τὸ μέγεθος εἰς ὕψος ἑξήκοντα πήχεις, τοσοῦτον γὰρ ὑπερεῖχεν ὁ πρῶτος ἐκεῖνος ὃν Σολομὼν ἀνῳκοδόμησε; But it wanted as to the greatness of it, sixty cubits in height: for so much did the former Temple which Solomon had built exceed it. Which is not to be understood of the whole house, but of the Porch only: for the Children of the Captivity either built no Porch at all, (and then their Temple was a perfect Cube, length and height and breadth exactly equal) or if they did, yet did not the height of it exceed the rest of the house, as Solomons did, but only equal it, the whole being sixty cubits high, all alike, according to the dimensions that Cyrus had prescribed.

o Id. ib. lib. 15 cap. 14.

Now in his Patent for the building of the Temple, there are these words, which are of no small difficulty to be understood, נרבכן די אבין גלל תלתא ונך בך די אע חדת Ezr. VI. 4. Josephus renders this passage thus, Λίθοις μὲν ξέστοις τρεῖς δόμους καὶ ἕνα ξύλινον ἐγχώριον· p Three houses of hewen stone, and one house of wood within: By the three houses, seeming to mean the three parts of the Temple, Porch, Holy, and most Holy place; and by the one woodden House, the seiling of the House within. And in this sense Rabbi Solomon seemeth also to understand it, who renders the words to this sense, q The Walls were of Marble, and there was a Wall of Wood within, like the building of the House which Solomon built. The Septuagint have Translated נרבכן Houses, and Josephus followed them in so rendring it: But the Chaldee Paraphrast doth use the word, to signifie Ranks or Rows of Stone or Timber, as Hag. II. 15. Before a Stone was laid upon a Stone; he utters it נרבך על נרבך and so he renders טור by the word נרבך Ezek. XLVI. 23. &c. And in this sense doth Aben Ezra understand the word, and so hath our English Translated it, Three rows of great Stones, and a row of new Timber.

p Joseph. Antiq. lib. 11. c. 1. & 4.

q R. Sol. in Ezr. VI.

But we are yet to seek for the meaning of the clause, though we be satisfied with this sense of the word: Three rows of Stone, and one of Timber. Is this to be understood of three rows of Stone Pillars and one of Wood, all standing up, or of three rows of Stones laid in the Walls, and one row of Timber lying upon them? And is this meant in the Body of the Temple it self, or in some other Walls that were about it? If we look into 1 Kings VI. 36. I suppose some resolution of these doubts may arise thence, for there it is said parallel to what is spoken, Ezr. VI. 4. That Solomon built the inner Court with three rows of hewen Stone, and one row of Cedar-beams: And it is almost past peradventure, that Cyrus gave his Commission after that pattern, having learned it from some Jews that were about him. Having therefore prescribed the dimensions of the Temple it self, in vers. 3. he giveth also warrant and platform for Walling in the Court, even after the fashion that Solomon had used, namely, three rows of great Stones to bring up the Wall, and a row of Cedar-beams, either to crest it, or to lie between as the Wall rose. And so do Levi Gershom, and D. Kimchi, expound these words, in 1 King. VI. The Walls were three rows of hewen Stones, and one of Timber of Cedar upon them.

The Jews upon their return out of Captivity, did first build the Altar, before they set upon the building of the House, Ezr. III. 3. for their necessity and occasions did call upon them to sacrifice, and the very place did warrant their Sacrificing, though the Temple were not yet built. In the second year after their return, in the second month of the year, which was the second year of Cyrus, they lay the foundation of the House, but in the next verse the Work is hindred, and so continues forlorn till the second year of Darius, Ezr. IV. 24. On the twenty fourth day of the sixth month of that year they begin to prepare for the Building again, and on the twenty fourth day of the ninth month they set to Work. Compare Hag. I. 15. & II. 18.

The

The fashion and pattern which they followed in the particular Structures and Fabricks about the House, was r as the Authors of their own Nation assert, the Temple which Ezekiel hath described, Chap. 40. & 41. &c. The children of the Captivity (say they) made the building according to the form that they saw in the building of Ezekiel in divers things; which although they could not imitate to the full, especially in the spaciousness of his measures, and sumptuousness of his Fabrick, (that pattern of his being as well a figure of a Temple not earthly, and not built with hands, as it was an earnest and promise of an earthly Temple, to be built by them upon their return) yet did they lay that copy before them, and did in very many things imitate that fashion and form, and platform their buildings, and Courts thereafter: And so did Herod by the counsel of the wise Men that were in his favour (as Hillel, Shammai, and Menahem, &c.) when he repaired, or rather rebuilt the Temple, though he did in divers things exceed the dimensions of the childrens of the Captivity, yet did he observe their platform and fashion as they had done Ezekiels. And so (as to the form and composure of the things and places themselves) there is so little difference betwixt the buildings of the returned Captives, and the buildings of Herod, that the Talmudicks do still account both but one Temple, and account that that stood to the destruction of Jerusalem, to be but בית שני The second Temple, to Solomons first; and so indifferently shall we take it up.

CHAP. XI.

The measures and platform of the Temple, as it stood in the time of Our SAVIOUR.

HEROD (surnamed the Great) a when he was a young Gallant, before he came to be King, had slain one Ezekias, and some others with him, for which he was called before the Sanhedrin to be judged for killing a man: where some of the Council fearing him, and some favouring him, and not executing justice as he had deserved; Shammai the Vice-president of the Council, did boldly and plainly tell them, before his face, That whereas they were so favourable and partial to him now, the time would come when he would not shew them such favour, but should kill them. And so Herod did, when he was King afterward, destroying the whole Sanhedrin, unless it were two men, Hillel the President, and Shammai the Vice-president, who had been so plain with him. And afterwards, as it were in way of expiation of this horrid fact, b he was perswaded by Baba ben Bota to repair the Temple, which he did so thoroughly, that c he made it Μείζω τε καὶ ὑψηλότερον κατὰ πᾶσαν ἀξιοπρεπέστερον, Larger in compass, and most glorious in height, taking down the old foundation, and laying new. This work he began in the eighteenth year of his Reign, and in eight years he finished it (some nine years before our Saviours birth:) in all which time, if you will believe the Jews, they will tell you, d That it never rained in the day time, lest the work should be hindred. The sumptuousness of this building the same Authors in the Treatise e Succah in the Gemara do magnifie in these expressions. He that never saw Jerusalem in her glory, never saw lovely City. And he that never saw the Sanctuary with its buildings, never saw goodly buildings. Rab. Hasda saith, It was Herods building, And of what did he build it? Rabba saith, Of goodly stone and marble. And some say, מאבני שש בחלאי of marble painted or full of curious veins and divers colours. אפק שפה ועיול שפה one border or edge went in and another out; which the Gloss expreis thus, מחתאי ארותא בימא It seemed like the wavings of the Sea, one row of stones did so curiously go in, and another come out.

The form and fashion of this pile on the outside (for of that only we will take a survey as yet) was thus. [n] Maym. ubi ſup.

5. אמה תקרה The timber or place for the laying on of the roof, a cubit.

6. אמה מעיבה The roof it ſelf a cubit. The word מעיבה is of ſome difficult conſtruction: It ſeemeth to be derived, [o] as R. Nathan giveth intimation, from that word, Neh. III. 8. ויעזבו את ירושלים which our Engliſh hath rendred, They fortified [p] and R. Solomon, They raiſed with Earth. And there Aben Ezra ſpeaks of this very word that we have in hand, and ſaith that עזב there and the word we have before us, are both of the ſame ſenſe: and ſo the ſame, word עזב is uſed again, Neh. IV. 2. And he telleth us withal that there are ſome that do render that clauſe עזוב תעזוב עמו Exod. XXIII. 5. according to this conſtruction: If thou ſee the Aſs of him that hateth thee lying under his burden, Thou ſhalt ſurely raiſe him with him.

[o] Aruch in voce
[p] R. Sol. & Ab. Ezr. in Neh. III. 8.

But as for our word מעיבה which is not to be found in Scripture, but uſed by the Talmudick Writers, we muſt have recourſe to the Talmud for the meaning of it: And there as Aruch pointeth us to the places we find it ſpoken of and handled in the Treatiſe Baba Mezia, and Baba Bathra. In the former Tract are theſe words, [q] Is a houſe and a chamber over it in two mens poſſeſſion? And the chamber over goes to decay: if the Owner of the houſe (below) will not help to repair it: let him that owes the chamber, go and dwell below till he do repair: R. Joſe ſaith, The Owner of the lower room is to lay on the roof-timber, and the Owner of the upper-room the מעיבה And in the other Tract are theſe words [r] A man ſhall not ſet up a furnace (or oven) within a houſe unleſs there be the ſpace of four cubits over it (namely, for fear the flame ſhould catch in the roof or floor above) And if he do ſet up a furnace in an upper-room, it is neceſſary that there be a מעיבה of three fingers thick under it. And the reaſon is alſo given for fear of danger of fire.

[q] Baba Mezia per. 10.

Now the Gemara upon the former place in explanation of the word, and Aruch in explanation of the Gemara ſay, that it was a cruſtedneſs made of divers materials, as reeds, chalk, ſtones and ſuch like plaiſtering; which it ſeemeth by the former place cited was laid on the top of the houſe in ſtead of leads to keep out wet; and by the later, to be made under their furnaces in upper-rooms to prevent fire, burning downward. And the determination of R. Joſe (that the dweller below ſhould lay on the roof, and the dweller above the מעיבה) ſeems to reſult to nothing elſe but this, that the one ſhould lay on the timber of the roof, and the other a cover of plaiſter to be laid on the roof upon reeds, of ſuch materials tempered together as ſhould keep out the rain from dropping through: And ſo do I underſtand the word in our work that we are viewing; that this was a thick well wrought plaiſter of materials to compact, that being once grown hard was as a ſtone, and this was as leads on the roof to keep out wet; the uſe of ſheets of lead being either unknown to them, or lead being ſcarce and not to be had: And thus are we come up to the lower leads; for ſo let me call them, as being an expreſſion beſt known among us.

And here let us take in a paſſage of Joſephus. He ſpeaking of the meaſures of the Temple, and of the ſtones of which it was built, ſaith, That they were twenty five cubits long, eight cubits high, and twelve broad, [s] ᾗ πᾶσι αὐτὸ, ſaith he, καθότι ἡ τῆς βασιλικῆς στοᾶς, τὸ μὲν ἔνδεν ταπεινότατον, ὑψηλότατον δὲ τὸ μεσαίτατον ὡς θαυμάσιον ὂν πολλῶν εἶναι σταδίων, &c. It was made after the faſhion of the royal cloiſter, lower on either ſide, and higheſt in the middle, ſo that it was to be ſeen many furlongs off, &c. Now the Cloiſter royal was ſo built (as was obſerved before) that three walks running along together, roofed over and born upon pillars, the roof of the middle was raiſed far higher than the two of either ſide it.

And

And ſo we are by Joſephus to underſtand accordingly of the Temple. It was indeed of an hundred cubits high, but not ſo as riſing in an equal ſquare, from the bottom to the top, but riſing ſquare fifty one cubits, as hath been proportioned out: The main foundation ſix cubits high: the Wall plain about it, forty cubits, a carved border above that, one cubit; the place for caſting off the rains, two cubits; above that the floor laying on one cubit thick, and the plaiſter cover one cubit thick; but then the riſe of the building grew narrower; for from thence it was carried up ſo towards the middle, as that there were left leads, as one may call them, on the North and South ſides all along, from the Eaſt unto the Weſt: A familiar example of this for the better underſtanding of it we have in the building of exceeding many of our Churches: the pile riſeth of a like breadth to the lower Leads, and then it riſeth only in the middle, to the height or roof of the Church: And ſo was it with the Temple: Go either to Eaſt or Weſt end, and ſtand in the middle and look up, and it was one hundred cubits; but go any whit like toward the right or left hand, and it was but half ſo high, for there were the lower Leads. Leads I cannot but call them, for that language is beſt underſtood amongſt us, though they were not covered with Lead (a covering not ſo well known in thoſe times as now) but with a plaiſter or parget of a cubit thick, and ſo ſtrongly wrought, and tempered, as that it differed not from the hardneſs of ſtone.

We muſt not forget בית דלפה that we paſſed over even now, but muſt look back upon it a little, before we leave theſe Leads, or this firſt riſing that we are now upon. For the paſſing away of the rains that dropped off this roof, that they ſhould not run down along the wall, and ſo both moulder and deface the ſtones, there was immediately above the imbroidered border that was ſpoken of, a row of ſtones that jutted out of the building more than their fellows, which were neatly and artificially guttered or riggeted, and as artificially jointed together in the guttering (that no rain ſhould drop through) the rigget laid juſt under the edge of the Leads, (or ſpouts from the leads) that caſt off the rains, that the droppings falling therein were conveyed away to either end of that ſide on which they were, and ſo ſent to the ground either in pipes, or in a great fall from theſe gutters.

And now to follow the building up ſtill to its perfect height; conceive it to be narrowed now to half the breadth, and ſo to riſe in the middle of the pile, as that the Leads on either ſide, were twenty five cubits broad.

1. גובה של עלייה מ אמה The height of the room above, or the riſing above the Leads in a ſtraight wall was forty cubits: this is called עלייה or an upper room, becauſe it was directly over the holy and moſt holy places.

3. אמה כיור Another carved or ingraven border; ſuch an one as was mentioned before, the breadth of one cubit.

3. בית ד ילפה The gutter two cubits as before, for putting off rains; not that this gutter was two cubits deep, but that it was two cubits from theſe gutters to the laying on of the roof.

4. אמה מקרה The floor or roof, a cubit.

5. אמה מעוכה, The plaiſter cover, a cubit.

6. ג אמום מעקה The battlements three cubits; This word is uſed, Deut. XXII. 8. and not elſewhere in Scripture, and yet ſaith Aben Ezra, is the ſenſe of it plain enough from the Text. And ſo indeed it is, for the Lord there enjoineth, that when a man buildeth a new houſe he ſhould make מעקה battlements, leſt any one ſhould fall off, and ſo bring blood upon his houſe; The roofs of their houſes were flat in thoſe Countries, Joſ. II. 6. 2 Sam. XVI. 22. Act. X. 19, &c. and there they uſed to walk, 1 Sam. IX. 25. and therefore leſt any ſhould fall off, they were to make battlements round about, u ten handbreadths, or two common cubits high at the leaſt, leſt any one ſhould fall off, and be ſlain or maimed: ſo howſoever it may be well ſuppoſed, that they walked not upon the Temple roof ſo ordinarily as they did upon their own houſes (nor was the Temple roof altogether ſo flat as their roofs) yet were battlements alſo made to it, partly, becauſe it ſhould not come ſhort of the beauty of other buildings, and partly becauſe there was occaſion ſometimes to go upon the roof of it.

7. כלה עורן The ſcarcrow one cubit; what this was, let us firſt take R. Nathans w information for it. Becauſe, ſaith he, of the holineſs of the firſt Temple, and the divine glory dwelling there, birds flew not on it at all: But as for the ſecond Temple, they feared, that the holineſs of it ſhould not be as the holyneſs of the firſt; and leſt birds ſhould fly over it, and leave ſome defilement upon it, therefore they ſet up a picture, to cauſe birds to keep off the roof of the Temple, and they called it, כולה עורב the ſcarcrow, as meaning, that it keeps the Ravens from flying upon the Temple roof, and this Image or Picture was ſuch an one as they uſe to ſet upon corn: But by other of the Jews it is defined to be x טס של ברזל כמו סייף גובהו אמה על גבי המעקה סביב כדי שלא ינוחו עליו העופות A pike of iron like a rapier of a cubit high, upon the top of the battlements round about, made that birds might not light upon upon it. And by ſome again concluded, that there were no ſuch thing as either the one or other, y but only that the battlement was four cubits high: But however it may be a fancy not to be fancied, that there was or could be any ſuch courſe taken as to keep Birds off the Roof of the Temple, (ſee Pſal. 84. 34.) yet upon the ſo concurrent teſtimony of the Hebrew Writers, as is to be found, joined with the thought of what an ornament it would add to the building it ſelf, it may very well be concluded, that there were pinnacles upon the battlements round about: as Kings Colledge Chappel in Cambridge is decked in the like manner to its great beauty. Πτερύγιον ἱεροῦ is conſtrued according to this ſenſe by divers Expoſitors, Matth. IV. 5. The roof was not a perfect flat, as was the roof of other houſes, but riſing in the middle משפע ועולה עד לשוה גובהו של מעקה z till the very creſt of the middle came up as high as the height of the battlement; as Kings Colledge Chappel may be herein a parallel alſo; And the like battlements and pinacles are likewiſe to be allotted to the lower Leads.

CHAP. XII.

The Breadth, Chambers, and Stairs of the Temple.

THUS were the riſings of the Temple to its height, in the parcels named: it is now equally requiſite to take notice alſo of the length and breadth of it, and to obſerve into what leſſer meaſures thoſe dimenſions were divided.

a The length of it was from Eaſt to Weſt, and it was an hundred cubits, and ſo was the breadth from North to South, in ſome part of it, but not in all. That part of it that bare this breadth, was only the Porch, for the building behind it was only ſeventy cubits broad. And the Porch ſtood before it as a croſs building, reaching fifteen cubits South, and fifteen cubits North further out than the breadth of the Temple; which ſpaces on either ſide were thus taken up, b The thickneſs of the wall of the Porch at either end was five cubits, and from that wall to the wall of the Temple on either ſide were ten cubits.

So fair a Front there was at the entring; an hundred cubits broad, and an hundred and twenty cubits high; for ſo is Joſephus to be underſtood, when ſpeaking of the Temple built by Herod, he ſaith, it was Μήκει μὲν ἐ πηχῶν, τὸ δ' ὕψος ἀ ἐπὶτοις; c An hundred long, and twenty cubits above an hundred high; Not all the houſe throughout ſo high, for that the Talmud denies, giving ſo particular and exact account of an hundred only, as we have obſerved, but the Porch of this height riſing twenty cubits above the height of the reſt of the houſe.

Juſt in the middle of this fair Front d was the Gate of the Porch, forty cubits high, and twenty cubits broad: e It had no doors to it at all, but f it was an open Gate, into which whoſoever ſtood in the Court might look and ſee the ſpace of the Porch within. Κεχρύσωτο δὲ τὰ μετωπα πάντα, &c. All this front was gilt with gold, and through it all the firſt houſe (that is, the Porch within) might be ſeen, and that glittered with gold alſo: Now by all this Front, Joſephus, (for they are his words) meaneth not the whole face of the Porch, or all the hundred cubits long, and hundred and twenty high, but the very front of the Gate, or entrance only, which he ſheweth to have been ſeventy cubits high, and twenty five broad: And herein the Talmud and he do not claſh, though the Talmud ſay, that the height was only forty cubits, and the breadth but twenty, for it ſpeaks only of the very hollow entrance, but he ſpeaks alſo of the Poſts and head or front of the whole Gate-houſe, as we obſerved about the other Gates before.

g The Talmud likewiſe ſpeaks of five מלתראות beams of ſome choice wood (the Learned Buxtorfius tranſlates it quercinæ) that were laid over this Gate, curiouſly wrought with knots and flowers, and a row of ſtone ſtill laid between beam and beam: The loweſt beam that lay on the head of the Gate was a cubit on either ſide longer than the Gate was broad: then was laid on that a row of ſtone: After that another carved beam a cubit on either end longer than the other; and then a row of ſtone. Then another beam, and ſo of the reſt, every beam being a cubit at either end longer than that that lay below it. Theſe were thus laid over the Gate to bear the weight that was above; they roſe to a great height, were curiouſly ingraven, and gilt, and from the higheſt there was a neat deſcending border gathered at either end of the beams, ſtill inward and inward, as the beams ſhortned, and at laſt it ran down by the cheeks of the entry two cubits and an half broad, on either ſide the Gate: And this was the front that Joſephus meaneth.

And now turn behind this Porch, at whether end you will, and look Weſtward: There ran the body of the Temple it ſelf, pointing exactly upon the middle of the Porch, or or juſt upon this entrance that we have been ſpeaking of, the breadth of it between wall and wall, juſt equal with the breadth of this entrance; but the walls and chambers built on either ſide, of ſuch a breadth, as that the whole came to ſeventy cubits broad: and thus doth Ariel or the Lion of God, as the Jews interpret it, repreſent the proportion of a Lion, broad before in the large front the Porch, which was of an hundred cubits breadth, and narrow behind, in the buildings of the houſe reduced in breadth to ſeventy cubits; which breadth to take up in its ſeveral parcels, we will begin at the North ſide, and thus we find theſe particular meaſures.

i Now the Chambers were in number eight and thirty, fifteen upon the Northſide, fifteen upon the South, and eight at the Weſt end. They were in three ſtories, five in the loweſt ſtories, and five over them, and five over thoſe; thus on the North and South ſides: but at the Weſt end there were three on the ground, and three over them, and two over thoſe. Every Chamber was ſix cubits broad, and twice as long (only the two higheſt Chambers at the Weſt end were of a greater length). k And there was a ſpace between the Chambers on the ſame floor, in manner of an entry of ſome ſeven cubits and an half broad, that you might paſs in it betwixt Chamber and Chamber, to every Chamber door which was upon the ſide. i Ibid. Sect. 3. k See Ezek. XLI. 21.

Before theſe Chambers there ran a Gallery from the Eaſt end of the building to the Weſt (but at the Weſt end there was none ſuch) of three cubits broad, by which you were carried along to any of theſe Entries between the Chambers, and ſo to any Chamber door: In the outmoſt wall of the Fabrick, toward the North and the South, there were four doors on either ſide, into four entries (for ſo many there were between five Chambers) but as ſoon as you were come within the doors, there ran a Gallery along on your right hand and left, over which you ſtepped into the entry that was before you: or if you went not in at the door that was juſt oppoſite to the Entry that you would go to, you might go in at any door you thought good, and this Gallery would lead you to that Entry.

Thus was it with the loweſt Chambers, and the like Gallery and Entries were alſo in the middle ſtory, and in the higheſt: Now the way to go up into them, was by a large pair of turning ſtairs, in a Turret at the North-Eaſt corner of the North ſide; by which ſtairs you went up to the firſt floor, and there if you would, you might land in the Gallery, and go there to what Entry or Chamber you would; or if you would go higher, you might do ſo likewiſe into the Gallery in the third ſtory; and if you had a mind, you might yet go higher up theſe ſtairs, up to the Leads, to walk over the Chambers, on the roof, round about their whole pyle.

But beſides this Staircaſe-turret, which thus conveyed to the roof of the buildings, there was ſuch another, at the furtheſt end of every one of the Entries that have been ſpoken of, which carried up to the firſt and ſecond floor, or to the upper Chambers, but went not ſo high, as to convey to the roof: And ſo had you gone in at any of the four doors to the ground Chambers, either on the North ſide of the Houſe, or on the South, ſtepping over the Gallery, you came into the Entry between two Chambers, one on your right hand, and another on your left, and their doors opening into the Entry, and facing one another; but before you, towards the Temple wall, there was a round large Turret-like ſtair caſe, into which you might go out of either Chamber, and ſo go up ſtairs into the Chambers over head: and from thence up ſtairs again, into the Chambers over them. And thus are we to underſtand that Talmudick paſſage, of no ſmall difficulty at the firſt ſight. l אחר לחא הימין ואחר לחא מהשמאל ואחד לחא שעל גניו: There were three doors to every one of the Chambers, One to the Chamber on the right hand, and another to the Chamber on the left (that is, one door to the Entry on the one ſide, and another to the l Mid. ubi ſup.

the Entry on the other,) and one to the Chamber over head, that is, into this Stair-case that carried up to the Chambers above. And thus m one went up from the lowest story to the high-est by the middle: for n they went up with winding stairs into the middle story, and out of the middle into the third.

m Ezek. XLI. 7
n 1 King. VI. 8.

The West-end Chambers had no Gallery at all before them, but you stepped immediately through the doors that were in the outmost wall into the Entries, and at the end of the Entries there was such a Stair-case as this, which conveyed and carried you up from story to story. On the South there were such Galleries in the three heights, as there were on the North, and such Stair-cases at the end of the Entries, joining to the Temple-wall, but that space where the Galleries were, was called by another name. Not מסיבה Mesibbah, as it was called on the North-side, but בית הורדת המים the place of the coming down of the water: Not as if here were the gutters to carry off the rains from the whole House, but becaufe in this space were laid the pipes that brought water down from the Fountain Etam, to the Cistern or Well, in the Well-room that was made to receive them: They were so laid, as that they hindred not the access or passage in the Galleries, to any of the Chambers, and it may be they were not to be seen at all, but lay under ground in the ground-gallery; but they were glad thus to distinguish between the North and South-sides, by these different names, as that they might the easier and quicker be understood, when they spake of a Chamber in the Mesibbah, or of a Chamber in the conveyance of the water.

These Chambers, which were of this number, measure, posture and composure that hath been spoken, and whose floor and roof-beams rested upon benches in the Temple-wall, as was observed before, were for the laying up some choice Treasures and Utensils, as also for Corn, Wine, and Oil, and whatsoever was brought in of Tithes, and first Fruits, for the sustenance and subsistence of the Priests that attended upon the Altar, and they were as Treasuries or Storehouses for that purpose, Neh. XII. 44. Mal. III. 10.

And now let us go up the stairs of the great Turret, in the North-East corner on the North-side (for there was none such on the South) that will carry us to the roof of this building, or on the Leads. At the top of the stairs he went out at a wicket, and his face was then towards the West. o He walked upon the Leads along upon the North-side till he came to the West corner: when he came thither he turned his face toward the South corner: when he came to the South, he turned his face Eastward, and went all along on the South-side, till he came up a good way, and there was a door through the Temple-wall into the rooms over the Holy and most Holy places. In this room over them (which was fifty cubits from the ground, and so were the Leads) there were these three things worth taking notice of.

o Mid. ubi sup.

1. That as soon as a man was stept within the door, there were two Cedar beams or Trees laid close together, sloping still upward, and lying along the wall, by which (they were laid so handsomly slope, and steps were either cut in them, or nailed upon them) one might go to the very top of the Temple, and this was the way to the higher Leads.

2. Just over the parting between the Holy and most Holy place, there were some little Pillasters set, which shewed the partition.

3. In the floor over the most holy place, there were divers holes like Trapdoors, through which, when occasion required, they let down Workmen by cords, to mend the walls of the most holy place as there was need. And they let them down in Chests or close Trunks, or some such things, where they could see nothing but their work before them, and the reason of this is given by the Jews שלא יזונו עין יתם מבית קדשי הקדשים That they might not feed their Eyes with looking upon the most holy place. p Once a year between Passover and Passover, they whited the Temple walls within: and for this and other necessary work about the House within, it was desired and endeavoured that Priests or Levites should do the work; but if such were not found to do it, then other Israelites were admitted, and they were admitted to go through the doors into the most holy place, if Chests or Trunks, were not to be found in which to let them down.

The Porch.

SECT. I.

The ſteps up to it.

IN taking particular account of the length of the building from Eaſt to Weſt, (which was an hundred cubits) we will firſt begin at the Porch (which was the beautiful Front Eaſtward) and view ſeverally every ſpecial place and parcel till we come to the Weſt end.

a The ſpreading of the Porch in length was an hundred cubits, and in height an hundred and twenty cubits higher than the height of the Temple: And this Porch which was a croſs building to the Temple it ſelf, and ſo high above it, may not improperly be conceived to be that place whither Satan brought our Saviour in his temptation, when he is ſaid to have brought him εἰς πτερύγιον ἱερῦ, properly to the wing of the Temple. a See chap. 1.

There were ſeveral things at this Front, before we ſtir from it, that were very remarkable, and cannot be paſſed without obſervation: And the firſt that we will look upon, ſhall be the ſteps that roſe up out of the Court into this entrance, which were c twelve in number, every ſtep half a cubit riſing, ſix cubits in the whole riſe, and ſo much was the floor of the Porch higher than the floor of the Court. And here we meet with a paſſage in the Treatiſe Middoth, in the place cited in the Margin, which is exceeding hard to be underſtood, and the very ſame alſo in Maymonides, in whom it is harder. The words are theſe: Having ſpoken of the ſteps that went up to the Porch, that they were twelve, and that the riſe of every ſtep was half a cubit, and the bredth of it to ſtand upon a cubit, it comes on and ſaith, אמה אמה ורובך שלש ואמה אמה רובך שלש והעליונה אמה אמה רבך ארבע Which applyed to the ſteps, and their riſing, I ſhould tranſlate to this ſenſe, At every cubits riſe there was a half pace of three cubits broad, and at the higheſt cubits riſe there was a half pace of four cubits broad. The meaning is this, That as you had gone up two ſteps (which being half a cubit high apiece, made but a cubit riſe) at the third ſtep the ſpace you tread upon was enlarged, and was three cubits broad, whereas the ſteps themſelves that you had come up, were but one cubit breadth: And ſo from this inlarged breadth, or half ſpace, ſtep two ſteps further and there was another, and after two ſteps more another, and after two ſteps yet more there was the higheſt, which was an half ſpace, or inlargment of four cubits breadth: And ſo every third ſtep of the twelve was an half pace, or ſuch an inlargement, which made the Aſcent exceeding beautiful and ſtately. And this helpeth to underſtand a paſſage in the Treatiſe Joma, which at the firſt reading is not eaſie to be underſtood. Where relating how when the High Prieſt on the day of Expiation had ſlain his own Bullock, he gave the blood to one to ſtir it, to keep it from congealing, it ſaith, מטרס בו על הרובך הרביעי שבהיכל d That he ſtirred it about, upon the fourth half pace of the Temple; which Maymony expreſſeth, מנדנדו על הרובך הרביעי של היכל מבחוץ e He ſtired it about that it ſhould not congeal, upon the fourth half pace of the Temple without; that is, upon the very top of theſe twelve ſteps that went up into the Porch. The word רובך f Baal Aruch (after the production of many examples of it) renders by מצבות Standings, or Pillars, or Benches; I find not a fitter word for it here to expreſs it by than Half-pace.

c Mid. per. 3.

d Joma, per 4. e Maym. in Joma habbech. per 5. f Ar. in רבך

Now g Maymony in Beth habbechirah, or in his Treatiſe of the Temple, having to deal with theſe words of the Talmud that we have been ſpeaking of, doth utter them thus, סביב לכותלי האולם מלמטה עד למעלה כך היו אמה אחת חלק ורובך שלש אמות ואמה חלק ורובך שלש אמות עד למעלה ונמצאו הרובדים מוקפים לכותלים Round about the Walls of the Porch from below upward they were thus: One cubit plain, and then an half pace of three cubits, one cubit plain (or an ordinary riſing of ſteps) and then another half pace of three cubits, and ſo up; ſo that the half paces did go about the Walls of the Porch; His meaning is the ſame with what was ſaid before, but he addeth ſomewhat more, and that is, that theſe twelve ſteps thus beautifully ſpreading, every third ſtep into an half pace, did not only go up to the entrance into the Porch, but alſo there was ſuch ſteps all along the front of the Porch Eaſtward; and alſo ſuch ſteps at either end of it, North and South; and the reaſon of this was becauſe the floor of the Porch was higher ſo much than, the floor of the Court, and there then were Doors in the Buildings beſides the great Door that gave paſſage into the Temple, and into theſe Doors you could not get without ſuch ſteps.

SECT. II.

The two Pillars Jachin and Boaz.

OF the Gate or entrance into the Porch, and so into the Temple, and of its dimensions and beauty hath been spoken before, and therefore as to that particular we need say no more here, but may be silent: but one main part of the Ornament and beauty of it was there omitted, and reserved to this place, and that is the two famous Pillars that in Solomons Temple stood at the cheeks of the entrance or passage in, Jachin and Boaz. I find not indeed mention among the Jews Antiquities of any such Pillars set at the entrance of the Temple, that we are surveying (which was the Temple built by Herod, the Temple that was in the days of our Saviour) though Ezekiel speak of such Pillars at the door of his Temple, Chap. XL. 49. yet because we desire to give account chiefly of what we find recorded in Scripture concerning the Temple in general, we cannot pass over two such memorable Monuments as these two Pillars, of whom the Story and relation is held out by the Scripture so largely and exactly.

1. These two Pillars (which were of brass) consisted either of them of two parts, the Pillar it self, and the Boll and Chapiter that was set on the head of it. The Pillar it self was hollow, the circle incompassing the hollow four fingers thick, and the compass of that circling twelve cubits about, Jer. LII. 21. 1 King. VII. 15. a the whole thickness or diameter of either Pillar four cubits, or three cubits, and four fifth parts of a cubit, as is the reckoning of Levi Gerson. The Chapiter or Boll likewise of either Pillar was hollow, and was a huge piece of Brass Boll or oval fashion, which had a very large hole in it, into which the top of the Pillar was let, and so this Chapiter sate upon it.

2. The length or height of either Pillar was eighteen cubits, besides the Chapiter, for the Text doth clearly reckon the height of Pillar and Chapiter distinctly. Now the Book of Chronicles summeth the length of both Pillars together, and saith they were five and thirty cubits high, 2 Chron. III. 15. in which it cometh short a cubit of that account and summ that is given in the Book of Kings and Jeremiah, which say, That either Pillar was eighteen cubits, and so the whole of both was six and thirty: But half a cubit of either Pillar was taken up, and hid in the hole of the Chapiter that sate upon it: and so that Text in the Book of Chronicles, measures them as they stood with the Chapiters upon them; two and twenty cubits and an half high, Pillar and Chapiter and all.

3. The Chapiter or oval on the head of either Pillar is called in Hebrew כותרת which Rabbi Solomon renders in the vulgar פומילס Pumels, Kimchi, A Crown, with which the Chaldee agrees, who expresseth it by קרונתא Corona; but Levi Gershom more exactly, saith, it was like two Crowns joined together. It was a huge great oval of five cubits high, and did not only sit upon the head of the Pillars, but also flowred or spread them, being larger about a great deal than the Pillars themselves.

4. Whereas it is said both in 1 King. VII. 16. & Jer. LII. 22. that the height of either Chapiter was five cubits, and yet in 2 King. XXV. 17. it is said, that the height of the Chapiter was three cubits; it is generally and well answered by the Jews, that the lowest two cubits of the Chapiter were plain, and without any graving or imbroidering, but the three upper cubits were of such imbroidery. To which may be added, and some of them do add it, that the two lower cubits were but the rising into the spreading or belly of the Chapiter, and that they there are not reckoned in that place, but only from the belly upward the account is taken.

5. The ingravery or imbroidery, or both of these Chapiters is thus described by the Holy Ghost in various particulars; As.

1. שבכים מעשה שבכה 1 King. VII. 17. which our English renders, Nets of Checker-work: And so the Seventy useth the word Nets also: The original word doth properly signifie the inwrapping and infolding of the branches of Trees one within another, as Neh. I. 10. Gen. XXII. 13. Jer. IV. 7. Esai. X. 34. As Vines or Thickets, (saith b Kimchi explaining the word) that are caught and infolded one within another: And so some others expres this clause כמין לולבין שרי רקל That the imbroidery was like the branches of Palm Trees: or like the handful of branches they used to carry in their hands at the Feast of Tabernacles: This I conceive to be the proper meaning of the words, that the Chapiters were curiously wrought with branch-work, seven goodly branches standing up with their feet from the belly of the oval, and their boughs and leaves curiously and lovelily intermingled and inwoven one with another. And the words might not improperly be translated thus, for the clearer understanding of their meaning, and of the manner of the work it self. With thickets of branch-work, and wreaths of chain-work.

2. גדילים

2. גדילים מעשה שרשרות, Wreathes of Chain-work. The word גדילים in Deut. XXII. 12. ſignifies the fringes that they wore upon their Garments for memorials of the Law, כרספדין (κρασπεδον) in the Chaldee Paraphraſt: And according to ſuch a ſenſe is it to be taken here, that about the belly of the Chapiter was a curious Fring or border of wreathen and intwined work, upon which border ſtood the feet or root of the branch-work ſpoken of before; and thoſe branches from thence went upward ſpreading upon the ſwelling of the Chapiter, and bowing toward the top of the oval as the oval bowed, and they there growing into their contracted tops.

3. שני טורים סביב Two rows of Pomgranates, were wrought artificially below the boughs of theſe branches, as if they had been the Apples that thoſe branches bare, but only that they were not ſcattered diſperſedly among the branches, as Apples uſe to be in their Trees, but were ranked into two ſeveral rows or borders ſeverally below them.

But here we had need to look upon the Text with much ſeriouſneſs, for in two things about this very thing it ſpeaks obſcurely and with much difficulty: For firſt in ſpeaking of theſe rows it ſaith, That the Chapiters were above or upon the Pomgranates, 1 King. VII. 18. Now it is ſo harſh to hear of the Chapiters being upon the Pomgranates, whereas it is moſt undoubted that the Pomgranates were upon the Chapiters, that ſome Copies, as David Kimchi tells us, have been ſo bold as to change the word, and inſtead of על ראש הרמונים upon the head of the Pomgranates, to read העמודים upon the head of the Pillars; but as he well obſerves, the Maſoreth by putting a ליתא כותיה upon it, or a note that it is not read ſo any where elſe, doth conclude that it is and muſt be read ſo here, upon the head of the Pomgranates: Now the conſtruction of this may be fetched from 2 Chron. III. 16. where it is ſaid, That he put the Pomgranates upon the chains; that is, the two rows of the Pomgranates were cloſe above the Fring or border of chain-work, which was as it were the bottom and baſis of the imbroidery; and ſo the bulk and body of the Chapiter where the imbroidery was, was above theſe rows of the Pomgranates; and though the ſtalks of the branches reſted upon the Fringe or Chain-work, yet did they not ſpread into their leaves and branches till their ſtalks had carried them above the Pomgranates: therefore the conſtruction and ſenſe of that Verſe, viz. 1 King. VII. 18. is to be taken thus, Thus he made the Pillars: And there were two rows round about by the branch-work, which branch-work was for to cover the Chapiter, even that of the Chapiter that was above the Pomgranates. Secondly, There is no ſmall ſcruple about the number of the Pomgranates, becauſe the Text doth ſum them up in ſeveral countings, for in 2 Chron. III. 16. there is mention only of an hundred. In 1 King. VII. 20. of two hundred. And in 1 King. VII. 42. of four hundred: In all which diverſity the main difficulty reſts in the count of Jeremy; for there was an hundred Pomgranates in every row, according to the reckoning of the Book of Chronicles; and ſo there were two hundred upon either Chapiter, as is the account of the Book of Kings in the former place cited, that is four, hundred upon both Chapiters, according to the ſum of the later quotation; but what to make of Jeremiah's ninety ſix is ſomewhat intricate at the firſt ſight: His words are theſe, ויהיו הרמונים תשעים וששה רוחה wherefore the laſt word is hard to tranſlate, and breeds all the ſcruple. The Chaldee and Seventy render it, The Pomgranates were ninety ſix on a ſide, and ſo doth the Italian and our Engliſh; but this is of a very hard conſtruction, ſince the rows of Pomgrenates were in circles, the Chapiter being round; and whereas there were but an hundred in a row, how could ninety ſix of them be upon one ſide? The word is more eaſie to pharaphraſe, than verbatim to tranſlate. The meaning of the clauſe is this, That whereas there was an hundred Pomgranates in every row; when the Pillars were ſet to the Wall, four of every row could not be ſeen, but ninety ſix might, the other four being hid behind the Pillar as it ſtood cloſe up to the Wall: And ſo the Pomgranates were ninety ſix only in ſight. Therefore the word רוחה may well be tranſlated in the clauſe thus, And the Pomgranates were ninety ſix on the open ſides, or toward the open air: for in this ſenſe I conceive רוח to ſtand here.

4. It is ſaid moreover, in the Text in the Book of Kings, וכותרות מעשה שושן באולם ארבע אמות 1 Kings VII. 19. And the Chapiters which were on the top of the Pillars had Lilly-work in the Porch four cubits; for ſo ſhould I rather tranſlate it, than were of Lilly-work; and that upon theſe grounds: 1. Becauſe the work of the Chapiters is ſo exactly deſcribed before to be of Branch-work and Pomgranates, and that but for three cubits or thereabout, that I cannot poſſibly imagine how they ſhould be ſaid beſides, to be of Lilly-work four cubits. 2. The Text expreſly telleth afterward, That the Lilly-work was on the top of the Pillars, verſ. 22. and not on the top or ſides of the Chapiters. 3. The word באולם In the Porch, or by the Porch, hath its ſpecial emphaſis and intention; for it is not ſaid at all, that either the Chapiters or the Pomgranate-work were in the Porch, but the thing is referred only to the Lilly-work.

The

The meaning thefore of the Verſe appeareth to be this, That at the head of the Pillar, even at the ſetting on of the Chapiter, there was a curious and a large border or circle of Lilly-work, which ſtood out four cubits under the Chapiter, and then turned down, every Lilly or long tongue of Braſs, with a neat bending, and ſo ſeemed as a flowred Crown to the head of the Pillar, and as a curious Garland whereon the Chapiter had its ſeat: And that particular expreſſion, that it was in or by the Porch, intendeth to ſhew that theſe long tongues of Braſs which were made like Lillies, did not ſuddenly decline, and lie down upon the ſides of the Pillars, nor ſuddenly aſcend and ſtick upon the ſides of the Chapiter, but ſtood out into and along the Porch a four cubit circle, after the manner of a ſpread Lilly, and then the tongue bended downward, as the Lilly doth.

And this conſtruction of that Verſe, helpeth to clear and explain the next Verſe that follows after it, which otherwiſe would coſt ſome pains to tranſlate it out of the original, or to make facil ſenſe of it being tranſlated: In conſonancy and contexture to the Verſe before, ſo underſtood as hath been held out, this Verſe may be intrepreted and paraphraſed thus: And the Chapiters upon the two pillars were alſo above this Lilly-work, for they ſate upon the growing out of it, even from over againſt the belly, which was by the Branch-work; for the Lilly-work wrought out, as far as the belly of the Chapiters wrought out, with an accurate bowing or ſwelling upwards towards the belly, where the ſtalks of the branch-work, and the rows of the Pomgranates were; even as a Lilly gently ſwelleth up, before the tongue or utmoſt point of it turneth down again.

5. The place where theſe Pillars ſtood is ſomewhat uncertain; the Text indeed ſaith, they ſtood before the Houſe, 2 Chron, III. 15. and before the Temple, verſ. 17. but yet it is to ſeek, whether within the Porch at the entring in, or without the Porch, or within the Porch at the Temple door, which laſt is the opinion of Rabbi Sol. upon the Text cited. Upon theſe four reaſons I am induced to conceive that they ſtood within the Porch, even at the very entring into it, joyning or ſtanding up to the very cheeks of the Gate or entrance. 1. Becauſe Ezekiel hath ſo placed his two Pillars in the Porch of his Temple, namely, at the top of the ſteps, by the poſts or cheeks of the entrance it ſelf; Ezek. XL. 49. 2. Becauſe, as we obſerved before, it is ſaid, that the Lilly-work under the Chapiters was four cubits in the Porch. 3. Becauſe the Book of Kings ſaith That Solomon ſet up the Pillars, לאולם for the Porch, as the word properly ſignifies, though David Kimchi, and our Engliſh tranſlate it In: The expreſſion ſeemeth to intimate theſe two things, Firſt, That the Pillars were ſet up for the Porch door, and not for the Temple door, as was the opinion of Solomon Jarchi cited before: And, Secondly, That they ſtood for the Porch, or very entrance into the building, as door-cheeks or poſts at that entrance κατὰ τὸ αἰσπυλαῖος σίδηρος, At the door cheeks of the Porch, as ſaith Joſephus. 4. That obſcure paſſage of Ezekiel, Chap. XL. 48. The bredth of the Gate was three cubits on this ſide, and three cubits on that ſide, cannot be ſo underſtood, as if the entry or paſſage into the Porch were but ſix cubits broad (and why alſo ſhould he ſpeak of this ſide, and that ſide, if he meant but one intire bredth?) but it is well underſtood by Kimchi to mean, that on either ſide of the entry there was ſomething ſtanding out into the bredth of the entry, three cubits, which made the paſſage it ſelf but fourteen cubits broad: which meaſure of three cubits, though it fell ſhort one cubit of the thickneſs of theſe Pillars caſt by Solomon, yet ſuiting with the meaſure of Ezekiel's Pillars, it may do this for us, as to ſhew us how theſe Pillars that we have in hand were placed, by the diſpoſing and placing of thoſe of his, namely, on your right hand, and on your left, as ſoon as ever you were ſtepped within the Porch.

Joſ. Antiqu. lib. 8. cap. 2.

The names of the two Pillars (to omit the fancies of ſome Jews about them) were Jachin and Boaz, 1 King. VII. 21. which words denote Eſtabliſhment and Strength, Jachin ſignifieth he will eſtabliſh: from Gods promiſe to eſtabliſh the Throne of David, and his people Iſrael: And Boaz denoteth Herein is ſtrength.; namely, alluding either to Gods promiſe, in which was all their ſtrength and ſettlement: or to the Ark which was within, which is called, The ſtrength of the Lord, Pſal. LXXX. 2. and CV. 4.

SECT. III.

The Closets for the Butchering Instruments. בית החלפות

YET before we enter into the Porch, and so into the Temple, there is one thing more calls for our observation, and that is, certain Closets or places that were in this pile of the Porch, in which were laid up the Knives and instruments that were used by the Priests, about the killing, and slaying, and cutting up the Beasts to be Sacrificed. The Treatise Middoth giveth intelligence and account of these places in these words, האולם עודף עליו טו" אמה מן הצפון וטו" אמה מן הדרום והוא היה נקרא בית החלפות ששם גנזום את הסכנים a The Porch was broader than the Temple, fifteen cubits on the North, and fifteen cubits on the South and that that exceeded was called Beth hachillapoth, where they laid up the knives. a Mid. ptr. 4. Sect. 7.

The word מחלפים doth signifie the butchering Knives of the Temple, Ezr. I. 9: from חלף saith b Aben Ezra, as it betokeneth cutting off, which it doth, Esai. II. 18. Prov. XXXI. 8. And c so saith Kimchi on the same place מחלפים are Knives: And of this sense is Beth hachillapoth, for because they laid up the Knives there; therefore the place was called, The Chamber of the laying up of the Knives לשכת בית החי לפות b Vid. Ab. Ezr. in Ezr. I. c Kimch. ibid.

There was therefore on either end of the extent of the Porch for that space that it stood out further than the buildings of the Temple, a Chamber, one at the end towards the North, and another at the end towards the South, in which two large Chambers were four and twenty little Closets; wherein the Knives were laid up severally for the four and twenty courses of the Priests: And these and such like little Closets the Jews call חלונות Fenestræ, or Windows; because they were Closets or Boxes joyning to the Wall. And besides these that we are speaking of where the Butchery Instruments were laid up, Maymony reckons fourscore and sixteen more, for the laying up of other things, four for every one of the four and twenty Courses. d There were (saith he) ninety six Closets חלונות in the Temple, wherein to lay up the Vestments, four Closets for every Course. And the name of every Course was written upon their Closets, and they were all shut: And when the men of any Course came into the service upon the Sabbath, they opened their Closets, and took out the Utensils: and when they went out of the service they restored their Vestments to their Closets again, and shut them up. And why made they four Closets for every Course? Namely, that the Utensils might not be jumbled together, but all the Breeches were in one Closet, and upon it was written, Breeches; Girdles in another Closet, and upon it written, Girdles; All the Bonets in another Closet, and all the Coats in another. d Maym. in Kele Migd. ptr. I.

Now he neither telleth where these Closets were; nor speaketh he among them all, of these for the Knives, that are before us: and the reason of this later, is easily given, because in the place where he hath the words that are produced, he is only speaking of the installing and arraying of the Priests: But where to find these ninety six Closets he hath left us at uncertainty. Were they in the rest of the building of this Porch? It is not like they were, because the Priests usually came ready with their Vestments on, into the Court, and especially so high as the Porch, and came not thither for their Vestments to put them on: there was room enough in the other buildings about the Courts to lodge all these Closets in; but where to point them out we must suspend.

But what became of the other Rooms of the Porch, besides the entrance; and these two at either end of the building; for there were five and twenty cubits betwen the entrance and these Chambers on either side upon the ground, and there were divers Chambers and several Stories over head, the building being so very long, and so very high? There is not expres intimation to be had, either in Scripture, or in the Jews Antiquities, as far as I can find, how these several parts were disposed of, and therefore we can assert nothing, but leave it to censure.

A renowned monument the Jews speak of, e namely, Crowns that were laid up בחלונות In Closets, for a memorial: as it is said in the Prophet Zachary (for they take that literally) Zach. VI. 14. And the Crowns shall be to Helem, and to Tobiah, and to Jedaiah, and to Hen the Son of Zephaniah, for a memorial in the Temple of the Lord. And they say, that the young Men or Candidates of the Priesthood did use to climb up Golden Chains which were fixed to the roof of the entry of the Porch, that they might look up into the Closets to see these Crowns. e Mid. ptr. 3. Sect. 8 Kimch. & Jarch. in Zech. VI.

SECT. IV.

A Golden Vine in the Porch, and a Golden Candlestick: and a Marble and a Golden Table.

AND now let us go in at the entrance of the Porch. And there Josephus his prospective doth represent it to us in these colours, a Θύρας οὐκ εἶχε, τὸ γὰρ ἀφανὲς τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἐδήλου· κεχρύσωτο δὲ πᾶν τὸ μέτωπον πᾶν καὶ δι' αὐτῆς, ὅ τε πρόσθοι οἶκος ἔσωθεν ἅπας κατεφαίνετο, μέγιστος ὢν, καὶ τὰ περὶ τὴν ἔσω πύλην πάντα λαμπόμενα χρυσῷ, &c. That it had no doors, because it did represent the open Heaven, and all the front of the Gate was gilt with Gold; and through the Gate you might see all the Porch within, which was large (for it was twenty cubits long, and eleven over) and all about the inner door shining with gold.

a Jos. de Bell. lib. 5. cap. 14.

Over this inner door (which meaneth the door of the Temple) there was a great golden Vine, of so vast a bigness that (as b the same Josephus relateth) it had βότρυας ἀνδρομήκεις, bunches of Grapes as big as the proportion of a Man. And like a true natural Vine, it grew greater and greater, till it came up to so great a bigness by time and degrees, for מי שהוא מתנדב עלה או גרגיר או אשכול מניא ותולה בהו Men would be offering, some Gold to make a leaf, some a Grape, some a bunch, and these were hung up upon it, and so it was increasing continually.

b Id. ibid.

Over the Temple door also there was a golden Candlestick, which was given thither by Helena the Queen of Adiabeni, a Woman of famous renown, and of great benefactorship, towards the Jews; of whom, and of whose Sons Izates and Monobazes, Josephus hath a large Story, Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 2. whither I referr the Reader. Of this Candlestick of her bestowing, there is mention in the Talmudick Treatise Joma, in this passage. c Ben Kattin made the twelve Cocks for the Laver, whereas before it had but two; he also made the Engine for the Laver, (of which hereafter) that the water of it might not be unclean, by staying in it all night. Munbaz (Monobazes) the King made all the handles of the Vessels which were for the service of the day of Expiation, of Gold. Helena his Mother made the Golden Candlestick over the Temple door: she also made the Golden Table whereon was written the Section about the suspected Wife, &c.

c Joma, per. 3.

d In the Porch on either side of the Temple door there was a Table. On the right side, a Table of Marble, and on it they set down the Shew-bread as they carried it new into the Temple: And on the left side was a Table of Gold on which they set the old Bread down for a while, when they fetched it out: And the reason why they began on the Marble Table, and ended on the Golden was שמעלין בקודש ולא מורידין Because they rose higher and higher with holy things, and went not lower and lower.

CHAP. XIV.

The Holy place.

SECT. I.

The Temple door.

THE entrance out of the Porch into the Temple was through two Gates, and either Gate had two doors or folding leaves: for the better understanding of which, let us first look upon the dimensions of this passage as we have done upon the others.

The Talmud and Josephus do seem at the first sight exceedingly to differ, about the measure of this Gate: the a Talmud reckoning it but twenty cubits high, and ten broad; and b he five and fifty cubits high and sixteen broad. In which diversity, if we take the proper meaning of either party, the difference between them will not be so vast, as at the first skanning it doth seem to be. It is the manner of the Talmud in measuring of the Gates to speak only of the open space through which the passage was, but Josephus, as hath been observed before, measures ἀμφοτέρας τὰς ὑπερθύρους the whole front of the Gate both above the open space and the spreading of the posts on either side it: and after this their usual manner they both of them measure this Gate through which we are going: The very open space that gave the passage was but twenty cubits high and ten broad; and of this measure were the two doors: but the front of the

b Joseph. de Bell. Lc. c. 14.

the Gate was three cubits (curiously wrought and richly gilt) on either side, and thirty five cubits above the Gate to the roof or first floor of the entry of the Porch: and this is the meaning of Josephus, as it appeareth plainly enough by these his two passages. For as to the first he saith, ὑδὲ διὰ τὸ ὅλας πύλας κεχρύσωτο μὴν πᾶσα, ἣ ὅλως δὲ αὐτὸς τεῖχος, That the Gate of the House (meaning this that we are about) was gilt all over, and so was the Wall all about it: And as to the second, he hath this saying, somewhat difficult, but well understood resolving the matter according as hath been spoken. Ὁμοῦ δὲ ἦδη τοῦ ναοῦ διῳκοδομημένος ὑπερῷον ἦν καὶ ἔξωθεν ἦν ἡ θύρας ἔχει χρυσᾶς πεντηκοντάπηχες πηχέων τὸ ὕψος, εὖρος δὲ ὀκταπήχεις· But the Temple having two floors, or being double roofed, that within was lower than that without, and had gilded doors of fifty five cubits high, and sixteen broad.

Now by what he saith that the Temple was διῳκοδομημένος, or double floored or roofed, his meaning is, that as you stood in the Temple there was a first floor over your head, and a room above that, which was called עלייה of which we have spoken before, and above that there was the roof; Had all the House been open to the very roof, as our Churches are, there could have been no difference between the height of the Holy and most Holy place to the roof, but both had been alike.

But both places being floored over, and having an upper Chamber above them, there was a difference made in the height of this first floor: for in the Holy place it was five and fifty cubits from the ground, but in the Most Holy place it was but twenty, as shall be shewed. Now the Porch had its floor lay at the least as high if not higher than the floor of the Holy place: and so the space above the Gate to the first floor was a goodly space, and made a fair front: It seemeth by our Author that the first floor of the Porch was ninety cubits high, yet doth he reckon the height of the Gate but five and fifty, because he reckons only to the height of the floor of the Holy place, and the height of the front of the Gate of the Oracle, for he speaketh of them both alike.

Thus much being observed concerning the height and bredth of this Gate; it is also to be remembred that the Wall of the Temple was six cubits thick, as was observed when we measured the breadth of the building. c The two Leaves of the Gate therefore which were five cubits broad apiece, were hung up a little within the thickness of the Wall from the Porch, so that when they were opened they covered the whole thickness of the Wall on the right hand and the left, that as you passed through you could not see it. c Mid. ubi sup. Ezek. IV. 14.

Now at the very farthest of the thickness of the Wall towards the Holy place, there was a two-leaved Door likewise paralleled to this that we have surveyed, which when the Leaves opened, they fell back to the Wall which was at the lower end of the House, and covered a place which was ungilded: for all the Walls were gilded but only the places where the Leaves of the Doors fell back.

And thus had you two several Doors of two folding Leaves apiece to go through between the Porch and the Temple, the one standing within a cubit of the Porch, and the other at the very edge of the Wall within, and so when they were both shut there was a five-cubit space between them, which was so much space in the thickness of the Temple Wall.

The outer Door is called commonly by the Jews, the great Door of the Temple, not but that the inner Door was as big, but because of the great front that this Gate had, which the other had not: And of this outer Door there are these memorials or remarkable things recorded among them. First, That the Morning Sacrifice was never killed till this Door was opened: And so it is recorded in the Treatise Tamid, or concerning the dayly Sacrifice d לא היה השוחט שוחט עד ששמע קול שער הגדול שנפתח That he that was to slay the Sacrifice, killed him not till he heard the noise of the great Gate opening. d Tamid. per. 3. Maym. in Tamid. per. 6.

And there they relate the noise of this Gate might be heard to Jericho, and so the noise of divers other things there mentioned, in which they do Hyperbolize for the glorifying of the matters of the Temple. And a second thing for which this door is renowned among them is, For that it had two Wickets in it, in either leaf one, one in the North leaf, and another in the South: And that through that in the South no Man passed, but that that was it of which Ezekiel saith, e This Gate shall be shut, it shall not be opened, and no Man shall enter in by it, &c. e Ezek. XLIV. 2.

Now for the opening of these Doors every morning, the way was thus: One took a Key and opened the Wicket in the North leaf of the Door, and went in, into the five cubit space between the two Doors: and there he went in at a Door into the very Wall where there was a hollow passage into the Holy place, coming forth in the place where one of the Leaves of the inner Door fell to the Wall.

Being

Being come in, he opened that inner Door, and then he came and opened the outer Door, at the noiſe of the opening of which the killer of the Morning Sacrifice went about that work: f In this five cubits ſpace between the two Doors even behind the leaf of the Door on the right hand, there was a Marble Flag of a cubit ſquare lay looſe in the floor with a ring faſtned in it to pull it up, and when the Prieſts tryed and ſuſpected Wife, they came hither and pulled up this ſtone, and took duſt from under it, to put into the water to make her drink, as was injoined, Numb. V. 17, &c.

f Sotah per. 2.

SECT. II

The Veil.

BEtween theſe two Doors alſo in this five cubit ſpace, there hung a Veil anſwerable to the Veil at the Door of the Tabernacle, Exod. XXVI. 36. And ſo it is teſtified by Joſephus, a who ſpeaks of two Veils, one at the entring into the Holy place, and another to diſtinguiſh betwixt the Holy and Moſt Holy. And he deſcribes the Veil to have been of the meaſures that he had newly ſpoken of before, namely five and fifty cubits deep and ſixteen cubits broad (yet the Gate where it hung was but ten) and that it was πέπλος Βαβυλώνιος, (אורגת שנער Joſh. VII. 21.) Babylonian Tapiſtry-work, of blue, purple, ſcarlet, and fine twined Linnen, which he reſembles to the four Elements.

a Joſeph. de Bell. l. 5. c. 14.

Other Jews likewiſe give us intimation of ſuch a Veil hanging at the entrance into the Holy place. For the Talmudick Treatiſe b Tamid, mentioned but a little before, ſpeaking of the High Prieſt going into the Holy place to worſhip, ſaith, there were three that held him, one by his right hand and another by his left hand, and a third by the precious Stones in the Breſt-plate. And when the preſident heareth the ſound of the High Prieſts feet coming out, he liſteth up the Veil for him: and then himſelf goeth in and worſhippeth, and after him his Brethren the Prieſts go in and worſhip.

b Tamid. per. 7.

c There were thirteen Veils in all about the Temple: namely, ſeven for the ſeven Gates of the Court: one at the Gate of the Porch, one at the Gate of the Temple, and two betwixt the Holy and the Moſt Holy place, and two juſt over them in the room above: d And there was an Overſeer of the Veils, that took care for the ſupply and the right ordering of them: and if they were defiled by any common uncleanneſs, they were taken down and waſhed and hung up in the חול Chel to dry: And when new Veils were made, they were hung up on the Gallery in the Court of the Women, that they might be viewed by all the people to ſee that they were right.

SECT. III.

The Holy place it ſelf.

THIS place was forty cubits long and twenty broad: and in Solomons Temple it was thirty cubits high, having no floor at all on this ſide the roof, b but in Herods Temple it was ſixty: For the the Children of the captivity building their Temple ſixty cubits high, they floored it not over, but left it open to the roof in the Holy place as Solomons Temple had been, and according to the ſame height was the floor laid, when it was floored over in the time of Herod.

a 1 King. VI. 2, 17
b Joſeph. ubi ſupr.

And here two things are to be remembred; 1. That whereas the lower leads of the building which were over the ſide Chambers, were but fifty cubits high, as hath been deſcribed, and there was a paſſage off thoſe leads into the upper Chamber over the Holy place, and it was by ſteps of ten cubits high, partly without the Wall, and partly within the thickneſs of the Wall it ſelf. 2. That there was an inequality of the height of the floors in the three parts of the Houſe, the Porch, the Holy place and the Moſt Holy. The firſt floor of the Porch was ninety cubits high, the Holy place ſixty, and the moſt Holy but twenty. And therefore whereas there was a floor over the moſt Holy place, even with the floor over the Holy place, viz. at ſixty cubits height, that was not the firſt floor over it, but there was another floor forty cubits beneath that.

The beauty and richneſs of this place was exceeding great: The floor of it upon which they trod was planked with Firr boards, and they gilt with gold; and the Walls were alſo cieled or wainſcoted with Cedar, and that gilt likewiſe: This gilding was from the ground floor, even to the floor over head, all the ſixty cubits high up the Walls; and this is meant when the Text ſaith, עד קירות חספן He built the Walls of the Houſe within with boards of Cedar from the floor of the Houſe to the Walls of the covering: that is, up to the very Walls of the floor over head, as it is well expounded by the Rabbins upon that place.

For

For fifty cubits height of the Walls was the imbroidery of Branches and open Flowers, &c. and for the ten cubits above, it was the place of the Windows: for the ſide Chambers without the Houſe, in three ſtories, did take up the height of fifty cubits high, ſo that for ſo high no Windows could be made into the Houſe, but the ſpace of ten cubits above, was the place for the Windows which were made narrow without and broad within.

The deckage or carving of the Wainſcot of the Walls is ſaid to be מקלעת פקעים ופטורי צצים The carving of knops and open flowers, as our Engliſh renders it: but the Hebrew Doctors are ſomewhat nice about the conſtruction of theſe words. The Chaldee expounds it, the ingraving of the likeneſs of Eggs (Ovals) and wreaths of Lillies: as if he meant that he wrought the Walls with the work of Lilly garlands, and an Oval in the midſt of a garland: c Levi Gerſhom underſtands פקעים Ovals, as the Chaldee doth, but he takes them to be ſuch Ovals as are the buds of Flowers, and that out of them came פטורי צצים the flowers ſpreading and opening as in their maturity. d David Kimchi takes פקעים for wild Gourds, and ſo our Engliſh hath it alſo in the Margin; and this I take to be the proper conſtruction of the words, and this the imbroidery of the Walls: That there was the carving of Cherubims and Palm-trees, and the carving of Gourds and open Flowers interchanged thus: firſt a border of Gourds or Pompions or ſuch like Apple-faſhioned ſculpture intermixed with Marigolds, Gilliflowers, and ſuch opening flowers, and this border or wreath went round about the Houſe: upon this wreath as upon a baſe, were ſet the feet of Cherubims, and the rooting of Palm-trees both which ſtood up from this wreath e a Cherub and a Palm-tree, a Cherub and a Palm-tree round about: above the Heads of the Cherubims and Palm-trees was ſuch another wreath, and Cherubims and Palm-trees ſet upon that again, and ſo interchangeably to the top. By all which was ſignified the attendance of Miniſters, Heb. I. 14. and flouriſhing condition, Pſal. XCII. 12, 13. of thoſe that ſerve the Lord and wait upon him. Every one of the Cherubims was pictured with two faces, one of a man that looked toward the Palm-tree on one hand, and the other of a Lion that looked toward the Palm-tree on the other.

e 1 King. VI. 29 Ezek. XLI. 18, 19.

Whereas it is ſaid that twenty cubits were built on the ſides of the Houſe with boards of Cedar from the floor to the Walls, 1 Kings VII. 16. the Jews do expound theſe twenty cubits by way of breadth and not of height, as thinking that they mean, that beſides the ſides of the Houſe on either Hand, which were forty cubits long, he alſo made the like work upon either end of the room, which was twenty cubits broad: But the Text doth ſpeak it more peculiarly of the moſt Holy place, and ſheweth what was the height of that, which was different from the outer room or Holy place, as we ſhall ſee hereafter.

SECT. IV.

The Candleſtick.

THERE were three remarkable and renowned things in the room of the Holy place, which next come to our obſerving, and thoſe were the Candleſtick, the Table of Shew-bread, and the Altar of Incenſe: The firſt of Gold, and the other two gilded, ſo that here in this room could nothing be ſeen but Gold. a Joſephus ſets out theſe three things with this Encomium. Εἶχεν ἐν αὐτῷ τρία θαυμασιώτατα καὶ περιβόητα πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις ἔργα, λυχνίαν, τράπεζαν, θυμιατήριον· That they were three moſt wondrous workmanſhips, and to be renowned amongſt all men: And that the ſeven Lamps in the Candleſtick reſembled the ſeven Planets: And the twelve Loaves upon the Shew-bread Table, the twelve Signs in the Zodiack or the Year: And the Incenſe Altar, whereon Incenſe was offered, which came partly out of the Sea, and partly from Land, denoted that all things are of God and to him.

a Joſeph. ubi ſup.

b The Candleſtick was eighteen hand breadth high, which according to the cubit of ſix hand breadth, was a yard and an half: It had three feet, which almoſt lay flat upon the ground: As three hand breadth height, there was a flowring of a Coronet work curiouſly ſpreading out, then went the ſhaft up, two hand breadth high; and there was a diſh, a boſs, and a flowring above the boſs, and all in a hand breadth compaſs: thence the ſhaft went up again, plain for two hand breadths, and then was there a boſs of a hand breadth, and there went out two branches, which were carried out, bowed on either ſide, till they were to be brought up ſtraight to an equal height to the top of this middle ſhaft out of which they proceeded. Then was there an hand breadth of the ſhaft plain, and a boſs of an hand breadth, and then came out two branches more on either ſide: And again, one hand breadth of the ſhaft plain, and a boſs again of an hand breadth, and then came out two branches more: Above them was two hand breadth of the ſhaft plain: And for the three hand breadths above, there were three cups, and three boſſes, and three flowrings in that ſpace, and ſo the Lamp ſtood in a flowring.

b Maym. in beth habbech. par. 3.

In every branch that came out of this middle ſhaft, there were three Cups at a handſom diſtance one from another, and above the higheſt a boſs, and above that a flowring, and in that flowring the Lamp ſtood: And before the Candleſtick there was a Stone with three ſteps cut in it, on which he that mended the Lamps ſtood, and on which he ſet down his diſhes whilſt he was about that work.

This Candleſtick of ſeven branches (to which alluſion is made, Apoc. I. Zechar. IV. 2. Apoc. XI. 4.) was ſet on the South-ſide of the Houſe, but ſo as that the arms or branches of it ſpread North and South: All the Lamps or Lights that were ſet in the ſix branches that came out of the ſhaft, were turned bending, and looking towards the Lamp which was in the middle in the ſhaft it ſelf, and the Lamp in that, was turned bending towards the moſt Holy place, and therefore it was called נר מערבי The Weſtern Lamps: Theſe ſeven Lamps (which denoted the ſeven Spirits of God, Rev. IV. 5. & V. 6. which the Jews call, the Seven Spirits of Meſſias from Eſay XI. 1, 2, 3.) did burn continually, or if any of them were gone out, every Morning and Evening they were lighted again, and their perpetual Light reſembled the Word and Doctrine of Salvation, the Light of the Lord, in which we ſee Light.

Theſe Lamps were called the Candle of the Lord, 1 Sam. III. 3. where it is ſaid, before the Candle of the Lord went out, the Lord called to Samuel, &c. upon which words, Da- vid Kimchi giveth this Gloſs, c If this be ſpoken concerning the Lamps in the Candleſtick, this was ſomewhat before day: for the Lamps burnt from Even till Morning; yet did they ſometimes ſome of them go out in the Night. They put Oil into them by ſuch a meaſure as ſhould keep them burning from Even till Morning, and many times they did burn till Morning; and they always found the Weſtern Lamp burning. Now it is ſaid, that this Propheſie came to Samuel, before the Lamps went out, while it was yet Night, about the time of Cocks crowing, for it is ſaid afterward, that Samuel lay till Morning: Or allegorically it ſpeaks of the Candle of Propheſie; as they ſay the Sun ariſeth, and the Sun ſets: Before the holy bleſſed God cauſe the Sun of one righteous Man to ſet, he cauſeth the Sun of another righteous Man to riſe. Before Moſes his Sun ſet, Joſhua's Sun aroſe; before Elie's Sun ſet, Samuel's Sun aroſe: And this is that which is ſaid, Before the Candle of God went out.

The Lord needed no light of Candles (no more than he needed Bread which was ſet upon the Shew-bread Table) nor the Prieſts needed no Candles in this room neither, for the Windows though they were high, yet did they give light into the Room abundantly, but God by theſe Candles did as it were enlighten the People to teach them Spiritual things by theſe Corporal, and to acquaint them with the neceſſity of the light of his Word, and the Bread of Salvation which came down from Heaven. And therefore when Solomon did make d ten Candleſticks, and ten Tables, and ſet them intermixedly by five and five on either ſide the Houſe, he added nothing to God, but he added only more ſplendor to the ſervice, and more luſtre to the Doctrine of the neceſſity of the light of the Word, and of the Bread of Life, e Our wiſe Men ſay (ſaith Baal Hatturim) that the Weſtern Lamp (which never went out) was a teſtimony that the Divine glory dwelt amongſt Iſrael.

The Shew-bread Table.

ON the North-ſide of the Houſe which was on the right Hand, ſtood the Shew-bread Table of two cubits long, and a cubit and a half broad, a in the Tabernacle of Moſes, b but wanting that half cubit in breadth in the ſecond Temple (the reaſon of the falling ſhort not given by them that give the relation.) It ſtood length ways in its place, that is Eaſt and Weſt, and had a Crown of Gold round about it, toward the upmoſt edge of it, which c the Jews reſemble to the Crown of the Kingdom.

e Out of four and twenty סאה Sata (three of which went to an Ephah) that is, out of eight buſhel of Wheat being ground, they ſifted out f four and twenty tenth Deals g or Omers of the pureſt Flower; and that they made into twelve Cakes, two Omers in a Cake; or the fifth part of an Ephah of Corn in every Cake: They made the Cakes ſquare, namely ten Hand breadth long, and five broad, and ſeven Fingers thick: They were made and baked in a room that was in the great building Beth mokadh, on the North-ſide of the Court, as we ſhall ſhew anon, and they were baked on the day before the Sabbath.

e Maym. in Tamid. cap. 5.
f Lev. XXIV. 5.
g Exod. XVI. 36

On the Sabbath they ſet them on the Table in this manner: Four Prieſts went firſt in, to fetch away the Loaves that had ſtood all the week, and other four went in after them to bring in new ones in their ſtead; Two of the four laſt, carried the two rows of the Cakes, namely ſix a piece: and the other two carried either of them a golden diſh,

in

in which the Frankincenſe was to be put to be ſet upon the Loaves, and ſo thoſe four that went to fetch out the old Bread, two of them were to carry the cakes, and the other two the diſhes: theſe four that came to fetch the old Bread out, ſtood before the Table with their Faces towards the North, and the other four that brought in the new ſtood betwixt the Table and the Wall, with their Faces toward the South; thoſe drew off the old cakes, and theſe as the other went off ſlipt on the new, ſo that the Table was never without Bread upon it, becauſe it is ſaid, that they ſhould ſtand before the Lord continually.

They ſet the cakes in two rows, ſix and ſix, one upon another, and they ſet them, the length of the cakes croſs over the breadth of the Table (by which it appears that the Crown of Gold about the Table, roſe not above the ſurface of it, but was a border below edging even with the plain of it, h (as is well held by Rabbi Solomon) and ſo the cakes lay two hand breadths over the Table on either ſide; for the Table was but ſix hand breadth broad, and the cakes were ten hand breadth long: Now as for the preventing that, that which ſo lay over ſhould not break off, if they had no other way to prevent it (which yet they had, but I confeſs that the deſcription of it in their Authors I do not underſtand, yet their manner of laying the cakes one upon another, was ſuch, as that the weight reſted upon the Table, and not upon the points that hung over.

b R. Sol. in Exod. XXV.

The loweſt cake of either row they laid upon the plain Table: and upon that cake they laid three golden Canes at diſtance one from another, and upon thoſe they laid the next cake; and then three golden Canes again, and upon them another cake, and ſo of the reſt; ſave only that they laid but two ſuch Canes upon the fifth cake, becauſe there was but one cake more to be laid upon. Now theſe which I call golden Canes (and the Hebrews call them ſo alſo) were not like Reeds or Canes, perfectly round and hallow thorow, but they were like Canes or Kexes ſlit up the middle, and the reaſon of laying them thus betwixt cake and cake, was, that by their hollowneſs Air might come to every cake, and all might thereby be kept the better from moldineſs and corrupting; and thus did the cake lie hollow, and one not touching another, and all the golden Canes being laid ſo, as that they lay within the compaſs of the breadth of the Table, the ends of the cakes that lay over the Table on either ſide, bare no burden but their own weight.

On the top of either row was ſet a golden diſh with a handful of Frankincenſe, which when the Bread was taken away, was burnt as Incenſe to the Lord, Lev. XXIV. 7. and the bread went to Aaron and his ſons, or to the Prieſts as their portions to be eaten.

What theſe Loaves did repreſent and ſignifie, is variouſly gueſſed: the number of twelve in two rows ſeem to refer to the Twelve Tribes, whoſe names were ſo divided into ſix, and ſix in the two Stones on the High Prieſts ſhoulders: And as Bread is the chief ſubſiſtence and ſtaff of our mortal life, ſo the offering of theſe might denote an acknowledgment of the people, of their receiving of all their ſubſiſtence from the Lord, to whom they preſented theſe as their Tribute: and theſe aſwell as the Lamps ſtanding before the Lord, might ſhew, that their Spiritual and Temporal ſupport were both before him. But our purſuit is to look after the things themſelves, leaving the allegorizing of them unto others: for in ſuch things men are moſt commonly more ready to give ſatisfaction to themſelves, than to take it from others, for as much as the things themſelves may be bended and ſwayed to various application.

SECT. VI.

The Altar of Incenſe.

THE Candleſtick ſtood on the one ſide of the Houſe, and the Table on the other, and this Altar in the middle: not juſt betwixt them, but ſomewhat higher in the Houſe toward the moſt Holy place than they were: Theſe three Ornaments and furnitures of the Holy place, היו מונחין משליש ההיכל were ſet in a third part of the Houſe; that is, whereas the Houſe (meaning the Holy place) was forty cubits long, when you had gone up ſix and twenty cubits, and two third parts of a cubit into the room, there ſtood the Table and Candleſtick, and ſomewhat further higher towards the Veil ſtood this Altar.

a Maym. in Beth habbech. par. 3.

b It was a cubit ſquare, and two cubits high, had four Horns at the four corners of it, and a Crown about the brim or edge of it, which the Jews ſay denoted the Crown of the Prieſt-hood: It ſtood not ſo nigh the Veil of the moſt Holy place, but that one might go about it; and ſo how the Prieſt did on the day of Expiation, and beſprinkled the Horns of it with Blood, we obſerve elſewhere.

b Exod. XXX. 1, 2. Maym. ubi ſup.

On this Altar (commonly called the golden Altar) Incenſe was offered Morning and Evening every day: a Figure, if you apply the action to Chriſt, of his Mediation; and if to man, a reſemblance of the duty of Prayer. The twelve cakes which reſembled the ſuſtenance and ſuſtentation of the Twelve Tribes, which was ever before the Lord, were renewed only once every week, but the Lamps dreſt, and the Incenſe offered twice every day, for we have more need of the light of Gods Word, and of Prayer, than of our dayly food. And if we will apply all the three to Chriſt, The Kingly Office of Chriſt provided Bread for his People, his Prophetick Office provided the light of his Word, and his Prieſtly Office the Incenſe of Mediation.

CHAP. XV.

The moſt Holy place.

SECT. I.

The Partition ſpace. Τάραξις. טרקסין

THE Holy and the moſt Holy place were divided aſunder by a threefold partition, namely by a cubit ſpace, and by two Veils, on either ſide of that ſpace: The partition ſpace which a was a cubit broad, and no more, by the Jews is called טרקסין which b Rabbi Nathan confeſſeth to be a Greek word, and he ſaith it ſignifieth מספקא להו אי בלפנים אי בלחוץ that it was doubtful to them, within or without, as meaning, whether it were within or without; and thus it is interpreted c in the Jeruſalem Talmud: d Maymony helps us to their meaning thus, In the Temple there was a Wall which parted between the Holy and moſt Holy place, a cubit thick. But when they builded the ſecond Temple, they doubted whether the thickneſs of that Wall belonged to the meaſure of the Holy place, or to the meaſure of the moſt Holy place: Therefore they made the moſt Holy place twenty cubits long compleat: and they made the Holy place forty cubits long compleat. And they left a ſpace betwixt the Holy and moſt Holy place of a cubit breadth; and in the ſecond Temple they built not a Wall there, but they made two veils, one at the end of the moſt Holy place (Eaſtward), and the other at the end of the Holy place (Weſtward) and between them there was a cubits breadth, according to the thickneſs of the Wall that had been in the firſt Temple: But in the firſt Temple there was but one Veil.

a Mid per. 4.
b Aruch. in voce.
c Talm. Jeruſ. per. 5.
d Beth habbee. per. 4.

The word טרקסין therefore is well conceived by the Learned e Lempereur to be the Greek Τάραξις, which ſignifieth a diſeaſe in the Eye, diſtempering the ſight, and hindering it, and ſo were the Eyes of the underſtanding of the builders of the ſecond Temple at a ſtand about this place, whether it ſhould belong to the Holy or moſt Holy place, and thereupon they called the place it ſelf Τάραξιν.

e Conſt. Lemper. in Mid. p. 164.

The Wall that Solomon built for the parting of the Holy and moſt Holy place, being a cubit thick (in ſtead of which this ſpace was left) had theſe things regardable and conſiderable in it, and not eaſie to be underſtood.

Firſt, For the entring of the Oracle, he made doors of Olive-Tree, האיל מזוזת חמישית 1 King. VI. 31. Theſe later words are very difficult of conſtruction, and if we go to Gloſſaries for the explication of them, they will give us variety of ſenſes, but little facility of underſtanding. The Chaldee renders it only, Their poſts with its lintel were orderly ſet, taking the word חמישית in the ſenſe of חמושים ranked in order, and giving but very little light unto the obſcure place. David Kimchi, and Rabbi Solomon ſeem to underſtand it, that the poſts of the doors were not four ſquare but five ſquare, if we may uſe ſuch a word, or wrought into five ribs, as their own words are. But Levi Gerſhom hath a far fetch for it, for he thinks חמישית meaneth the fifth Gate that was in the Temple as you went forward; the Temple door the fourth, the Porch door the third, the door of the inner Court the ſecond, and of the outer Court the firſt.

To me the words ſeem to bear this conſtruction; The poſt which was the door cheeks was at the fifth cubit; meaning from either Wall of the Houſe, come inward five cubits, and there was the door cheek, and ſo the Houſe being twenty cubits broad, the door hereby is concluded to be ten. And this may the rather be ſo interpreted, becauſe the Text had been taking notice of the breadth of the Houſe immediately before; as when it was ſpeaking of the Cherubims Wings, it ſaith, the Wing of the one touched the one Wall, and the Wing of the other touched the other Wall; and ſpeaking of the adorning of the Houſe, it ſaith, all the Walls of the Houſe were Carved, and the Floor Gilt, and then he comes on to ſpeak of the partition betwixt the one Houſe and the other, and ſaith, That the Oracle had a two leaved door of Olive-tree, and the fifth cubit from either Wall was the poſt which ſerved for the cheeks of the door: And ſo it is ſaid in verſ. 33. He made for the door of the Temple poſts of Olive-tree, from the fourth cubit; that is, four cubits from either ſide Wall he ſet up an Olive beam for a poſt on either ſide ſide the door, of a cubit thickneſs, and ſo the door came to be ten cubits broad.

A ſecond thing of difficulty to be underſtood about this partition Wall in Solomons Temple, is that which is ſpoken in verſ. 22. of the ſame Chapter ויעבר ברתוקות זהב לפני הדביר And he made bars in chains of gold before the Oracle, and he overlaid it with gold. All the difficulty lies in the firſt word, for it is generally agreed by the beſt ſkilled in the Language, the Chaldee and the Rabbins that רתוקות ſignifieth chains, but, what is meant by ויעבר is the Queſtion. The word properly ſignifieth, He cauſed to paſs over, but in this place, R. Solomon, and D. Kimchi take it in a Chaldee propriety, as ſignifying to make bars, becauſe בריחים bars, in the Hebrew is tranſlated עברין in the Chaldee. The ſixteenth verſe of 2 Chr. III. giveth ſome light to this obſcurity, for there it is ſaid, He made chains as in the Oracle, and put them on the heads of the pillars; by which he means the flower wreaths that we ſpake of before that went about the Chapiter, and the like is to be underſtood here. That upon this Wall which was before the Oracle, and divided betwixt the Holy and moſt Holy place, be made borders or chained wreaths, with a ſwelling in the border like a bar in it, carried from the one ſide of the Houſe to the other upon this Wall.

SECT. II.

The Veil.

THE Veils were two, as was obſerved before, and the reaſon given why; a and theſe two Veils were renewed every year, the old ones taken away, and new ones put in their room: It was woven of four colours, blew, purple, ſcarlet, and fine white linnen yarn, every one of theſe threds twiſted ſix double, and woven upon hair for the warp, of ſeventy two hairs twiſted into every thred. Theſe two Veils rent at our Saviours death from the top to the bottom, Matth. XXVII. 51. and gave demonſtration of the laying open and common of thoſe Ceremonious things which had thitherto been reſerved in ſuch recluſeneſs and ſingularity. The Evangeliſt indeed calleth it by the name of One Veil, and ſo alſo doth Joſephus, when he ſaith, Διείρηλο δ' ὁμοίως καταπετάσμαλι, b It was parted by a Veil. For, 1. Though they were two, yet hung they up to be but as one partition. 2. Had they known where the proper place of one Veil had been, there had been but one in this ſecond Temple and no more.

a Maym. in Kelt Mik. par. 7.

b De bell. lib. 5. cap. 14.

Imagine what an amazement it would prove to the two Prieſts that were that Evening that our Saviour ſuffered, to mend the Lamps, and to burn the Incenſe, to ſee, and for the reſt of the people to hear that the Veils rent of their own accord from the top to the bottom, and no Hand upon them. Had not a Veil been upon the Eyes of that Nation, they might have ſeen more in this matter than they did, and made a better uſe of it than they made. Whether that ſtory that is both in Joſephus and in the Talmudicks, about the Gate of the Temple opening of its own accord, which we ſhall relate ere long, refer not to this ſtory in the Goſpel, be it referred to the Reader to judge. The Apoſtle himſelf gives us the typical application of this piece of the Sanctuary, Heb. X. 19, 20. Having boldneſs to enter into the Holieſt by the blood of Jeſus, by a new and living way which he hath conſecrated for us, through the Veil, that is to ſay, his fleſh.

SECT. III.

The moſt Holy place it ſelf.

THE moſt Holy place in Moſes his Tabernacle was a perfect cube of ten cubits long, and ten cubits broad, and ten cubits high: And the like was it in the Temple that was built by Solomon of twenty cubits every way, 2 Chron. III. 8. For though the Temple it ſelf were thirty cubits high, yet did he floor over the moſt Holy place at twenty cubits height: And to this ſenſe is that verſe to be underſtood, in 1 King. VI. 16. He built twenty cubits on the ſides of the Houſe, both the floor and the Walls with boards of Cedar; he even built them for it within, even for the Oracle, even for the moſt Holy place.

The beauty of the Walls of this place, was agreeable to the other; deckt with Cherubims and Palm-trees, and ſome precious Stones intermixed, Floor and Walls, and Roof and all gilded with Gold. It is ſaid in 2 Chron. III. 9. העליות חפה זהב that he overlaid the upper chambers with gold, which may move a juſt Query, for over the Holy place there was no upper chamber at all, (that is, in the Temple built by Solomon, for of that we are ſpeaking) but it was all open to the Roof, being but thirty cubits high: and over the moſt Holy place there was indeed an upper room of ten cubits high; but why this ſhould be called Chambers in the plural number, and why it ſhould be gilded at all, ſince there was no coming into it, nor no way to come there, is not eaſie to apprehend: And as for the side Chambers, that were set on the outside of the House, is there warrant or reason to suppose them overlaid with Gold, where they were to lay up Corn and Wine, and such other things of Tythes and first Fruits? Therefore by עליות might be understood, not the upper Chambers in the common sense in which the word is used, for there was none over the Holy place but the upper Floor, or the Roof of the Holy and most Holy place, and so the Text sheweth that the Rooms were all overlaid with Gold every where, both the Floor on which they trod, and the Walls and the Floor or Roof over head.

But another Text in the Book of Chronicles helpeth to resolve this doubt, and that is, 1 Chron. XXIX. 3. Moreover because I have set mine affection on the House of my God, I have of mine own proper good; of Gold and Silver which I have given to the House of my God, over and above all that I have prepared for the holy House: Even three thousand talents of Gold, of the Gold of Ophir, and seventy thousand talents of refined Silver, to overlay the Walls of the Houses withal; where these two things are remarkable. First, That he saith this preparation was above what he had prepared for the holy House, and yet, he saith, he had prepared it for the House of God. And secondly, That here is mention of Silver to overlay the Walls withal, whereas it is plain, that within the Temple it self all the overlaying was of Gold. Therefore it is thus to be understood, that beside the store of Gold that David had provided for the gildings of the House within, in the Holy and most Holy place, he had also laid by a stock of Gold and Silver both, to gild and overlay the Chambers over the Porch (for there were upper Chambers diverse in it, the height of it being one hundred and twenty cubits) and to beautifie the side Chambers, and the other Chambers that were about the Courts.

Now in the Temple after the Captivity, we do not find that they were so curious to reduce the compass of the most Holy place to a cubick form, but that the height of it did exceed the breadth, it being twenty cubits long, and twenty cubits broad, like that of Solomons, but the height far more for ought I find determined to the contrary.

SECT. IV.

The Cherubims and Ark.

AS there were two Cherubims upon the Ark it self, so also did Solomon cause two Cherubims besides, to be made to stand over the Ark, it standing between them: they are so plainly and facilely described, in 1 Kings VI. 23. that I shall refer the Reader thither for the story of them, and say no more concerning them but only this, that as the two Cherubims upon the Mercy seat, may very well be resembled to Christs two natures, so these two that stood by, to the two Testaments; which in their beginning and end reach the two sides of the World, The Creation, and the last Judgment, and in the middle do sweetly join one to another.

The Ark (the strength and presence of the Lord, Psal. CV. 4. and the glory of Israel, 1 Sam. IV. 22. the most pregnant and proper resemblance of our Saviour, in whom God dwelleth among men) described, Exod. XXV. 10, &c. and XXXVII. 1. &c. a was set upon a stone, up toward the West-end of the most Holy place, even under the middle wings of the two tall Cherubims that stood besides it: For the Cherubims spread forth their two wings over the place of the Ark, and the Cherubims covered the Ark, and the staves thereof above. And they drew out the staves, that the ends of the staves were seen out in the Holy place before the Oracle; and they were not seen without, 1 King. VIII. 7, 8. 2 Chron. V. 8, 9. For before the Temple was built, while the Ark was in a moving posture, the staves whereby the Ark was born, were of an equal length on either side it, ready for the Priests shoulders when there was occasion for the Ark to flit; but now when they had brought it into Solomons Temple, where it was to fix and remove no more, they drew out the staves towards that side that looked down the most Holy place. b Levi Gershom is of opinion, that these staves were not the same that were made by Moses, but of a longer size, and that they raught down to the very Door; and that though there were Doors betwixt the Holy and most Holy place, yet those Doors could not shut because of these staves. c And Kimchi, and Jarchi come up very near to the same supposal, conceiving that the Ark stood not up near the Western Wall of the House, but more downward, towards the Door, and that the staves raught down to the Door; and on the day of Expiation, when the High Priest went into the Holy place, he went up to the Ark between these staves, and could not go off to one hand or other.

c Kimch. ib. & R. Sol. ibid.

But that that hath strained from them this conception is, 1. Because they have strictly taken the word קדש in the Text in the Book of Kings, for the Holy place without the Veil, whereas the Book of Chronicles doth expresly render it by the word ארון The Ark; for whereas the one place saith, that the heads of the staves were seen, מן הקדש, the other hath hath it מן הארון And so the word הקדש meaneth not the whole room, either of the Holy or most Holy place, but that singularly Holy place that was under the wings of the Cherubims; for of that place had the Text spoken immediately before, when it said, The Priests brought the Ark into the most Holy place, under the wings of the Cherubims. For the Cherubims spread forth their wings over the place of the Ark, &c. and then he comes on and saith, And they drew out the staves, so that the ends of the staves appeared out of that holy place, meaning under the wings of the Cherubims. And 2. The Authors alledged have strictly taken על פני to mean so, as one standing at the Door betwixt the Holy and most Holy place, had the most Holy place before him; whereas it signifieth in the same sense that it doth in that clause, in Gen. I. 20. Let the Fowl flie upon the Earth על פני רקיע השמים which our English hath well rendred, in the open Firmament of Heaven. And so is it to be taken here, and the verse in hand may be properly understood thus; And they drew out the staves at length, so that the ends of the staves were seen from that Holy place in the open face of the Oracle: but they were not seen without. The staves were the same that were made by Moses, and their length not great, but only so much as to fit a Mans shoulder on either side of the Ark; and now when they had set the Ark between the two standing Cherubims on the Floor, the Cherubims inner wings covered the Ark, and the staves that were above at the ends of the Ark, but the rest of the staves drawn out downward toward the Oracle Door, shot out from under the Cherubims wings, and appeared in the open Face of the most Holy place, and the High Priest when he came to offer Incense at the Ark on the day of Expiation, he stood before the Ark between the staves.

d It is fancied by the Jews, that Solomon when he built the Temple, foreseeing that the Temple should be destroyed, he caused very obscure and intricate Vaults under ground to be made, wherein to hide the Ark when any such danger came, that howsoever it went with the Temple, yet the Ark which was as the very life of the Temple might be safe. And they understand that passage in 2 Chron. XXXV. 3. Josiah said unto the Levites, Put the Holy Ark in the House which Solomon the son of David did build, &c. e as if Joah having heard by the reading of Moses his Manuscript, and by Huldahs Prophesie, of the danger that hung over Jerusalem, he commanded to convey the Ark into this Vault, that it might be secured, and with it, say they, they laid up Aarons Rod, the pot of Manna, and the anointing Oil: For while the Ark stood in its place, upon the Stone mentioned, they hold that Aarons Rod and the pot of Manna stood before it, but now were all conveyed into obscurity, and the Stone upon which the Ark stood, lay over the mouth of the Vault. But Rabbi Solomon, which useth not ordinarily to forsake such Traditions, hath given a more serious Gloss upon the place; namely, whereas that Manasseh and Amon had removed the Ark out of its Habitation, and set up Images and abominations there of their own, Josiah speaketh to the Priests to restore it to its place again: what became of the Ark at the burning of the Temple by Nebuchadnezzar we read not, it is most like it went to the fire also. How ever it sped, it was not in the second Temple, and is one of the five choice things that the Jews reckon wanting there. Yet had they an Ark there also of their own making, as they had a Breast-plate of Judgment; which though they both wanted the glory of the former, which was giving of Oracles, yet did they stand current as to the other matters of their Worship, as the former Breast-plate and Ark had done.

And so having thus gone through the many parts and particulars of the Temple it self, let us but take account of the several parcel measures, that made up the length of it an hundred cubits, and so we will turn our Eye and survey upon the Courts.

5. The space between Holy and most Holy place one cubit.
6. The length of the most Holy place twenty cubits.
7. The Temple Wall six cubits thick.
8. The breadth of the Chambers at the end six cubits.
9. The Wall of the Chambers five cubits thick.

CHAP. XVI.

The Courts of the Temple.

THE dimenſions and platform of the Temple it ſelf being thus laid out, we may now the better obſerve the form and ſituation of the Courts that were before it or about it: Where, in the firſt place it will be needful to remember that again which was ſpoken before, which was, that the Temple and all the Courts about it, were not pitched ſo juſt in the middle of the Mount of the Houſe, as that they lay in an equal diſtance from the four ſides of the incompaſſing Wall, a but they were ſituate more towards the North-ſide and Weſt, in ſuch manner, as that they left leſs ſpace betwixt them and the Weſt, than betwixt them and the North; and leſs betwixt them and the North, than between them and the Eaſt; and leſs betwixt them and the Eaſt, than betwixt them and the South.

a Mid. per. 2.

There were three which we may call Courts, belonging to the Temple, beſides that ſpace in the Mountain of the Houſe without them, which was very large, and which is ordinarily called by Chriſtian Writers, Atrium Gentium, or the Court of the Gentiles. And theſe three were, The Court of Iſrael and the Prieſts, the Court of the Women, and the Chel, חל but properly and ordinarily the two former are only called Courts: That word in Hebrew is עזרה uſed in the Text, 2 Chron. IV. 9. and in the Chaldee Paraphraſt, Eſa. I. 12. 1 Sam. III. 3. Ezek. XLIII. 8. and by the Rabbins moſt conſtantly when they ſpeak of theſe places, David Kimchi gives the Etymology of it שהיו נעזרים בה that b it was called עזרה (which ſignifies help,) becauſe that every one that came to pray there with a good Heart was helped by the Lord his God; And much to the ſame purpoſe Rabbi Nathan, when he ſaith, c they prayed there to the Lord to help them, &c. there being their laſt recourſe for help in all exigents, as 1 King. VIII. 31, &c. the word is uſed in Ezek. XLIII. 14. in another ſenſe, namely, for a border or half pace at the foot of the Altar, on which the Prieſts that ſacrificed ſtood, d as Kimchi expounds it upon that place, and which we ſhall meet with afterward.

b Kimch. in 2 Chron. IV. & in Michol.

d Kimch. in Ezek. XLIII.

Theſe two Courts are ſometimes ſo ſpoken of in Scripture, as if they were three, for there is mention of the Court of the Prieſts, and the great Court, 2 Chron. IV. 9. and the Court of the Women, as we ſhall obſerve by and by, and yet they were indeed but two, for though the Court of the Prieſts, and the Court of Iſrael were diſtinguiſhed, yet were they not divided, but the Court of the Women was divided from them both.

The meaſure of the Court of Iſrael and the Prieſts (which is ſometime called Emphatically, The Court, and ſometime, The Court of Iſrael) e was one hundred eighty and ſeven cubits long; that is, from Eaſt to Weſt, and one hundred thirty and five broad from North to South. The Temple ſtood juſt in the middle of the breadth of it, ſo that the Front of the Temple or the Porch being one hundred cubits broad, this Court breadth lay ſeventeen cubits and an half on either ſide of it; and the Body of the Temple it ſelf being but ſeventy cubits broad, this Court lay thirty three cubits and an half broad on either ſide it: Now behind the Weſt-end of the Temple it extended but eleven cubits; ſo meaſure from the utmoſt Weſt-ſide of it there, and you have eleven cubits behind the Temple, one hundred cubits the length of the Temple, and then it extended Eaſtward before the Temple ſeventy ſix cubits.

f The Court of the Women lay juſt before this Court, joining to it, being of equal breadth with it, namely, one hundred thirty five cubits from North to South, but not ſo long as it from Eaſt to Weſt, for it was only one hundred thirty and five cubits that way alſo, and ſo it was a perfect ſquare.

CHAP. XVII.

The Incloſure. חל Chel.

ABOUT both theſe Courts thus laid, there was another incloſed ſpace incompaſſing them in, and this by the Jews is called the חל Chel: The word is uſed by Jeremy, Lam. II. 8. in that ſenſe (as a ſome Jews do interpret,) that we are to underſtand and deſcribe here. Both the חל Chel and the Wall mourn: by the Wall, being meant the Wall of the Court, and by the חל Chel the ſpace that incompaſſed it round about; and ſo tranſlated by the Chaldee מקפנא the incompaſſing or incloſure. The Scripture frequently uſeth the word חל for a Wall, Trench, or Rampart, as 2 Sam. X. 15. 1 King. XXI. 23. Obad. ver. 20. Nah. III. 8. and its rendred variouſly by the Hebrew Expoſitors there, but of the ſenſe of the word and nature of that place at the Temple that we are looking after, they give us this unanimous account, b that it was a place or ſpace of ten cubits broad, incompaſſed with a Wall, between the mountain of the houſe and the Courts. I cannot find a better name for it, than the incloſure or outer verge of the Courts.

a Maym. it beth habbechir. per. 5.

b Mid. per. 2. §. 3. Maym. ubi ſup.

The words of Rabbi Nathan in Aruch in two ſeveral places may move two ſeveral doubts about this place, for in one place he ſaith that the חל Chel was מקום מוקף חמה בין הר הבית לעורת הנשים c a place incompaſſed with a Wall between the mountain of the Houſe and the Court of the Women. And in another place he ſaith, that החיל כותל גבוה יותר מן הסורג d Chel was a Wall higher than the Wall called סורג Soreg; Out of which words he ſeemeth to hold out theſe two opinions; the one, that the חיל Chel did not incompaſs all the Court, but only the Court of the Women; and the other, that the חיל Chel was not a ſpace of ground, but a Wall; but theſe two doubts we ſhall clear as we go along.

c Ar. in חל

d Id. in סורג

And firſt to evidence that this חיל was a ſpace of ground, and not a Wall, we have not only the teſtimony of the Talmud and divers other Jews that meaſure out the breadth of it to be ten cubits, but we have mention abundantly in them of peoples coming into it, and ſtanding and ſitting in it, as R. Nathan himſelf giveth one inſtance, e when he ſpeaketh of a great מדרש Divinity School in the חיל Chel: And f Abraham Zacuth, ſpeaketh of R. Johanan ben Zaccai having a Sanhedrin there. g And Rambam relates at large how thoſe that brought their Paſsover Lambs into the Court when they were diſpatched, went and ſtood in the חיל Chel, and divers of the like examples might be added, which prove evidently enough what kind of thing this חיל Chel was, namely, not a Wall but a ſpace of ground. And ſo R. Nathan meaneth, even when he ſaith, It was a Wall higher than the Wall סורג for ſo the word חיל at large when it is taken for other places than this in the Temple, and is joyned with the word חומה is defined by the Jews to mean שורא ובר שורא h A Wall and a Son of Wall, or an inner and outer Wall; that is, a lower Wall before a higher, as Rabbi Solomon conſtrues it, not cloſe joyned together, but ſome ſpace of ground between, and ſo our Author underſtands it, though he ſpeak ſo ſhort.

As you went through this (that is, the Mountain of the Houſe) into the ſecond Temple, there was a ſtone wall that went about of three cubits high of very curious work: wherein ſtood Pillars at an even diſtance; ſome in Greek and ſome in Latin letters, giving notice of the holineſs of the place; That no ſtranger muſt enter within the holy place: for the ſecond Temple was called holy, and they went up 14 ſteps into it out of the firſt. And a little after, Μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο δεκατέσσαρας βαθμοὺς τὸ μὲχρι τοῦ τείχους διάστημα πηχῶν ἦν δέκα πᾶν ἰσόπεδον· And above the fourteen ſteps it was ten cubits to the Wall (of the Court) and all even. Out of which relation we may obſerve theſe things remarkable.

1. That the outmoſt ſpace of all, that lay within the great incompaſſing Wall (that which the Jews diſtinctively call the Mountain of the Houſe) was alſo commonly called the firſt Temple: And in this very ſenſe doth the Goſpel ſpeak very oft, uſing the word Temple when it meaneth but this outmoſt ſpace, as John II. 14. Jeſus found in the Temple thoſe that ſold Oxen, &c. John VIII. 1, 3. Mat. XXI. 14, 15.

2. That within this חיל Chel no ſtrangers might come but Jews only, and for this purpoſe there were Pillars in which there was ſo much written in Greek and Latine ſentences. And ſo the Jews ſay that the חיל Chel was more holy than the Mountain of the Houſe, becauſe

no ſtranger might come into it, nor none polluted by the dead. And upon this very thing we may conclude if we had no other ground to conclude it by, that the חיל Chel did incircle or incompaſs all the Courts and not the Court of the Women only: for if the ground along that Court for ten Cubits next to it were ſo holy that a ſtranger might not come upon it, certainly we muſt hold the ground along by the upper Court as holy and as unacceſſible for ſtrangers every whit. And therefore whereas R. Nathan in what was alledged before, ſaith that the חיל Chel did incloſe the Court of the Women, and ſpeaketh of incloſing no more, he doth not exclude the other, but ſpeaks according as the חיל Chel lay to one that came in at the Eaſt-Gate.

3. That into the חיל Chel there was the firſt riſing, all being level from the Eaſt-Gate thither, and the riſing into the חיל Chel was 14 ſteps or 7 cubits m or as the Talmud more truly reckons, but 12 ſteps or 6 cubits (for every ſtep was half a cubit riſe) and the חיל Chel being ten cubits broad it was level to the Wall of the Womens Court.

m Mid. per. 2.

The Wall that incompaſſed the חיל Chel was not high as were the other Walls about the Temple, but it was only as it were barrs before the higher Wall of the Court, but of three cubits high; the faſhion or work of it being very curious, wrought into paves or latices, or ſuch open work, that one might look through it as well as over it.

The paſſages into the חיל Chel through this Wall were many, namely, one before every Gate that went into either of the Courts, and there on either ſide the paſſage, was a Pillar ſet up with the inſcription mentioned, adviſing ſtrangers to beware of the coming upon the holy ground.

Now in the Syrogecian Kings times when „the Jews and Jeruſalem lay in ſubjection to thoſe Kings יג פרצות היו בו שפרצום מלכי יון this Wall that was the barr againſt ſtrangers going any further, was broken by thoſe Kings in thirteen places „they ſcornfully and diſdainfully, and impiouſly breaking upon the holy ground חורו וגדרום וגורו כנגדן יג השתחויות But the Jews made up the breaches again, and ordained thirteen adorations and oraiſons to be made againſt the Heathen Kingdoms upon any ones coming to any of the places where breach had been.

CHAP. XVIII.

The Court of the Women.

THE Courts of the Temple (to the ſurveying of which we are now come) were properly two, The Court of Iſrael and The Court of the Women: For though there was indeed a diſtinction between the Court of Iſrael, and the Court of the Prieſts, as that the one was not the other, and they that came into the one, might not come into the other, yet was the one ſo within the other, and the partition between the one and the other ſo ſmall, and but one boundary that incloſed them both, that they were indeed not ſo very properly two Courts, as two ſeveral places for the Prieſts and for the Iſraelites to ſtand in, in one Court. But the Court of Iſrael, and the Court of the Women were ſo truly and apparently two different Courts, that they lay one before another: and they were parted and divided one from another, with a very high Wall.

The Court of the Women is not mentioned in Scripture by that expreſs name and title in any place, but yet it is ſpoken of there under two or three other Epithets, or denominations. 1. It is called the New Court, 2 Chron. XX. 5. where it is ſaid, that Jehoſhaphat ſtood in the Congregation of Judah and Jeruſalem in the houſe of the Lord before the new Court: that is, he and all the Congregation ſtood in the Mountain of the Houſe Eaſtward before the Court of the Women. Now David Kimchi upon the place, though he ſpeak not out ſo much, yet he concludeth indeed that that new Court meaneth the Court of the Women, and he giveth two reaſons why it is called New: a either becauſe it had gone to decay, and they had newly repaired it, or becauſe they had made ſome new Laws concerning it, ואמרו טבול יום לא יכנס במחנה לויה and had appointed that none that were defiled, ſo as they needed to waſh themſelves the ſame day, ſhould come within the Camp of Levi, which is a peculiar prohibition in the b the Talmud as concerning this Court of the Women: c But rather it was called new, becauſe it was not made when the other Court was by Solomon, but added in aftertime.

a Kimchi in 2 Chron. XX.

b Kelim, per. 1. c C. Lemper. in Midd. fol. 62.

There is mention indeed of the Inner Court built by Solomon, 1 King. 36. 6. which inferreth an outer, but that outer meaneth the whole mountain of the Houſe which lay without the Court of Iſrael, as is well obſerved by ſome of the Hebrew Doctors, and that is it which is alſo called the great Court, in contradiſtinction to the Court of the Prieſts, 2 Chron. IV. 9. And in that there is mention only of Solomons building the inner Court, it is an argument that he built but that Court, and that this that we are ſpeaking of, was not extant in his time, but taken in and built afterward, either by Aſa or by Jehoſaphat, before that time and occaſion that the text mentioned in the book of Chronicles ſpeaketh of: and ſo there came to be two Courts in the Houſe of the Lord, 2 King. XXI. 5.

2. It

2. It is called The outer Court, Ezek. XLVI. 21. [d] as that Text is generally and truly understood by the Jewish Writers, which we shall have occasion to examine anon: and the reason of the name doth easily appear, namely because it lay on the outside of the Court of Israel, and further off from the Temple.

[d] Mid. per. 2. & Kimch in loc.

3. It is also called The Treasury, John VIII. 20 the reason of which name we shall observe before we have done with the survey of this Court.

But by the Jewish Writers it is generally and ordinarily called עזרת נשים The Court of the Women; and the reason of that name was, because the Women might go no higher or further, than into this Court. [e] Τοῖς γυναιξὶν ἰδία πρὸς θρησκείαν χώρα, This being the proper place for them to worship in, and ἐωτέρω δὲ κἀκείνης γυναιξὶν ἄβατον ἦν τὸ ἱερὸν, further than this towards the Temple was unaccessible to them: only when a Woman brought a Sacrifice, she might go into the Court of Israel, as we have observed in another place.

This Court lay at the East end of the Court of Israel, and was parted from it by a high Wall, so that whosoever came to worship here, could see nothing of the service in the other Court, and indeed hear but little unless they went up the steps of the Gate and looked in: for till you came to the middle of the entry of the Gate that went up into the upper Court, it was but of the same holiness with the Court of the Women, but beyond the middle, it was holier.

The floor of this Court was even and level throughout, f and it was a perfect square of 135 cubits long, and 135 cubits broad; and it was curiously flag'd with marble, as indeed was all the space, both Courts, Chel, and the other space that was within the Wall that incompassed the holy ground: And they have this Tradition about the pavement of the Court, where the Altar stood, g That all the Court was flag'd with fair stones, and if any flag were looosed, although it lay still in its place, yet was it not lawful to stand upon it to do any part of the service till it were fastned again.

[g] Maym in bith habbech. ptr. 1.

The entring into the Court of the Women was by three Gates, one on the East, one on the North, and one on the South, and there was a fourth on the West, which went up out of this Court into the upper Court or that of Israel. All these Gates, as also all the other that went into the upper Court (of which hereafter) were h χρυσῷ τε καὶ ἀργύρῳ κεκαλυμμέναι πανταχόθεν, ὁμοίως τε παραστάδες καὶ ὑπέρθυρα, gilt all over both posts and lintels, one only excepted, of which instantly.

We will go up at the East Gate out of the חול Chel, out of which there were five steps that rose up to the Gate to land you in it. The Gate it self was exceeding sumptuous and exceeding beautiful: and this was that which was called the beautiful Gate of the Temple, Acts III. 2. at which the Creeple lay begging of alms, both of men and women that went into the Temple; At this Gate began τὸ ἔνδον ἱερὸν, The inner Temple, as Josephus doth often call it, distinguishing between that space that was inclosed within the boundary Wall that incompassed the whole holy ground, and that space that was inclosed within the Wall that incompassed the Courts: the former of them was called the outer Temple, and the later was called the inner, and both of them bare the name of the Temple: and so in the Scripture, whosoever went but within the compass of the holy ground, is said to have gone into the Temple.

Now this Gate being the very front and entrance into the Inner Temple, or into that space, within which the choicest Sanctity and Bravery of the Temple was, it was built and decked with such sumptuousness and singular gallantry, as was fitting for the Frontispice of so brave a place: And hence it came to bear the name of beautiful, and that the rather also, in comparison of the Gate Shushan, or the outmost East Gate that entred into the mountain of the House, for that was but a low and homely Gate-house, for a reason that hath been observed heretofore: but this was goodly and lofty, and stood bravely mounted upon the far higher ground.

This Gate Josephus i calleth the Corinthian Gate, because it was of Corinthian brass, whereas the rest of the Gates were gilt with gold. And here occurreth a difference betwixt him and the Talmudical Writers; for they do unanimously hold the brazen Gate to be the Gate of Nicanor (which we shall survey anon) which was the Gate that went out of the Court of the Women into the Court of Israel: but he doth as confidently affirm on the other hand, that it was that that went out of the Chel into the Court of the Women. His words are these, Μία δ' ἦν ἔξωθεν τοῦ νεὼ Κορινθία χαλκῆ There was one gate without the Temple of Corinthian brass, which exceeded in glory those of gold or silver: Now where this Gate stood, namely, in that place that we are upon, appeareth by this passage of his a little after. The Gate above the Corinthian Gate which opened East, over against the Gate of the Temple, &c.

It is not much material to determine whether of these Eastern Gates were of brass, it is only needful to be resolved which of them was that that was called the Gate of Nicanor, (because upon the knowledge of that there are divers things depending, and in the next Chapter but one, shall be shewed that it was that Gate that went out of the Court of the Women into the Court of Israel.) But if I were to moderate between the differing parties, I should say their difference in this matter is not real, but only apparent: Josephus calls the Gate that came into the Court of the Women, the brazen Gate, because it was all so, posts and lintel and all overlaid with brass, which shone above gold: but the Talmudists say, the doors of the Gate of Nicanor were only of brass, but the whole front of the Gate beside, all of gold: and so that was not the brazen Gate, but only brazen doors, but the other was properly the brazen Gate.

When Peter and John had healed the Creeple at this Gate, the Text saith, that he went with them into the Temple, that is, into the Court of the Women, which was the common and ordinary place of worship for those that brought not a Sacrifice, and from thence he went back again with them through this Gate into Solomons Porch or the Eastern cloister of the Mountain of the House, and there they preach and convert five thousand. And now let us go up through this Gate into the Court, and survey it it self.

i ארבע לשכיות היו באדבע מקצעותיה של מ"מ אמה ולא היו מקורות In the four corners of the Court of the women there were four rooms of forty cubits, and they were not floored over, and thus they shall be in time to come, say the Talmudicks from Ezek. XLVI. 21,22. Now these four rooms were every one forty cubits long from East to West, and thirty cubits broad from North to South, for so may we best interpret it according to the place alledged in the Prophesie of Ezekiel, his words are these, Then he brought me forth to the utter Court, and caused me to pass by the four corners of the Court, and behold in every corner of the Court there was a Court. In the four corners of the Court were Courts קטורות of forty cubits long, and thirty broad. The word קטורות is of doubtful signification, and diversly interpreted: The Seventy read it קטונות little, for so they render it Αυλη μικραὶ A little Court, and it is easie to see how they mistook נ for ר: some understand it according to the Chaldee transmutation of ש changed into ט and think it meaneth קשורות joyned, and so our English hath it, and so k Rabbi Nathan produceth some instances of the word in this sense, but concludeth that אין קטורות אבא שאינן מקורות the word קטורות meaneth nothing but that these buildings were not floored over, and in the very same opinion doth the l Talmud, m Rabbi Solomon and David Kimchi joyn with him, and in the very same words; But how to understand this is somewhat difficult: If we should conceive that they were clearly open on the top without any covering at all, the constant works that were done in them, and the things that were laid up in them will deny that; and if we shall say they were roofed over, how shall we answer to the general testimony of the Hebrew Doctors which holdeth otherwise. We will therefore look first to what use these several rooms were constantly put, and then we shall be the better inabled to judge of this matter.

The Jews in the Treatise alledged in the Margine above, speak of נזיר עולם & נזיר שמשון A Samson Nazarite and an everlasting Nazarite, not but that Samson was a Nazarite always: but they use this distinction in reference to the manner of the Vow making. He that took on him to be a Nazarite like Samson, as saying, Behold I will be a Nazarite like Samson, or like the Son of Manoah, or like the husband of Delilah, or like him that carried away the gates of Azzah, or like him whose eyes the Philistines put out: such an one might never cut his hair, but it must ever grow upon him: and such a Nazarite did Absalom take upon him to be, but he was forced to cut his hair once every year, it was so heavy: But he that was a Nazarite everlasting (that is, that took upon him Nazarism upon other terms, as he that said I will be a Nazarite according to the number of the hairs of my head, or the dust of the Earth, or sand of the Sea shore) he might poll his head once in thirty days: but his hair was not to be thus burnt, because his vow was not out. But he whose vow was expired, whersoever he polled his head was to come to this place, and here to boyl his Peace-offering and to burn his hair, and the Priest took the shoulder as it boiled, and a Cake and a Wafer of unleavened bread, and put all upon the hands of the Nazarite, and waved them, and then was the Nazarite at liberty to drink wine, and to be defiled defiled by the dead. But R. Simeon saith, that as soon as any of the blood of any of the Lambs was sprinkled on him, he was at this liberty: The same Tract also speaketh of women Nazarites as o Queen Helena who was a Nazarite first by her own ingagement seven years, and by coming into the Land of Israel seven years more, and by a defilement, seven years more, one and twenty in all: p And Mary of Tarmud, who whilst the blood of her offerings was sprinkling on her, word was brought her that her daughter was in danger of death, and she went away, the sprinkling half done, and half undone, and found her daughter dead: and came again and was sprinkled out: Now to enquire whether these women cut their hair at the expiring of their vow, is not much to this place and purpose, and therefore we shall not trouble our selves at present to hearken after it. But me thinks that q passage of Simeon the Just, was to purpose, who in all his life time would take a Sin-offering but of one Nazarite only, and his reason was, because he thought they made their vows in some passion, and repented of it when they had done.

And now that we have seen the use and imployment to which these rooms were put, it is the more seasonable to consider of that which we mentioned before, namely whether these four rooms in the four corners of the Court of the women, were quite open to the skies, or roofed over, and in what sense to take the word קטורות

Two things do here meet us which are considerable. 1. That these places in Ezekiel are called Courts. 2. That he saith in every one of them there were boyling ranges, to boyl the Sacrifices of the people, Ezek. XLVI. 21, 22. And yet doth the Talmud alot them to these particular uses. All which, and what is said moreover, that they were not roofed over, may very well consist together. For grant every one of these spaces to be built within with chambers round about: there might be very fair chambers and yet a good handsome open Court in the middle: At either end chambers of ten cubits broad, and yet an open space of twenty cubits between: And on either side chambers of seven or eight cubits broad: and yet an open space of fourteen or sixteen cubits between: Thus therefore doth the building in these places seem to be; that there were fair chambers round about which were roofed over as other buildings, and in the middle was an open Court, round about which were boyling ranges, whose chimneys went up in the inner walls of the chambers or the walls to the open place: And so the word קטורות to be rendred Caminata, as it is by some, and as by our English Bibles margin made with Chimneys. And thus were these places roofed, but not as the rest of the buildings about the Temple, with a continued roof, for here was a void place or even quadrangle in the middle, and thus did the inner Court serve for boyling places, and the rooms round about for other uses.

Such was the Platform of the Court of the Women, it was a perfect square: in the midst of every one of the Walls of it was a Gate: in every corner of it, was one of these buildings: and now what was between these buildings along the Wall till it came to the gate?

Gate? was it cloiſtered all along, as were the other Walls about the Temple? The Talmud anſwers that at firſt it was not עורת חנשים לא היתח מקולדת z The Court of the Women was not cloiſtered about: but הלקה בראשנה a It was all plain at firſt, and nothing but pavement and bare Walls, but upon ſome experience of inconveniences that they found they made Cloiſters, and Balcones or Galleries within the Cloiſters upon three ſides of it, Eaſt, North and South, all about: The inconvenience R. Nathan tells us was this היו באין לידי קלות ראש שהיו נגנסין בין הנשים b That Men and Women being promiſcuouſly mingled together, it was occaſion of lightneſs and irreverence. Therefore they made a Balcone (גוחטרא in Nathan & Maymony, but בצוצרה in the Talmud) round about the Court, which came out from the Wall and was roofed over head. And ſo the Women ſtood in thoſe Galleries, and Men ſtood in the Court below: And it is a Tradition, that at the firſt when they looked on the feſtivity of pouring out of water, the Men were within, and the Women without, which cauſed ſome irreverence: whereupon they made three Galleries in the Court, upon three ſides of it, that they might behold from above.

So that at firſt there were neither Cloiſters nor Balcones in this Court, till this inconvenience put them upon making of ſuch: and then they were but Galleries or Balcones, without any cloiſtering with the ſupport of Pillars, as there was in the other Court: But in the ſumptuous buildings that Herod made of and about the Temple, this Court was cloiſtered with as much ſtate and bravery as was the other, or as was the mountain of the Houſe which we have ſurveyed, only whereas that was a double Cloiſter all about, but on the South, where it was treble, the Cloiſters of both the Courts were only ſingle: Take the Teſtimony of Joſephus about this matter. c Αἱ δὲ μεταξὺ τῆς πυλῶν ἀπὸ τοῦ τείχους ἔνδον ἐξεδεδομέναι πρὸς τῷ χαζοφυλακίῳ σφόδρα μὲν καλοῖς καὶ μεγάλοις ἀνείχοντο κίοσιν. Ἦσαν δὲ ἁπλᾶ, καὶ ἁπλότητος μεγέθους τῆς κάτω ὁδὸν ἀπελείποντο: He had been ſpeaking immediately before concerning the Gates and paſſages into both the Courts, and it may not be amiſs for the better underſtanding of the paſſage before us, to take up his words a little at large. Ἔνδεν ἄλλοι πάλιν πεντέβαθμοι κλίμακες ἀνῆγον ἐπὶ τὰς πύλας. From thence (out of the חיל Chel) five ſteps brought you up unto the Gates, which on the North and South were eight in number, namely four on either ſide: and two neceſſarily on the Eaſt, for the Court appropriated to the Women to worſhip in being walled on that quarter, there muſt needs be a ſecond Gate, which opened juſt oppoſite to this firſt. And as for the other ſides (of the Court of the Women) there was one Gate on the South and another on the North by which they entred into the Womens Court: For through the other Gates (of the Court of Iſrael) Women might not enter, nor go beyond the incloſure of their own Court. And that place was permitted for the Jews that dwelt in the Land, and that dwelt in foreign Countreys to worſhip in: Now the Weſt quarter had no Gate at all, but the Wall there was built continued (without any opening of a Gate in it) And then he comes on with this ſaying Αἱ δὲ μεταξὺ, &c. Now the Cloiſters which ran between the Gates along by the Wall, turning inward before the Treaſuries, were born up with exceeding fair and great pillars: But they were ſingle and they wanted nothing in their exceeding greatneſs of thoſe that were below.

Now in that he ſaith theſe Cloiſters were ἀπὸ τείχους ἔνδον ἐξεδεδομέναι along by the Wall turning inward, his meaning is, that they were joyning to the Wall, and ſtood within the Courts and not without, and ſo they ran along the Courts within from Gate to Gate: And they wanted nothing of the greatneſs of the Pillars and Cloiſters that were below along the Wall of the mountain of the Houſe, but only that thoſe were double and theſe ſingle; And as for the Cloiſter in the Court of the Women, it had this difference, both from thoſe in the mountain of the Houſe, and thoſe in the Court of Iſrael, that this had a Gallery made in it for Women to ſtand in and to look down into the Court, whereas the others had no interpoſition, but were uninterrupted to the roof.

This Court of the Women was the place, where both Men and Women did ordinarily worſhip, that either came to pray at other times than the hours of prayer, or that at the hours of prayer came and brought no Sacrifice with them. In this Court it was, where Paul was laid hold upon, as a violater of the Sanctity of the place in the peoples repute, who thought he had brought Gentiles in hither, Act. XXI. 26, 27, &c. who might not go ſo much as into the Chel. In this Court did the High-Prieſt once a year, namely at the Feaſt of Expiation read a portion of the Law, and the King once in ſeven years, namely at the Feaſt of Tabernacles in the year of Releaſe: and here every year at the Feaſt of Tabernacles was the great dancing, ſinging and rejoycing, for the drawing and pouring out of water, of which and of the other particulars named, I have given the full account, in the treatiſe of the Temple Service.

Of the Gazophylacia or Treasuries.

BEfore we part out this Court of the Women, those words of Josephus, which were cited even now, which say the Cloisters of the Court, were ἔνδον ἐστραμμέναι πρὸς γαζοφυλακίων turned inward before the Treasuries, may justly challenge us to stay here a little and look about us, whether we can find any Treasuries hereabout, or what may be said to the Gazophylacium of the Temple, the name and mention of which is very well known and ordinary both in Scripture and other Writers, but the situation thereof about the Temple something difficult to find out: Now in these two words of Josephus, Πρὸς Γαζοφυλακίων, two main things are observable, and to be looked after towards that search that we are now about; the one is, the number, importing more Treasuries than one, and the other is, the situation of these Treasuries in reference to the Cloisters mentioned, The Cloisters were before them.

The Treasuries of the Temple were of a twofold nature and capacity, namely Treasure-Chests and Treasure-Chambers, the former were called Shopheroth, the later Lesacoth, and both bare the general name or Corban.

a There were thirteen Treasure-Chests at the Temple, which by the Jews are commonly called שופרות Shopheroth which signifieth properly Trumpets b because trumpet-like they were wide in the bottom and narrow in the top: that mony that was put in, might not easily be got out.

a Talm. in Shekalim per. 6. b Maym. in Shekal. per. 2.

c Two of these Chests, were for the half shekel that every Israelite was to pay for the redemption of his soul or life (for which the Law is given, Exod. XXX. 13.) the one Chest for the payment of the last year (if he had missed to pay at the due time) and the other for the half shekel for the year present. d On the first day of Adar which answereth in part to our February, there was general notice given throughout the Country, that they should provide to pay their half shekel: and on the fifteenth day of that month the Collectors sate in every City to gather it: and they had two Chests before them, (as were at the Temple) and they demanded the payment calmly and used no roughness or compulsion. On the five and twentieth day of the month, the Collectors began to sit in the Temple, and then they forced men to pay, and if any one had not wherewith to pay, they took his pawn, and sometime would take his very rayment perforce: They had a Table before them to count and change the mony upon (from whence they were called שולחנים Trapizitæ or Mensarii, and two Chests before them to put into.

d Talm. ubi ante per. 1.

A man that brought a shekel to change, and must have half a shekel again, the Mensarius or Collector was to have some profit upon the change: ואותה התוספ הנקראת קולבון And how much profit did he require for change? The twelfth part of a Denarius, and never less: Nay if two came together and paid a shekel for them both, so that there needed no change, yet the receiver was to have some profit from them both: The Talmud and the Authors cited in the margin do discourse exceedingly large about this קולבון Kolbon, and who was to pay it, and who to be quit from it, and how much to be paid, and to the like purpose, but the general conclusion is still for some profit, which exaction was that that caused our Saviour to overthrow τραπέζας κολλυβιστῶν the tables of these Colbonists, Joh. II. 15. at the first Passover he came up to Jerusalem after his Baptism; and Matth. XXI. 12. at his last: for these Receivers began to sit in the Temple for that purpose, but eighteen or twenty days before the Passover, and continued for that time when the concourse of the people was greatest, and after it was over they had done.

e And that addition or profit is called Kolbon (κόλλυβος) and how much profit did he require for change? The twelfth part of a Denarius, and never less.

e Maym. ubi sup. pt. 3 & Aruch in קולבון

And so the market that was in the Temple of Sheep and Oxen, it is like it was not constantly there, but for such times of concourse, when the multitude of people and Sacrifices was so exceeding great, though indeed there were merchandizing of other things there, all the year long in the Tabernæ or Shops that we have spoken of before: The place where the marketing of the Sheep and Oxen was, was the great space of the mountain of the House, that lay upon the South side of the Courts, for on the West and North sides the room was too strait for such a matter, and on the East side was the most common entrance of the people, and so these Cattle would have stopt up the way: but on the South there was a place exceeding roomy and spacious, and it they had taken up for a market at such times, making the house of God an house of Merchandize.

Amongst those Authors that spake of these two half shekel Chests, I find not any that doth inform us, where they stood, or where these Collectors of the poll-mony did sit in the Temple to receive it: nor indeed is it of any great import to iquire after it, since their sitting there was but for a short space, as a month or such a matter, and so they had done: It is most probable they sate about the East gate Susban as being the chiefest and commonest entrance.

Besides

Besides these two treasure-chests that were in use but for a certain time every year, there were eleven more that were of constant and continual use, and that stood in their places all the year long, and upon every one of them was written what use and imployment they were put unto.

f Msym. ibid. 1. f One was for them that were to offer two Turtle Doves or two young Pigeons, the one for a burnt-offering, and the other for a sin-offering: they cast in their price hither.

2. A second was for them that were to offer a burnt-offering of Birds only.

3. A third, for whosoever offered mony to buy wood for the Altar, he put his mony into that Chest.

4. A fourth, for whosoever would offer mony to buy Frankincense.

5. A fifth, for whosoever would offer Gold for the Mercy Seat.

6. A sixth, for the residue of a Sin-offering, that is, if a man had set apart a sum of money for a Sin-offering, and it bought a Sin-offering and there was to spare, that which was to spare was put into this Chest.

7. A seventh, for the residue of a Trespas-offering.

8. An eighth, for the residue or surplus of an offering of Birds, of men and women that had Issues, and of women after childbirth.

9. A ninth, for the surplus of a Nazarites offering.

10. A tenth, for a surplus of a Lepers Trespas-offering.

11. The eleventh for whosoever would willingly offer a sacrifice of the Herd, the mony wherewith to buy it, he cast into this Chest.

These many Chests stood continually in the Temple, with every one its title written upon it, that told its use, that whosoever would offer any one of these things mentioned, he could readily go by those directions, where to put the mony of his offering: And these are those Gazophylacia or Treasuries that Josephus saith, the Cloisters were before; that is, whereas the Courts were cloistered round about, and those Cloisters were, on the side toward the Court, supported with Pillars, these Chests were set in the Court before those Pillars: as if such Chests should be set in the quadrangle before the Pillars that bear up the Cloister-Walks in the Royal Exchange, London.

But in whether of the Courts were these Chests disposed of, in the Court of Israel, or the Court of the Women, or in both, some in the one and some in the other?

Ans. These considerations do evince, that they were placed in the Court of the Women: 1. Because thither was the access freer than it was into the Court of Israel; and it is no doubt, these Chests would be set in a place most commodious for every one to come unto them: Women might not come into the other Court at all, nor Men neither, so ordinarily as they might into this, and these Treasuries in all reason were to be set, where Men and Women did both resort. 2. In the upper Court, if these Chests stood before or on the outside of the Cloister, they stood in the Court of the Priests, and thither might not an Israelite that was come into the upper Court, enter, unless it were upon three singular occasions when he had a sacrifice, which we have mentioned elsewhere, and putting mony into the Treasuries was none of them. 3. It is said in Mark. XII. 41. That Jesus sate over against the Treasury and saw the people cast in mony, and he saw a widow throw in two mites: Now into the Court of Israel, this widow might not come, and in that Court Christ might not sit, for they had a Tradition, that none might sit in that Court, but only the Kings of the house of David: But the meaning of the place is, that Jesus sitting in the Cloister of the Court of the Women, saw the people cast mony into these Chests, according as they were minded to offer for this or that occasion: and there came a poor widow and threw in two mites which make a farthing. It is the ordinary expression that the Hebrew Authors use to signifie the peoples giving to the Treasury by, to say משליכין לתוכה They cast in their mony: which phrase the Evangelists also follow in this story: And since we are upon this poor widows offering, let it be without offence, to digress so much, as to give in this ratable of the Jews, for the understanding of the value of her two mites, and how they made a farthing, and it may be it will be useful on other occasions: g The shekel, or piece of silver

g Id ibid pr. 1. mentioned in the Law, the weight of it was 320 barely corns: but the Wisemen added to its weight, and made it of the same weight with the coin called סלע Selaa: and what is the weight of the Selaa סלע ? Three hundred eighty and four midling barly corns: The Selaa is four Denarii. The Denarius is six מיעה Meahs, now the Meah is that which in Moses his time was called a Gerah: The Meah was two Pondions: The Pondion was two אסרין Issarin Aosdeus: And פרוטה a mite, was the eighth part of an Issar (so two mites make a fourth part) and the weight of a Meah which was the Gerah, was sixteen barly corns: and the weight of an איסר Issar (Assarius) was four barly corns: the weight of פרוטה a mite was half a barly corn, &c.

The place then of these Treasure Chests was in the Court of the Women, before the Cloisters, some here and some there on the several sides of the Court, (and therefore this place is also called the Treasury, Joh. VIII. 20. where it is said, These things spake Jesus in Treasury as he taught in the Temple, &c.) and so the people both men and women had

acceſs to them, and offered as their hearts or their occaſions moved them, and the inſcriptions of the Cheſts did give them direction.

As there were theſe Treaſure-cheſts, ſo alſo were there Treaſure-chambers, beſides thoſe that have been mentioned before, at the Gates of the Mountain of the Houſe, and beſides thoſe that joyned to the body of the Temple: Beſides the Chambers, where Tiths, Firſt-fruits, Veſſels, and Veſtments were treaſured up, as they were in the Chambers by the Gates, and by the ſides of the Temple, there were three Chamber-treaſuries of remarkable note, but the place where they ſtood is ſomething difficult to diſcover.

1. There was the Chamber, or Treaſury, of the half-ſhekel poll mony, into which the two Cheſts that have been ſpoken of, were emptied when they were full, and the Chamber locked and ſealed up. Now at three ſet times of the year, they took the mony out of this Chamber again: The Talmud and Maymony in the Treatiſe Shekalim do give the ſtory and the manner of that action thus: h At three times of the year they emptied this Chamber: namely, fifteen days before the Paſſover, fifteen days before Pentecoſt, and fifteen days before the Feaſt of Tabernacles: or as Rabba Akiba the Son of Azai ſaith, on the nine and twentieth of Adar, the firſt of Sivan, and the nine and twentieth of Ab: He that went in to fetch out the money, muſt not go in in any garment, in which it was poſſible to hide mony, nor in his ſhooes or ſandals, no nor with his Phylacteries on, becauſe it was poſſible to hide mony under them: when he went in, a watch ſtood at the door without, and all the while he was within they talked to him, and he again to them, that ſo he might be prevented for putting any mony into his mouth: He began not to empty out any mony till he gave them without, notice by ſaying, I empty, and they anſwered him, Empty, Empty, Empty, three times over: The mony that was in the Chamber was put up when it was firſt brought in, into three great cheſts, containing nine Seahs, or three buſhels apiece: and if there were more brought in than would go into theſe three cheſts, it was laid by ſomewhere in the Chamber: He that went in took three cheſts of three Seahs a piece, or every one containing a buſhel, and he filled them out of the great Cheſts within. His three that he brought in, had theſe three letters א. ב. ג written ſeverally on them, for diſtinction ſake: for one be filled in the name of the Jews of the Land of Iſrael, and another in the name of thoſe that were in Towns and Countries nearer hand, and the third, in the name of thoſe in Babel and Media, and further off. And thus having filled theſe three at one time, they were brought out, and the money beſtowed to buy the dayly Sacrifices, and additional Sacrifices, and Shewbread, and ſalt for the Sacrifices, and wood for the Altar, and other things that were neceſſary for the ſervice: and thus they laid out the mony as long as thoſe three buſhels would run, and at the next appoynted time, he went into the Chamber again, and did the like.

h Shekalim per. 3.

2. There were two other Treaſure-chambers, in one of which was laid up what was offered towards the repair and ſervice of the Temple, and another in which was laid up what was offered for charitable uſes. The Talmudicks ſpeak of them thus, שתי לשכות היו במקדש אחת לשכת חשאים ואחרת לשכת הכלים i There were two Treaſure Chambers in the Temple, one the chamber of the Silent, and the other the chamber of the Veſſels: The chamber of the Silent, was where religious men did ſilently or ſecretly put in their Offerings, and poor children of honeſt parents, were brought up by them ſecretly. The chamber of the Veſſels was where any that willingly offered any veſſel, caſt it in there: and once in thirty days the Treaſurers opened the Chamber, and fetched out what they found fit for the ſupply of the Temple, and what was not of it ſelf fit, they ſold and turned into ſome thing that was fit, &c.

i ibid. pir. 5 & Aruch in חש

Now whereabout theſe Chambers ſtood, it is ſomething difficult to diſcover: we ſhall gueſs at their place when we come to ſurvey the upper Court: the mention of the Gazophylacia which we have found in this Court of the Women that we are about, hath led us thus far aſide as to ſpeak of theſe chambers alſo, though they were not in this Court but in the upper: we ſhall have ſo much the leſs to ſay of them, when we come to their own place.

And now let us look over this Court that we have been ſo long about, at one view: As you were entred into it at the Eaſt-Gate, you ſaw in every corner of it, a piece of building that had a quadrangle in the midſt of it: on the North and the South-ſides there was a Gate juſt in the middle between theſe buildings: and from the buildings on either ſide, there ran a Cloiſter ſupported with goodly marble Pillars unto the Gates: and the like Cloiſter there was at the Eaſt quarter, at which you entred: Theſe Cloiſters had Benches within them for the people to ſit down when they thought good, as there were in the Cloiſters that ran along the outmoſt Wall that encompaſſed the Mountain of the Houſe: Before theſe Cloiſters on the Eaſt, North, and South ſides, ſtood the Treaſure cheſts, and then you were come into the open Court. Before you as you went up toward the Court of Iſrael, was a goodly riſing of ſteps up to the Gate of that Court, called the Gate of Nicanor which we are now to ſurvey the next: and upon this quarter there was no Cloiſter at all.

CHAP. XX.

Of the Gate of Nicanor, or the East-Gate of the Court.

THE Court of the Women, which was of the platform that hath been described, was parted from the Court of Israel by a high Wall: namely of thirty two cubits and an half high from the floor of the Court of the Women, yet but only twenty five cubits high from the floor of the Court of Israel it self; for so much higher was the ground in that Court, than in the other.

Just in the middle of this Wall, was the Gate that conveyed out of the one Court into the other: a to which Gate there was a rising of fifteen steps, every step half a cubit high, the whole rising seven cubits and an half in all; so high was the Court of Israel above the Court of the Women.

a Mid. per. 2. Josephus de Bel. lib. 8 cap. 14.

b Succah per. 5.

b These fifteen steps, (saith the Treatise Succah) were answerable to the fifteen Psalms of degrees in the book of Psalms שעליהן הלוים אומרים בשיר because upon these the Levites stood and sang: Not in the daily service, or in the ordinary course of the Temple musick, for their place of standing in that, was in the Court (as shall be shewed) but only on that solemn festivity at the feast of Tabernacles, which was called שמחת בית השואבה The rejoycing at the drawing and pouring out of water: of which we give account in its due place.

c Mid. ubi supr.

c These steps that rose up to the Gate, were not laid in a square, or streight, as steps are ordinarily laid, but they were laid in a semicircle: And one reason of that may be for the gaining of room on either side them: d For on either side of the Gate and of the Steps, there were under-ground Chambers in the Wall, whose roof was even with the floor of the Court of Israel, the Doors opening into the Court of the Women; in which rooms the Levites used to lay up their musical instruments when they had done singing in the daily service in the Court of Israel: They came down the fifteen steps out of the Court; and at the bottom, stepping off either on the right hand or the left, there were Doors in the Wall into chambers where they laid their instruments up.

e Vid. Kimchi in Jer. XIX. 2. & in 2 King. XI. & R Sol. in 2 Chron. XXIII.

This Gate that we are now entring, or the Gate between the Court of the Women, and the Court of Israel e is held by some of the Jews to have been called by seven several names (besides the Gate of Nicanor, which in Herods Temple was the most common and known name of it) of some of which the matter indeed is clear, but of other there is doubting.

1. It was called The upper Gate of the Lords House, 2 King. XV. 35. 2 Chron. XXVII. 3. and so the Treatise Succah in the place cited before, doth expressly call it. f The upper Gate that goeth down out of the Court of Israel, into the Court of the Women: and the East Gate that went out of the Court of the Women into the Chel, was called g the lower. Now whereas it is said that Jotham built the upper Gate, it inferreth not, that there was no Gate before, but it meaneth that he repaired it, or that he added some buildings to it.

g Maim. in kel. Mikdash per. 7.

2. It is called the new Gate, Jer. XXVI. 10 & XXXVI. 10. in both which places the Chaldee Paraphrast expressly calleth it the East Gate of the Sanctuary of the Lord: It is apparent by that later place in Jeremy, that it was the Gate that went into the upper Court, or the Court of Israel, and so it both appears that it was the Gate that we are about, and also the reason of the title of the new Gate, may be collected from what was spoken a little before, namely because it had been repaired by Jotham. h Some give this reason of the title לפי שחסופרים חדשו חלכה namely, That it was called new, because the Scribes did there deliver new traditions; for there sate the Sanhedrin: but this derivation is far fetcht.

h Kimch. in loc.

3. The Gate Harsith, Jer. XIX. 2. is understood by some to mean this East-Gate of the Court of Israel that we are upon, though both the very Text of Jeremy himself, and also the Chaldee Paraphrast and other Jews with him, do not clearly allow of such a construction, but place the Gate Harsith in another place.

1. The Text of Jeremy doth place Tophet at the entry of that Gate Harsith, which how improper it is to apply to the East Gate of the Court of Israel is, easie enough for any one to judge, that doth but know that there were two Gates betwixt this Court Gate, and the valley that lay before the Temple, if that valley had been Tophet. But 2. Tophet or the valley of the Sons of Hinnom, lay a good way upon the right hand as you stood in the East Gate of the Temple, as was observed before, and faced the City Jerusalem, and not the Temple; and so the Gate Harsith must be one of the Gates that went out of Jerusalem into that valley, and not out of the Temple. 3. The Chaldee Paraphrast doth call it תרע קלקלתא which David Kimchi expoundeth, the Dung-port, and believeth it to be the same Dung-gate that is mentioned in Neh. II. 13. though I believe Nehemiahs

Dung-

Dung-Port was in another quarter. The word Harſith is of a twofold conſtruction: namely, either as derived from Heres חרס which ſignifieth the Sun, and ſo our Engliſh in the margin hath rendred it the Sun Gate, having tranſlated it the Eaſt Gate, in the Text: or from Heres חרס which ſignifieth a Potſheard; for there (ſaith Rabbi Solomon) they caſt out their broken Potſheards. We ſhall not need to be inquiſitive from whence this Gate did bear its name (whether from the Sun riſing upon it, or from ſome Idolatry committed to the Sun near to it, or from the Potters houſe hereabout, or from caſting out of broken pitchers at it) ſince it is not that Gate that we are about in the Temple, but a Gate of the City Jeruſalem, which we have not now to do withall.

4. Some of the i Hebrew Writers do underſtand שער איתון The Gate of entrance ſpoken of Ezek. XL. 15. to mean the Gate that we are about, namely the Eaſt Gate of the Court of Iſrael: for which reaſon it may be the Chaldee Paraphraſt hath tranſlated it תרעא קציעאה The middle Gate, as being between the Gate that cometh into the Court of the Women, and the Gate of the Porch of the Temple it ſelf. i Kimchin Jit. XIX R. Sol. in Ezek. XL.

5. Among the ſeven names that are given by the Rabbins to this Gate, that name of the middle Gate was one, as appeareth by the Authors in the places alledged, and this was the reaſon of the name, and we need to ſeek no further for it.

6. They alſo conceive that it was called the Gate Sur, 2 King. XI. 6. k or the Gate of departure, becauſe there thoſe thoſe that had been unclean, were ſeparated and put aſide, and might go no further, till their attonement was made. k 11. in 2 Chr. XXIII. ex Jeruſalmi.

7. And likewiſe the Gate of the Foundation, 2 Chron. XXIII. 5. but of theſe two we ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak afterward, and ſhall there examine whether this Gate have thoſe names or no.

8. But the name by which it was moſt famouſly known in the laſt daies of the Temple (and which it carried to its grave, or till the Temple and it were buried in ruine) was the Gate of Nicanor. l The upper Gate (ſaith Maymony) is the Gate of Nicanor: And why is it called the upper Gate? Becauſe it is above the Court of the Women: And to the ſame purpoſe, and in as plain terms ſpeaketh the Gloſs upon the treatiſe Sotah, m The Gate of Nicanor was the upper Gate, which was between the Court of Iſrael, and the Court of the Women. n And ſo the treatiſe Middoth, whenſoever it reckoneth the Gates of the Court of Iſrael, it ſtill maketh the Gate of Nicanor to be the Eaſt Gate: And that Maxim in the Jeruſalem Talmud כל מקום שנא לפני ו זה שער ניקנור, o Every place where it is ſaid, Before the Lord, it meaneth the Gate of Nicanor, confirmeth the ſame things, as appeareth by the cleanſing of the Leper, and the trial of the ſuſpected Wife, both which were ſet in this Gate, and are ſaid to be ſet before the Lord, Lev. XIV. 11. Numb. V. 18. l Maim. in Kelt Mikdaſh per. 7. m in Sotah per. 1. gloſſe. ibid. n Mid. per. 1. & per. 6. o Talm. Jeruſ. in Sotah per. 1.

And to take up, what is copiouſly ſaid by the Talmudiſts concerning this Gate, and concerning the reaſon why it was ſo called, from the mouth of one man, to ſave more labour let us hear the Author of Juchaſin concerning this matter, ſpeaking thus at large.

p Nicanor was in the time of the ſecond Temple: and I wonder at Rabb, that he did not mention him in the Catalogue of thoſe men that are upon record for Religiouſneſs: As he mentioneth Hananiah the Son of Ezekiah, the Son of Garon, in the beginning of the Treatiſe Shabbath, into whoſe chamber the Scholars of Shammai and Hillel came: And ſo Aba Saul ben Batuith, in the end of the Treatiſe Shabbath. Now this Nicanor that is often mentioned in the Miſhneh was one of the Chaſidim (or religious) but the common people are not ſo. He is mentioned in the firſt and ſecond Chapters of Middoth, as that there is a Gate in the Court on the Eaſt, which is the Gate of Nicanor, and that it had two Wickets, one on the right hand, and another on the left. And ſo it is ſaid in the ſixth Chapter of Shekalim, and that is ſet over againſt the moſt holy place which was Weſtward where the Divine Glory dwelt: And therefore in the end of the Treatiſe Beracoth, it ſaith, Let not a man uſe irreverence before this Gate of Nicanor, or the Eaſt Gate: And ſo in the firſt Chapter of Sotah. In the Gate of Nicanor, they make the ſuſpected wife drink the bitter water, and they purifie women after Childbirth, and Lepers. And in the end of the Chapter כיצד צולין (or the ſeventh Chapter of the Treatiſe Peſachin) It is ſaid, that the Gate of Nicanor was not holy (as the Court) becauſe Lepers ſtood there, and put in their thumbs and great toes into the Court: And ſo in the third Chapter of Joma, and the ſecond Chapter of Toſaphta, there it is ſaid, there were wonders wrought with the doors of Nicanor, and they mention it renownedly: And if ſo, then had it been fit to have recorded him. The ſtory is thus. This Nicanor was one of the Chaſiddim, and he went to Alexandria in Egypt, and made there two brazen doors with much curioſity: intending to ſet them up in the Court of the Temple, and he brought them away by ſea: Now a great ſtorm happening, the mariners caſt one of the doors over board to lighten the ſhip: and intended alſo to throw over the other alſo. Which when Nicanor perceived, he bound himſelf to the door with cords, and told them, that if they threw that in, they ſhould throw him in too: And ſo the Sea ceaſed from her rage: And when he was landed at Ptolemais, and bemoaned the loſs of his other door, and prayed to God about it, the Sea caſt up the door, in that place where the holy man had landed. But ſome p Juchaſin f. 65 col. 1. etiam Talm. Jeruſ. in Joma per. 3. Toſaphta ibid. per. 2. & Mid. per. 2. Aruchin voce Nicanor.

ſay a great fiſh caſt it up: And this was the miracle that was done about his doors, and they ſet them up on the Eaſt ſide of the Court, before the Temple. But in the books of Joſeph ben Gorion, he ſaith, That the Gate of Nicanor was ſo called, becauſe a wonder was done there, for there they ſlew Nicanor a Prince of the Grecians in the time of the Aſmoneans, and ſo it ſeemeth in the later end of the ſecond Chapter of the Treatiſe Taanith. Thus Jucaſin.

I ſhall not inſiſt upon it, to diſpute it out, whether of theſe things alledged were the cauſe of the name of this Gate, or whether ſomething elſe: Some other conjectures might be added, as whether Nicanor that ſent the doors from Alexandria were not he that was the Kings Chief Maſter of the Ceremonies there, of whom Joſephus maketh mention q and relateth how he provided Chambers and Diet for the Septuagint Tranſlaters: or whether this Gate were not ſo called in honour of Seleucus Nicanor the firſt King of Syria, who was a great favourer of the Jewiſh Nation r as the ſame Joſephus alſo relateth: But I ſhall leave the ſearching after the Etymology and original of the name to thoſe that have mind and leaſure thereunto: it ſufficeth to know the Gate by its name which was ſo renowned and famous in all Jewiſh Writers: only as to the ſtory about Nicanor a Grecian Prince being ſlain here, compare 1 Maccab. VII. 33, 34. &c. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 12. cap. 17.

Before we part from this Gate, we muſt remember to ſay ſomething about the Gate Sur, and the Gate of the Foundation of which there is mention, 2 King. XI. 6. & 2 Chron. XXIII. 5. becauſe that theſe are held by ſome, as was ſhewed before, to have been but names of this Eaſt-Gate of the Court that we are about.

The Texts where theſe names are mentioned do ſpeak to this purpoſe in our Engliſh Tranſlation.

2 King. XI.

Verſ. 5. A third part of you that enter in on the Sabbath, ſhall even be keepers of the watch of the Kings houſe.

6. And a third part ſhall be at the Gate Sur: and a third part at the Gate behind the guard, &c.

7. And two parts of you that go forth on the Sabbath, even they ſhall keep the watch of the houſe of the Lord, about the King, &c.

2 Chron. XXIII.

Verſ. 4. A third part of you entring in on the Sabbath, of the Prieſts and of the Levites ſhall be porters of the doors.

5. And a third part ſhall be at the Kings houſe, and a third part at the Gate of the foundation, &c.

The two Courſes of the Prieſts and Levites now preſent, namely that courſe that came in on the Sabbath, and the other that had ſerved their week and were now going out, Jehoiada divides either of them into three parts, into ſix in all. They that came in on the Sabbath were to be: 1. A third part of them for the Altar and ſervice, the Prieſts for the Sacrifices, and the Levites for Singers and Porters as in the conſtant duty and attendance. For it was now the Sabbath day, and had it been any other day, it is not to be imagined, that Jehoiada would neglect the affairs of God though he went about the affairs of the King: But he provides for both, ſo that the Temple Service may have its due attendance, as well as the Kings coronation. And therefore verſ. 5. of 2 King. XI. is neceſſarily to be rendred thus, A third part of you ſhall be thoſe that come in on the Sabbath: that, is a third part of you ſhall be as thoſe that come in on the Sabbath to attend the Service as at other times. And is ſo 2 Chron. XXIII. 4. to be tranſlated, A third part of you ſhall be thoſe that come in on the Sabbath, for Prieſts, and Levites, and Porters: that is, to attend the Altar, Song and Gates as in the conſtant ſervice.

2. Another third part, for Keepers of the Watch at the Kings Houſe.

3. And another third part at the Gate Sur, which is alſo called the Gate of the Foundation.

Thus the Text in the two Books laid together do plainly diſtribute the courſe that was to come in on the Sabbath, as he will ſee that will carefully compare them together in the original.

The courſe that was going out on the Sabbath was diſpoſed, 1. One third part of them to the Gate behind the Guard. 2. Two third parts to keep the watch of the Houſe of the Lord for the ſafety of the King.

Now the very diſpoſal of theſe Guards will help us to judge concerning the Gates that we have in mention, and will reſolve us that they were not any Gates of the Temple at all, but that they ſtood in ſome place elſe. For the Gates of the Temple were guarded by the Porters of the courſe that came in as in the ordinary manner: and there was an extraordinary Guard added beſides throughout all the Mountain of the Houſe, and in the Court, of that courſe that was going out, 2 King. XI. 7, 8. 11. Therefore the Gate Sur or the Gate of the Foundation, which was guarded by a third part of thoſe that come in on the Sabbath, cannot be ſuppoſed for any Gate of the Temple, ſince the Temple was guarded guarded by two parts of thoſe that went out. So that were I to deſcribe the City as I am now about deſcribing the Temple, I ſhould place the Gate Sur ſomewhere in Sion, and there alſo ſhould I place the Gate behind the Guard: and it would not be very hard to gather up fair probability of their ſituation there. Now though ſo ſtrong Guards were ſet both in the Temple and in Zion, yet Athaliah for whom all this ado is made, comes up into the Temple, ſo far as to ſee the young King at his Pillar in the Court before the Eaſt-Gate, and no man interrupts her, partly becauſe ſhe was Queen, partly becauſe ſhe came alone, and chiefly becauſe they knew not Jehoiadas mind concerning her. But when he bids have her out of the ranges, they laid hold upon her, and ſpared her till ſhe was down the Cauſey Shallecheth, and then they ſlew her.

If by the ranges, the ranks of men that ſtood round about the Mountain of the Houſe, be not to be underſtood, I ſhould then think they mean either the ranks of Trees that grew on either ſide that Cauſey, or the Rails that were ſet on either ſide it for the ſtay and ſafety of thoſe that paſſed upon it. And to this ſenſe Levi Gerſhom doth not unproperly expound thoſe words in 1 King. X. 12. Of the Almug Trees the King made מסעד for the houſe of the Lord and for the Kings houſe. The word מסעד doth properly ſignifie a Prop or Support: yet is expreſſed in 2 Chron. IX. 11. The King made of the Almug Trees מסלות high ways to the houſe of the Lord: And q I think (ſaith the Rabbin) that in the aſcent that he made to go up to the houſe of the Lord from the Kings houſe, he made as it were battlements (that is Rails on either ſide) of the Almug Trees, that a man might ſtay himſelf by them, as he went along the highway of that aſcent. And ſo in other aſcents of the houſe of the Lord or of the Kings houſe, where there were not ſteps, as the riſe of the Altar, &c.

SECT. I.

A credible wonder of the brazen Gate.

WE will leave the belief of that wonder that hath been mentioned about the brazen Door of Nicanor in its ſhipwrack, to thoſe that record it: but we may not paſs over another wondrous occurrence related by Joſephus, of the brazen Gate (whether this of Nicanor, or the other which he calleth the brazen Gate, as by its proper name, we will not be curious to examine) which is a great deal more worthy of belief, and very well deſerving conſideration: He treating of the Prodigies and wonders that preſaged the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, amongſt others he relateth this. Ἡ δὲ Ἀνατολικὴ πύλη τῆς ἐνδοτέρω χαλκῆ μὲν ὅσα καὶ σιδήρου τὴν, &c. The Eaſt-Gate of the inner Temple, being of braſs and extream heavy, and which could hardly be ſhut by twenty men; being barred and bolted exceeding ſtrong and ſure, yet was it ſeen by night to open of its own accord: which the ſimpler and more fooliſh people did interpret as a very good Omen, as if it denoted to them, that God would open to them the Gate of all good things: But thoſe of a deeper reach and ſounder judgment, did ſuſpect that it preſaged the decay and ruine of the ſtrength of the Temple.

a Joſ. de bell. lib. 6. cap. 31.

And with this relation of his do other writers of his own nation concurr, who report, b That forty years before the deſtruction of the City, the doors of the Temple opened of their own accord: Whereupon Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai (after chief of the Sanhedrin) cryed out, Open thy doors O Lebanon that the fire may devour, And from that time the great Sanhedrin flitted from the room Gazith, and ſo removed from place to place. The like ſaith Rabbi Solomon on Zech. XI. 1. Open thy doors O Lebanon: c He prophecieth (ſaith he) of the deſtruction of the ſecond Temple: and forty years before the deſtruction, the Temple doors opened of their own accord: Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai rebuked them: and ſaid, O Temple, Temple, how long wilt thou trouble thy ſelf? I know thy beſt is to be deſtroyed, for Zechariah the Son of Iddo prophecied thus of thee, Open thy doors O Lebanon that the fire may devour thy Cedars, &c.

b Juchaſin. f. 101

c R. Sol. in Zech. XI. 1

There are three remarkable things which the Jews do date from forty years before the deſtruction of the Temple: namely this of the Temple doors opening of themſelves, and the Sanhedrins flitting from the room Gazith, and the Scarlet Liſt on the Scape-goates head not turning white, that are as Teſtimonies againſt themſelves about the death of Chriſt, which occurred exactly forty years before the Temple was deſtroyed: Then the Lord ſhewed them by the Temple doors opening, the ſhaking of their Eccleſiaſtical glory, and by the flitting of the Sanhedrin, the ſhaking of their civil, and by the not whitening of their Scarlet liſt which had denoted pardon of ſin, their deep die of ſin and guilt for the death of Chriſt. Compare this ſelf-opening of the Temple doors with the renting of the Veil of the Temple of its own accord, and they may help the one to illuſtrate the other. And methinks the words of Rabban Jocanan upon the opening of the doors, O Temple how long wilt thou diſquiet thy ſelf? do ſeem to argue that before that opening there had been ſome other ſuch ſtrange trouble in the Temple as that was, which might be the renting of the Veil.

SECT. II.

A Sanhedrin ſitting in this Gate.

THIS Gate of Nicanor or the Eaſt-Gate of the Court, was the place where the ſuſpected Wife was tried by drinking of the bitter waters, and where the Leper cleanſed ſtood to have his attonement made, and to have his cleanſing wholly perfected, the rites of both which things we have deſcribed in their places. In this Gate alſo did Women after child-birth appear for their purification; here it was that the Virgin Mary preſented her Child Jeſus to the Lord, Luke II. 22.

a Talm. in Sanhedr. per. 11. a In this Gate of Nicanor (not in the very paſſage through it, but in ſome room above or by it) there ſate a Sanhedrin of three and twenty Judges: Now there were three ranks of Judicatories among the Jews. A Judicatory or Conſiſtory of three: A Judicatory of three and twenty: and the great Sanhedrin of ſeventy one. In ſmaller Towns there was a Triumvirate or a Conſiſtory ſet up conſiſting only of three Judges: b theſe judged and determined about mony matters, about borrowing, filching, damages, reſtitutions, the forcing or inticing of a maid, pulling off the ſhoe, and divers other things that were not capital, nor concerned life and death, but were of an inferiour concernment and condition. In greater Cites there were Sanhedrins of three and twenty, which judged in matters of life and death in ſome caſes; but raught not to all: And there was the great Sanhedrin at Jeruſalem which was to judge of the greateſt matters. Now a Sanhedrin of three and twenty was not ſet up in any great City, but only in ſuch a one as in which were 120 men fit to bear office. כמה יהא בעיר ותהא ראויה לסנהדרין מאה ועשרים How many are to be in a City that it may be fit to have a Sanhedrin ſet up in it? It is a queſtion of the Talmuds own propoſing, and it giveth this anſwer, That there are to be 120. compare Act. I. 15. And into what offices or places theſe are to be diſtributed, might be alledged out of the Gemariſts and Maymony, if it were pertinent to this place: Only theſe many let us name of them. c Every Sanhedrin of three and twenty, had three forms of Probationers of three and twenty in every form: and when there was need of a man in the Sanhedrin, the biggeſt in the firſt form was fetched in, and made Judge: and the higheſt in the ſecond form came in and ſate loweſt in the firſt form: and the higheſt in the third form came up and ſate loweſt in the ſecond: and ſome other man was found out from abroad, to ſit loweſt in the third form: and ſo the Sanhedrins and the forms were ſtill kept full.

c Maym. in Sanhedr. per. 1.

Now as the great Sanhedrin ſate in the Temple, ſo alſo did two leſſer Sanhedrins of three and twenty a piece, the one in the Gate Shuſhan, or the Gate of the Mountain of the Houſe, and the other in this Gate of Nicanor, or the Gate of the Court: And their riſing to be Judges in the higheſt Court of Seventy one, was firſt by degrees through theſe two.

d Id. ibid. per. 2. d Whoſoever was found a man of fit and competent qualifications, he was firſt made a Judge in his own City: and thence he was promoted into the Judicatory in the Gate of the Mountain of the Houſe, and from thence into the Judicatory in the Gate of the Court, and ſo at laſt into the great Sanhedrin. In ſome of theſe Judicatories in the Temple our Saviour ſhewed his wiſdom at twelve years old, Luke II. 46. And ſome of theſe Judges were they that tempted him with the queſtion about the Woman taken in Adultery, which was brought to be judged before them, John VIII. 4, 5.

In the times before the captivity into Babylon the great Sanhedrin it ſelf ſate in theſe two Gates, ſometimes in the one, and ſometimes in the other, as they thought good, Jer. XXXIV. 4. & XXVI. 10. & XXXVI. 10. but in after times when the room Gazith was built, and the great Sanhedrin of Seventy one betook it ſelf thither, theſe two Gates were furniſhed, either of them with a leſſer Sanhedrin of three and twenty: The place of their ſitting was in ſome room over the Gate: for as it was not poſſible for them to ſit in the very paſſage through which people went and came, ſo was it not lawful for them to ſit in the Gate of Nicanor, in that part of the Gate that was within the Court; for within the Court might no man ſit but the King only. Yet might they ſit in the upper rooms though they were within the compaſs of the Courts, for they held them not of ſo great a holineſs as was the ſpace below.

This is the Gate of which Ezekiel ſpeaketh, Chap. XLVI. 1, 2. The Gate of the inner Court that looked toward the Eaſt, ſhall be ſhut for the ſix working days: but on the Sabbath it ſhall be opened, and in the day of the New Moon it ſhall be opened: And the Prince ſhall come by the way of the porch of that Gate without, and ſhall ſtand by the poſt of the Gate, &c. Before this Gate within had Solomon pitched his brazen Scaffold, on which he kneeled and prayed at the Conſecration of the Houſe, 2 Chron. VI. 13. compared with 1 King. VIII. 22. and in after times the Kings entring in at this Gate had their ſtation within it, as he had given them example, and there ſtood the Kings Pillar as it is called,

2 Chron.

2 Chron. XXIII. 13. that is, his ſeat was ſet within this Gate in the Court by one of the Pillars that bare up the Cloiſter: For as this Eaſt quarter of the Court was the moſt proper place for the people to worſhip in, ſo moſt eſpecially in that place of it which did moſt directly face the door of the Temple and the Altar before it, and that was in the very entrance up from this Gate it ſelf, and here was the King ſeated by one of the Pillars. Something according to this diſpoſal of the King in his place in the Court doth Ezekiel ſpeak, though in his deſcription there is ſome kind of difference for miſtery ſake. You may obſerve in him, that the Eaſt-Gate of the outer Sanctuary was continually ſhut, and the Eaſt-Gate of the inner was ſhut all the ſix days of the week, which were not indeed ſo in the common uſe of the Temple as it ſtood, for both the Gates were daily opened, but he hath ſo charactered them for the higher magnifying of that glory which he ſaith was now entred into the Temple: And whereas indeed the King in his worſhipping did go within the Court, or within the Gate and there worſhip, and there ſit down in the time of Divine Service, he hath brought in the Prince but to the poſts of the Gate, and there ſtanding whileſt his Sacrifice was offering: By his deſcription every one that came up to this Gate, muſt either enter at the North-Gate or South-Gate of the Court of the Women, becauſe the Eaſt-Gate was ſhut, Chap. XLIV. 1. and hereupon is that Injunction, that when the people of the land come before the Lord in the Solemn Feaſts, he that entreth in by the way of the North-Gate to worſhip, muſt go out by the way of the South-Gate, and he that entreth by the way of the South-Gate, muſt go forth by the way of the North-Gate: he muſt not return by the way of the Gate whereby he came in. Chap. XLVI. 9. Whereas in the common acceſs to the Temple, as it ſtood either before or after the captivity, the Eaſt-Gate of the Court of the Women was conſtantly open, and their moſt ordinary coming in was at that Gate, and ſo they went up through the Court of the Women to the Gate of Nicanor, yea and oftentimes within it into the Court: Yet did they imitate and follow this preſcript of the Prophet, under the ſecond Temple, in not returning and going out at the ſame Gate at which they had come in; The Talmudiſts have this Tradition about this matter, כל הרואין הנכנסין לדרך הבירה נכנסין דרך ימין ומקיפין ויוצאים דרך שמאל e All that come to the Temple according to the cuſtom of the place, come in at the right hand, and fetch a compaſs and go out at the left, which meaneth not (as the Gloſſaries do explain it) that a man was always to go out at the Gate oppoſite to that Gate at which he came in, but that he may not go out at the ſame Gate at which he came in, but at ſome other: as came he in at the Eaſt-Gate, he muſt not go out at the Eaſt-Gate again, but at the North or South: Only they give exception in two ſorts of perſons חוץ ממי שארעו דבר to whom particular occurrences had befallen, for they went about ſtill to the left hand. What is the matter with thee that thou goeſt that way? Becauſe I am a mourner. Now he that dwelleth in this houſe comfort thee. Or becauſe I am an excommunicate: Now he that dwelleth in this houſe put into thy heart that thou mayeſt hearken to the words of thy fellows, and they may receive thee.

e Mid. pir. 21

So that the common and ordinary way of coming into the Temple to worſhip, was to come in at the Eaſt-Gate of the Court of the Women, and up to the Gate of Nicanor, and there to worſhip and ſo back again, and out at the North or South door of that Court: The Phariſee in the Parable went up to this Gate as far as he could go, becauſe he would put his ſeeming devotion to the fartheſt, but the poor Publican ſtood a far off. Luke XVIII. 13. Even the King himſelf, though he came in on the Weſt-quarter of the Mountain of the Houſe, yet came he down hither to go into the Court of the Women, and ſo up through the Eaſt Gate of the Court, to his ſeat which was before that Gate. The ſtationary men, of whom we have ſpoken in due place, they went within the Gate into the Court of Iſrael, and ſo did other Iſraelites at the Solemn Feſtivals when there were abundance of Sacrifices, eſpecially at the Paſsover, and he that brought a ſingle Sacrifice, went into the Court at one of the North-Gates of it, of which we ſhall ſpeak when its courſe comes: but ordinarily a man that came into the Temple to pray or to worſhip, and brought not a Sacrifice, he worſhipped before the Gate of Nicanor which faced the Gate of the Temple, and ſo returned.

CHAP. XXI.

Of the Gates and Buildings in the Court-wall on the East and South sides.

AND now are we come within the Court, where having very many things to survey and take notice of, let us first begin with viewing the Gates and Buildings that were in the Wall which did incloſe it; and first of all let us obſerve the East quarter of the Wall, in which the Gate of Nicanor was, which we have newly ſurveyed and at which we entred: There was never a Gate but this in all this East Quarter, nor were there any Buildings in the Wall in this Quarter, but only two, which ſtood on either ſide of the Gate one, and near to the Gate, on your right hand and on your left as you entred in.

a Mid. per. 1. a That on your right hand was called לשכת פנחס המלביש The Chamber of Phineas the Wardrobe man: of whom there is mention in the Treatiſe Shekalim, among the chief Officers in the Temple, Theſe are the chief Officers in the Sanctuary, (b ſaith the Talmud there) Jochanan the Son of Phinehas over the Seals: Ahijah over the Drink-Offerings: Mathia the Son of Samuel over the Lots: Pethahiah over the Birds (for Sacrifice) this Pethahiah was Mordecai, &c. Phinehas over the Wardrobe, &c. Now the Gloſs upon that place ſaith that theſe men named, were the eminenteſt and worthieſt men that ever were in theſe ſeveral Offices, and that they were not all in one, but in ſeveral generations: Bartenora conceiveth that the Office of this Phinehas was, c to array the Prieſts, when they were to go into ſerve, and to diſarray them again when they had done, and to keep their cloathes. Which we are not to underſtand of his helping them on and off with their Veſtments every day, when they went to and came from the ſervice, for they put them on and off themſelves, but he provided Veſtments for them at their firſt entring into the ſervice, and when they were old he took them into his cuſtody again and provided new. d Now this proviſion was at the publick charge, he only took care for it, and the garments being overworn, they were returned again, for the publick uſe, for we have obſerved elſewhere, that they were ravell'd into wick-yarn for the Lamps and for the great Lights at the Feaſt of Tabernacles, at the Rejoycing for the pouring out of water.

d Maym. in Kelim Mikd. per. 7.

On the left hand of the Gate was לשכת עשה חביתין The chamber of the Paſtry man, for ſo let us call him, a man that took care for the providing and preparing of the High-Prieſts dayly Meat-offering which in the Talmud Language is commonly called שתי הלחם חביתי כ"ג e The two cakes of the High-Prieſt, of which we have ſpoken in due place, and this his dayly Offering was one thing, f whereby he was differenced from an ordinary Prieſt.

f Maym. in Biath Mikd. per. 4.

There is much diverſity of opinion among the Jews, yea even in the Talmud it ſelf about the number of the Gates into this Court: In ſome places it reckons g ſeven, which indeed was the right number, but in ſome other places there is mention of h thirteen: Nay (i ſaith the Gloſs upon one place) ſome there are that reckon ſeven, ſome five, ſome three, ſome thirteen, but the generalty hold for ſeven. Now the reaſon of this difference is in regard that ſome of them reckon only the Gates of moſt conſtant and frequent paſſage, which were, eſpecially three, namely the Gate of Nicanor on the East, and one on the North, and one on the South, of which we ſhall ſpeak ere it be long: others reckon only the Gates which were guarded, which were only five: ſome it ſeems count what Doors went out of the Court, into buildings by it, as well as Gates to paſs through, and ſo they raiſe the number thirteen: But the number that we fix upon is ſeven, as moſt generally and moſt properly intertained, both by the Talmudicks and by Joſephus, in the ſecond Temple: And how many were in the firſt Temple, we ſhall ſay ſomething to before we have done with the Court. k On the South ſides were theſe three Gates. 1. שער מים The Water-Gate, which was moſt East of all the three, 2. שער בכורות The Gate of the Firſtlings, called alſo ſometimes שער הקרבן The Gate of Offering, this was in the middle. And 3. שער הדלק The Gate of kindling which was moſt Weſt.

g Mid. per. 1. & Joma fol. 19. 1

h Mid. per. 2. & Shekalim per. 6.

i Gloſſ. in Tamid. per. 1.

k Mid. per. 5. & Maym. in beth. habbech. per. 5.

Now beſides theſe three Gates on the South ſide, there were alſo three other Buildings in the Wall, which bare theſe names. 1. לשכת גזית The Room-Gazith. 2. לשכת גולת The Room of the Draw-well. And 3. לשכת העץ The Room of the Wood. And ſo we have the materials or ſubject of our Survey on this South ſide before us: let us now fall to work, and obſerve the ſituation and uſe of theſe ſeveral places.

And

And first o Josephus as he giveth testimony to this number that we fix upon, when he saith that ὁ ἐντὸς περίβολος πρὸς μὲν τὸ νότον καὶ βόρειον κλίμακα τεσσάρων πυλῶνας εἶχε, this inward bound had three Gates, North, and South, so doth he also give us good light for the situation of them when he saith, they were ἀλλήλων διεστῶτας, equidistant one from another. He had said much the like concerning the Gates that were in the outmost Wall or bound, (namely that that inclosed the Mountain of the House) that the Gates in it on the South side were p אמה that is, so set, as that there was an equal space betwixt Gate and Gate, and betwixt either Gate and the corners of the Wall: And so doth Symmetrie and the rules of the best proportion ingage us to understand his expression about these Gates in the like sense; namely, that they both stood at an equal distance one from another, and that the two outmost stood at the same distance from those corners towards which they stood.

o Antiq. lib. 15. cap. 15.

p Id. ibid.

Now the length of the Court (and so of this Wall) being an hundred eighty seven cubits, the situation of the Gates according to the Symmetry will fall into these proportions: From the East corner of the Wall, forty six cubits and three quarters upwards towards the West, was the very middle of the Water-Gate: As much forward still, was the middle of the Gate of the firstlings: the same measure still forward, was the middle of the Gate of kindling; and as much yet forward, taught to the West-Angle of the Wall: And so may we best and most uniformly conceive of the situation of the Gates. And therefore whereas the Hebrew Writers do most ordinarily when they speak of these Gates, say that they were סמוכים למערב q Near the West, it is not to be so taken as if they were all crowded toward the West corner, but it is spoken in comprehension of both Courts togither, the Womens and this.

q Vid. Maym. ubi supr. & ibid. Mid.

As for the three several buildings that were also on this side intermixed with the Gates, these things may be observed towards their posture and situation. 1. That the Water-Gate and the Draw-Well Room do seem by their very names to refer one to another, as that it is not proper to part them, and howsoever there was something else in the reason of the name of the Water-Gate, besides its standing so near the Draw-Well, yet shall we observe hereafter that this might be also one reason of the name of it, and that those two did indeed stand joyning together. 2. The Talmud saith the roofs of these three peeces of building were even (Mid. per. 5.) by which it seemeth that they stood not at distance one from another but conjoyning, but only that a Gate interposed between them. 3. We shall see anon out of the Jerusalem Talmud, that the Water-Gate and the Wood-room stood joyning together. 4. The Talmud, Maymony, and other of the Jewish Writers speaking of, and naming these three rooms, do ever set Gazith first or last, and thereby they shew that it stood on the out-side one way or other, East or West, and stood not in the middle. 5. If we set it further West, it will then stand in the Lot of Benjamin, whereas the great Sanhedrin which sate in it, r are held by the Jews, and that upon good ground, to have sitten in that part of the Court that was in the Tribe of Judah, Gen. XLIX. 10. Therefore in most propriety (these things considered) must it be concluded that Gazith did stand below the Draw-Well, the Draw-Well below the Water-Gate, or more toward the East corner of the Court; the Water-Gate below the Room of the Wood, and all these joyning together, as their situation will be confirmed in our further progress: we will first begin at the East corner where was the room or building Gazith.

CHAP. XXII.

The Chamber or Room Gazith, the seat of the Great Sanhedrin.

THE building Gazith (a so called because it was made of stone neatly wrought, as the word is used 1 King. V. 16.) appeareth b by the Author of Juchasin to have been built by Simeon ben Shetah c who was the Vice-President of the Sanhedrin, when Judah ben Tabbai was Nasi in the sixth Generation from Ezra, d even in the time of Hyrcanus Jannæus the Asmonæan. It was חציה קודש חציה חול e half of it holy, and half of it common; that is, half of it stood within the Court, and half of it without. And in that half of it that stood in the חול Chel, and it had a Door into either place. f And in that half of it that stood in the חיל Chel, did the Great Council or Sanhedrin sit, of seventy one Judges: Now a special reason why they sate on that side of the House, which was in the חיל Chel was, because it was not lawful for any Man whosoever to sit within the verge of the Court unless it were the King, אין ישבות בעזרה אלא למלכי בית דויד בלבד g there is no Man may sit in the Court unless it be one of the Kings of the House of David. In the other part of the of this building which ſtood within the Court, the Prieſts uſed to caſt lots daily for the diſtribution of the Service amongſt them; of which we have ſpoken largely elſewhere.

We cannot come ſo near the Great Sanhedrin, as to ſurvey the Room in which they ſate, but that we muſt take ſome notice of them before we go, and look a little into their conſtitution, ſitting, power and ſtory: They will not take it well if we paſs by them and take no notice of them at all.

h Talm. in Sanhedr. per. 1. The h number of the Judges in this High Court was ſeventy and one, anſwering to Moſes and the Seventy Elders choſen by him, when God in the Wilderneſs did firſt ordain this great Judicatory, Numb. XI. They were to be indifferently choſen of Prieſts, Levites, and Iſraelites, (the New Teſtament often expreſſeth the diſtinction, by Chief Prieſts, Scribes and Elders) אפי הוו כלם ישראל הרי זה מותר but if Prieſts and Levites fitly qualified were not to be found, i if all the Council were Men of other Tribes, it was good and lawful.

k Id. ibid. per. 2. Their k qualifications muſt be, that they muſt be Religious and Learned both in Arts and Languages: muſt have ſome skill in Phyſick, Arithmetick, Aſtronomy, Aſtrology, yea to know what belonged to Magick, Sorcery, and Idolatry, that ſo they might know to judge of them: They were to be without maim or blemiſh of body, Men of years, but not extream old, becauſe commonly ſuch are of too much ſeverity, and they muſt be Fathers of Children, that they might be acquainted with tenderneſs and compaſſion.

Their manner of ſitting was thus; The eminenteſt among them for worth and wiſdom, they appointed to be the chief in the Council, and him they called the Naſi or Preſident, and him they took to repreſent Moſes. Then the next eminent, they choſe to be his ſecond, and him they called Abh beth Din, The Father of the Council, or Vice-Preſident. He ſate upon the right hand of the Naſi, (compare the Phraſe of ſitting on the right hand of power, Matth. XXVI. 64.) and then the whole Sanhedrin ſate on the one hand and on the other in a ſemicircle. On the right hand before them, and on the left there were two Clarks of the Council, one Regiſtred the acquitting Votes and Teſtimonies, and the other the caſting: compare, Matth. XXV. 33.

l Id. ibid. per. 3. The l proper and conſtant time of their ſitting, was from the end of the Morning Service, to the beginning of the Evening Service, and ſo their ſitting and the Divine Service did not claſh one with another: yet ſometime did occaſions that came before them, prolong their Seſſion even until night, and then they might determine the matter that they had been debating on by day: but they might not begin a new buſineſs by night: They violated their own cuſtom and tradition in judging of Chriſt by night.

It was in their power and cogniſance to judge all perſons, and all matters (yet inferior matters they meddled not withal, but referred them to inferior Courts) inſomuch that they judged a whole Tribe, a Prophet, the High-Prieſt: nay the King himſelf if there q Targ. in Ruth. I. 16. the Targum on Ruth hath this Gloſs in the firſt Chapter, Verſ. 16. q Naomi ſaid unto her, we are commanded to keep Sabbaths and Holy days, ſo that we may not walk above two thouſand cubits: Ruth ſaith, whitherſoever thou goeſt, I will go: Naomi ſaith, we are commanded not to lodge together with the heathen; Ruth ſaith, where thou lodgeſt I will lodge: Naomi ſaith, we are commanded to keep the ſix hundred and thirteen Commandments; Ruth ſaith, what thy people obſerve I will obſerve as if they were my people: Naomi ſaith, we are commanded not to worſhip ſtrange Gods; Ruth ſaith, thy God ſhall be my God: Naomi ſaith, we have four judicial deaths for offenders, ſtoning with ſtones, burning with fire, killing with the ſword, and hanging on the tree; Ruth ſaith, as thou dieſt I will die.

r Sanhedr. ubi ſupr. 1. Thoſe r whom they burned they uſed thus: They ſet them up to the knees in a Dunghil, and two with a Towel about his neck pulled and ſtrained him till he opened his mouth wide, and then they poured in ſcalding Lead which ran down into his bowels.

2. Thoſe that were ſtrangled, they alſo ſet up to the knees in a Dunghil, and two with a Towel ſtifled and ſtrangled him, the one pulling at the one end, and the other at the other, till he died.

3. Thoſe whom they ſlew with the Sword, they did it by beheading them.

4. Whom

4. Whom [s] they ſtoned they ſtoned naked: firſt one of the witneſſes threw him of puſhed him that he might daſh his loins againſt a ſtone, if that killed him, there was no more adoe, if it did not, the other witneſs took a great ſtone and daſhed it on his breaſt as he lay on his back, if that killed him there was an end, if not, all the people flang ſtones at him: This helps us to underſtand what is meant by the Witneſſes laying down their Garments at Saul's feet, at the ſtoning of Stephen, Act. VII. 58. namely becauſe they were to be imployed firſt in his ſtoning, and they laid by their upper Garments that they might not trouble them. And this illuſtrates that paſſage of our Saviour, which indeed alludes to this manner of ſtoning. Whoſoever ſhall fall upon this ſtone ſhall be broken: but on whomſoever it ſhall fall, it will grind him to powder, Matth. XXI. 44. for he that was ſtoned, was firſt hung upon a ſtone, and then a ſtone was daſhed upon him. Theſe that were ſtoned were alſo hanged: there is ſome diſpute among the Talmudiſts whether all were hanged that were ſtoned: but howſoever, they conclude that Blaſphemers and Idolaters were: and this helps us ſtill to underſtand the uſage of Stephen whom they condemned and ſtoned for blaſphemy, for ſo they made it: He was firſt daſhed upon a ſtone by one of the Witneſſes, and then a huge ſtone daſhed upon him by the other, yet died he not by either of theſe, but recovered his knees again, and died kneeling and praying, all the people flinging ſtones at him; and afterward he was hanged upon a Gibbet, and that night taken down and buried: for ſo was the Law that he ſhould not hang upon the Tree all night: Now his burial was different from the common burial of thoſe that were Executed: as Chriſt's was alſo, being beg'd by Joſeph of Arimathea: for whereas the Sanhedrin had two burying places for Executed Malefactors, one for thoſe that were ſtoned and that were burnt, and the other for thoſe that were ſlain with the ſword and that were ſtrangled, it appeareth that ſome devout Chriſtians took down the body of Stephen and made a ſolemn burial for him in ſome other place.

[s] Ibid. ptr. 6.

Although the Sanhedrin did ſit in the Temple, yet were the Executions without the City: as Levit. XXIV. 14. Deut. XVII. 5. Heb. XIII. 12. Act. VII. 58. whipping and ſtocking was executed often in the Temple, as Deut. XXV. 2. Jer. XX. 2. and for this purpoſe they had their שוטרים Sarjeants for Officers ready attending them continually for the execution of ſuch a penalty. שוטרים הם עלי מקל ורצועה [t] The Shoterim (ſaith Maymony) were ſuch as carried Rods and Whips: and they ſtood before the Judges: they went about the ſtreets and Inns to look to meaſures and weights, and to beat every offender: and all their doings were by the appointment of the Judges: and whomſoever they ſaw offending, they brought him to the Judges, and they judged him according to his offence.

This [u] great Sanhedrin in Gazith הם עקר תורה שנערל פיה ועמודי הוראה was the foundation of the traditional Law and pillar of inſtruction (compare the phraſe 1 Tim. III. 15.) and from them decrees and judgments went out for all Iſrael. And whoſoever believed Moſes and his Law, was bound to reſt upon them for matters of the Law. Thus Maymony in the place cited in the Margin. Therefore in all doubts, about Judicial matters, the ultimate recourſe was hither as to a determiner not to be doubted of or varied from. The manner was thus: [w] Had a Man occaſion to inquire about any ſuch matter, he went firſt to the Judicatory that was in his own City: if they could reſolve it, well and good: if they could not, one of them went to the next Sanhedrin: if that could not reſolve it, he went to the Sanhedrin of the three and twenty in the Gate of the Mountain of the Houſe: if that could not, he went to the other Sanhedrin of three and twenty in the Gate of Nicanor: and if that could not, he went to this in the Room Gazith, and there he received a poſitive determination: which for him being a Judge to tranſgreſs againſt, it brought him under the notion of זקן ממרא A rebellious Elder, and in danger of trying for his life.

SECT. I.

The Preſidents of the Sanhedrin from the Captivity to its diſſolution.

HAving digreſſed thus far in viewing the Judicatory that ſate in the Room Gazith, let it be excuſable yet a little further to interrupt our further ſurvey ſo far as to take a Catalogue and notice alſo particularly of all the heads or Preſidents of this Court, in the generations, from the return out of the Babylonian Captivity, till City, Temple and Sanhedrin came to nothing: as their names and order are recorded in the Jewiſh Writers: as in the Talmudick Treatiſe Avoth: in Avoth Rabbi Nathan: in the Preface of Maymony to Jadh: in the Author of Juchaſin: and in diſperſed paſſages in the Talmuds.

1. The firſt was Ezra, of whom there is ſo renowed mention in the Scripture. The Sanhedrin of his time, is ordinarily called by the Jews כנסת גדולה the great Synagogue, and thoſe eminent perſons are reckoned of it, which are named, Ezr. II. 2. Zerubbabel, Joſhua, Nehemiah, Seraiah, Reelaiah, Mordecai, &c. He is ſaid to have come up to Jeruſalem in the ſeventh year of Darius, Ezr. VII. 8. which was four and twenty years after the peoples return return out of Babylon, and how the Sanhedrin was diſpoſed of before that time, is hard to determine. His Sanhedrin or great Synagogue is ordinarily reckoned of an hundred and twenty Men (compare Act. I. 15.) but whether all at once or ſucceſſively, it is not much important to diſpute here. He lived by the computation of ſome Chroniclers of his own Nation, till that very year that Alexander the Great came to Jeruſalem, and then died on the tenth day of the month Tebeth: and ſo by their account he wore out both the Babylonian and Perſian Monarchies; they hold alſo that Haggai, and Zachary, and Malachi died the ſame year with him, and then Prophecy departed. Compare Act. XIX. 2.

2. Simeon the juſt: Some Hebrew Writers that doubt not that he was head of the Sanhedrin, do yet queſtion whether he were High Prieſt, or an ordinary Prieſt, but Joſephus who wrote in Greek, aſſerteth him for High Prieſt: And ſome again that hold him to have been High Prieſt can find in their hearts to think that he was the very ſame with Jaddua, but Joſephus doth clearly diſtinguiſh them, placing Simeon after Jaddua and Onias between. The times of his Government may be diſcovered by obſerving that Eleazer his Brother who ſucceeded him in the High Prieſthood was he, to whom Ptolomy Philadelphus ſent for the Septuagint, to tranſlate the Bible. There are exceeding high things ſpoken of this Simeon by his Countrymen, ſome of which, we have mentioned elſewhere; to which I ſhall only add this record of him, That in his time the ſcarlet liſt on the Scape-Gotes head turned white: that the lot for the Scape-Goat ever came up in his right hand: that the weſtern Lamp never went out, and the fire on the Altar ever burnt pleaſantly, but when he died its force abated. This Adagie is aſcribed to him: The world ſtandeth upon three things, upon the Law, upon Religion, and upon ſhewing Mercy; He was ſurnamed, the Juſt, διὰ τε τὸ πρὸς θεὸν ἐυσεβὲς ἡ τὸ πρὸς τὸς ὁμοφύλας ἔυνον, Both becauſe of his piety towards God, and his good will towards his Nation, Joſph. Ant. lib. 12. cap. 2.

3. Antigonus of Soco: He was the Maſter of Sadoc and Baithus, who miſtaking and miſconſtruing his good Doctrine, vented the Hereſie againſt the Reſurrection: his Doctrine was this, Be not as Servants that ſerve their Maſter becauſe of receiving a reward, but be as Servants that ſerve their Maſter, not becauſe of receiving a reward, but let the fear of Heaven be upon you: which his crooked Diſciples conſtrued into this impious ſenſe, that there was no reward at all to be had for the ſervice of God, and ſo they denied the world to come. But his Scholars, Joſeph ben Joezer and Joſeph ben Jochanan held orthodox.

4. Joſi, or Joſeph, ben Joezer of Zeredah (Jeroboams Town, 1 King. XI. 26.) he had Joſi or Joſeph ben Jochanan of Jeruſalem for his Vice-Preſident. Here the Talmudick Records begin to reckon them זוגות by couples, That is, the Preſident and Vice-Preſident both: not but that there were Vice-Preſidents before, but they be not named, and ſo were there after the times of Hillel alſo, though they be not named then neither.

This Joſeph ben Joezer had Children ſo untoward, that he would not leave them his Land but bequeathed it to pious uſes.

5. Joſhua the Son of Perchiah Preſident: Nittai the Arbelite Vice-Preſident. This Joſhua is Recorded to have lived in the time of King Jannai, called alſo Alexander, the Son of Hyrcanus: This Hyrcanus was likewiſe called Jannai; he affected the Kingdom, and thereupon the wiſe men or great ones of that time would have put him from the High Prieſthood: but he maintained his ſtation by the ſword, for he ſlew divers of the wiſe men, which cauſed Joſhua the Son of Perahiah to flee to Alexandria, but he was recalled, upon the mediation of Simeon ben Shetah.

6. Judah the Son of Tabbai Preſident: Simeon ben Shetah Vice-Preſident. A gallant pair for integrity and juſtice: Were their lives to be written, moſt eminent actions of theirs might be related which are recorded of them: as that they hanged fourſcore Witches in one day: Judged King Jannai: the one of them wept daily for an error of Judgment that he had committed, and the other preferred the execution of juſtice, before the ſafety of his own Son. This Simeon ben Shetah is he whom we ſuppoſe the builder of this Room Gazith that we are ſurveying.

7. Shemaiah Preſident, and Abtalion Vice-Preſident: Theſe were Kinſmen, and of the poſterity of Sennacharib, but their Mother was an Iſraelite.

8. Hillel Preſident, and Shammai Vice-Preſident: At firſt it was Hillel and Menahem, but Menahem departed to the ſervice of Herod: Hillel was one of the eminenteſt that ever was among the Jewiſh Doctors both for birth, learning, rule and children: He was of the ſeed of David by his Mothers ſide, being of the poſterity of Shephatiah the Son of Abital, David's Wife. He was brought up in Babel, from whence he came up to Jeruſalem at forty years old, and there ſtudied the Law forty years more, under Shemaiah and Abtalion, and after them he was Preſident of the Sanhedrin forty years more: The beginning of his Preſidency is generally concluded upon to have been juſt an hundred years before the Temple was deſtroyed: by which account, he began eight and twenty years before our Saviour was born, and died when he was about twelve years old. He is renowned for his fourſcore Scholars, one among which was Jonathan ben Uzziel, the Chaldee paraphraſt, &c.

9. Rab-

9. Rabban Simeon, Hillel's Son: This man was firſt dignified with the title Rabban, he is ſuppoſed to be the Simeon mentioned Luk. II. that took Chriſt in his Arms, and for that, it is conceived that he is not of ſo frequent and honourable mention among the Jewiſh Writers as others of the ſame rank with him are, they not well reliſhing his confeſſion of Chriſt, whom they deny: He began his Preſidentſhip about the thirteenth year of our Saviours age, if the date and account of Hillel's rule mentioned before be current, and how long he ſate Preſident, no one mentions, but ſome aſſert that his rule was not long. The Author of Juchaſin relateth that he is never mentioned in the Miſhneh, or in the Code of the Jews Traditions; it may be his embracing Chriſtianity made him cool towards their Traditions, ſo that there is none to Father on him, as there are on the other Doctors. It is like he was a ſecret profeſſor of Chriſt, as Nicodemus was, and kept both his place and profeſſion.

10. Rabban Gamaliel, Simeons Son: This was he under whom Paul was brought up, Act. XXII. 3. and ſee Act. V. 34. He was Preſident of the Council when Chriſt was arraigned: and lived two and twenty years after: Onkelos the Targumiſt of the Law, did ſolemnly celebrate his Funerals: He is commonly ſtyled Rabban Gamaliel the old, either becauſe he was the firſt of that name, or becauſe he was of a long life: Of him they have this ſaying in the laſt Chapter of the Treatiſe Sotah: From the time that Rabban Gamaliel the old died, the honour of the Law failed, and purity and Phariſaiſm died.

11. Rabban Simeon, Gamaliel's Son: He was ſlain at the deſtruction of the Temple: and ſo ſhould his Son alſo have been, had not Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai, being in favour with Cæſar, begged his life: And thus have we followed the ſucceſſion of the Preſidents of the Sanhedrin till the Temple and City fell: but the Sanhedrin fell not as yet, but continued in a flitting and languiſhing condition for a good ſpace ſtill, and had its Preſidents till it fell alſo, which were theſe:

12. Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai: He was not of the blood of Hillel, but he was his Scholar: He came to be Preſident upon the death of Rabban Simeon laſt mentioned; his Sanhedrin ſate at Jabneh.

13. Rabban Gamaliel of Jabneh: This was Rabban Simeon's Son whom Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai begged from death, of the hands of Cæſar, at the ſlaughter of his Father, his minority made him unfit for the Preſidency when his Father was ſlain, therefore Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai, bare that place, and after his death this Rabban Gamaliel ſucceeded.

14. Rabban Simeon, the Son of Gamaliel of Jabneh.

15. Rabbi Judah, the Son of this Rabban Simeon: He is eminently called Rabbi and Rabenu haccadoſh: He collected and compiled the Miſhnaioth.

16. Rabban Gamaliel, the Son of Rabbi Judah: Here the title Rabban expired: and the Sanhedrin was gone.

CHAP. XXIII.

The Draw-Well Room. לשכת הגולה

AT the Weſt end of this famous Room Gazith, there was the Houſe which was called לשכת גולה the Houſe or Room of the Draw-Well: and the reaſon of the name was, ששם היה בור קבוע הגלגל נתון עליו ומשם מספיקים מים לכל העזרה a Becauſe there was a Well ſunk there, with a wheel over it, and from thence they fetched up water to ſerve all the Court. a Mid. per. 5.

It was not a little water that was uſed and ſpent at the Temple for the filling of the Lavers, boiling the Offerings, waſhing the Sacrifices, nay for waſhing of the Court, and filling Ciſterns for the Prieſts to bath in: It was not a ſmall quantity of water that did ſerve theſe turns, and yet the Temple never wanted, but had it always in great abundance: The place it ſelf was dry, rocky, and without water, b but they conveyed their water in pipes thither from a place at ſome diſtance where there was a ſpring head that lay convenient for ſuch a purpoſe, which was called עין עיטם The fountain Etam: Of this the Babylon Talmud diſcourſeth in the place alledged in the Margin and to this purpoſe, c The Houſe of the Sanctuary was higher than the Land of Iſrael, and the Land of Iſrael was higher than other Lands: They knew not the like: as they produce in the Book of Joſhua; It is written throughout. The border went down, and the border went up, and the border reached, &c. But of the Tribe of Benjamin it is written the border went up, but it is not written the border went down. Learn from hence, that this was a place thought fit to build the Sanctuary in, by the Fountain Etam, becauſe it was high: But they ſaid, let us bring it a little lower, becauſe it b Maym. in Beath. Mikdaſh. per. 5.

c Zevachin, per. 5. fol. 54. fac. 2.

it is written, And he ſhall dwell between his ſhoulders, Deut. XXXIII. 12. Their meaning is this; that whereas the Sanctuary was to be higher than the reſt of the Land, and whereas the tenor and ſcope of the Scripture holdeth out the Tribe of Benjamin to be higheſt, becauſe all aſcending and no going down is mentioned in the Chorography of his Tribe, therefore they thought of building the Temple by the Fountain Etam which was the higheſt ground of Benjamin: but when they conſidered upon Moſes his prophecy that God ſhould dwell between the ſhoulders of Benjamin and not upon his head; they thereupon choſe Moriah a lower ground, and brought their water from Etam thither: d An Aquæduct came from Etam, ſaith the Jeruſalem Talmud in the place quoted in the Margin: It is ſcarce within the bounds of the ſubject that we have in hand, to go about to ſearch where this Etam was. There is a place in the Tribe of Simeon that is called by this name, 1 Chron. IV. 32. now though it is true that Simeon and Judah lay intermixed in their habitations, yet I believe this intermixture was not ſo near Jeruſalem as our Etam was. There is mention of the Rock Etam, Judg. XV. 8. and of the City Etam, 1 Chron. XI. 6. let the Reader be his own chooſer whether of theſe he will take for the place that we are upon, or whether he will refuſe both: I only mention them; It belongeth rather to a ſurvey of the Land, than of the Temple, to debate the matter to a determination.

d Talm. Jeruſ. in Joma per. 3. fol. 41.

e Gloſſ. in Zechir. ubi ſupr. f Num. on Joſh. XVIII.

The Gloſs upon the place of the Talmud cited above, ſaith e It ſeemeth that the Fountain Etam was the Well of the waters of Nephtoah, of which there is mention, Joſ. XVIII. 15. And to the like purpoſe ſpeaketh Kimchi in this Comment upon that place of Joſhua, f They ſay (ſaith he) that the Well of the waters of Nephtoah was the Well Etam which is mentioned by our Rabbins: This place appeareth to have lain Weſtward of the Temple, and the Pipes from it to have come down upon that quarter, and to have paſſed along on the South-ſide of the Houſe it ſelf, in the place called the coming down of the waters, of which we have ſpoken before, and ſo to have been diſpoſed of into the ſeveral Offices about the Court: and that in ſuch abundance, as that it ran continually, and yielded water and to ſpare, upon all occaſions: we ſhall have occaſion to look after it again when we come to ſpeak of the Molten Sea.

g Ariſteas Hiſt. Lxx. Interp in Biblioth. patr. Tom. 2. Graecolat. pag. 866.

Of this conveyance of water, Ariſteas, an eye-witneſs and ſpectator of it, giveth teſtimony, in theſe words, g Ὑδατι δὲ ἀνέκλειπτον ἦν σύστασις, ὡς ἂν ἐκ πήγης ἔσωθεν πολυρρύτου ὑπαρχούσης, &c. There was a continual ſupply of water: as if there had ſprung an abundant Fountain underneath. And there were wonderful and unexpreſſible receptacles under ground, as appeared five furlongs ſpace about the Temple: each one of which had divers Pipes, by which waters came in on every ſide, all theſe were of Lead, underground, and much earth laid upon them: And there were many vents on the Pavement, not to be ſeen at all, but to thoſe that ſerved; ſo that in a trice and eaſily, all the blood of the Sacrifices could be waſhed away, though it were never ſo much. And I will tell you how I came to know of theſe underground receptacles: they brought me out more than four furlongs ſpace out of the City, and one bad me ſtoop down at a certain place and liſten what a noiſe the meeting of the waters made.

Now whereas it ſeemeth by this teſtimony, that water came to the Temple from ſeveral other places about Jeruſalem, as well as from Etam, we ſhall not be much ſcrupulous about it, though among the Talmudicks I meet with no ſuch intimation, but ſince they name Etam as the moſt eminent, and from whence the chiefeſt Veſſels in the Temple were continually ſupplied, it may ſuffice to look after that only, and this may be enough to have ſpoken of it.

h Goſſ. in Avenaroth in oclav. in Mid. per 5.

The Draw-Well, which and whoſe room we are now ſurveying h is ſaid to have been ſunk or digged by the Children of the captivity upon their return and building of the Temple. But whether to a Spring that was in that place, or whether as a Ciſtern to receive the water from Etam, if it ſhall be queſtioned, there might be ſeveral reaſons given to prove that it was for the later purpoſe: As, 1. Becauſe it is not eaſie to conceive a Spring in that rocky place as Mount Moriah was, eſpecially there having been none there looked after under the firſt Temple. 2. Becauſe both the Talmudiſts and Ariſteas cited before, do bring all the ſupply of water from other places. 3. Becauſe the Laver is ſaid in the teſtimony alledged out of the Jeruſalem Talmud, to be ſupplied from the Well Etam, which that it was ſupplied from this Draw-Well we ſhall ſee hereafter. And, 4. Becauſe there is mention of בית דורדת מים The place of the coming down of the water on the South ſide of the Temple, which hath been ſhewed in its due place, not capable of any conſtruction ſo proper as this, that the Pipes from Etam came down along there.

The waters then from that Fountain Etam being gathered into this Well or great Ciſtern, were from hence diſperſed into the ſeveral Offices and places where water was neceſſary (as the new River from the Water-houſe into London) a Wheel being uſed to raiſe it and force it up into the Pipes or conveyances that were to carry it into the ſeveral receptacles and uſes: For in ſome places there were Baths on the very top of the Gates, and buildings, as we ſhall obſerve as we go along, and to keep them full and in a continual ſupply of water, was required, ſome inforcing of the water up, which was done by the uſe and activity of this Wheel.

Now

Now over this Well there was a fair building, ſuitable to the reſt of the buildings about the Court, and it had a Door into the Court, that the Prieſts might readily and without going about, ſtep out of the Court into it, when they had occaſion to fetch up water for any uſe. And ſo are we to underſtand of that paſſage in the Treatiſe Tamid, where ſpeaking of him to whoſe lot it had fallen to cleanſe the Burnt-offering Altar in a morning, it ſaith thus: i He that had it allotted to him to cleanſe the Altar muſt cleanſe it: And they ſay to him, Take heed that thou touch not the Veſſel, until thou haſt waſhed thy hands and thy feet: (now the diſh into which he was firſt to take up the aſhes, was ſet between the riſe of the Altar and the Altar in a corner on the Weſt-ſide of the riſe:) No Man went into the Court with him (for all the reſt of the Prieſts ſtaid ſtill in the Lottery room) nor had he any Candle in his hand, but he went by the light of the fire on the Altar: and they ſaw him not, neither heard they his voice, until they heard the noiſe of the Engine that Ben Kattim made, namely the Engine of the Laver: and then they ſaid he is about waſhing his hands and feet at the Laver. Now whatſoever this Engine of Ben Kattim's making was, which we ſhall inquire into afterward, it is undoubted that the water in which he waſhed at the Laver, was drawn out of the Draw-Well and conveyed into it after what manner we ſhall ſee anon, for the water might not ſtand in the Laver all night: And ſo it is apparent that this Prieſt that thus waſhed his hands and feet, was got into the Well-room out of the Court, when the Gates of the Court were not yet opened, but went into it through a Door that went into that Room out of the Court. i Talm. in Tamid. per. 1.

This helpeth to underſtand that paſſage of Ezekiel of the living waters, Ezek. XLVII. which are ſaid there to come down on the right ſide of the Houſe on the South ſide of the Altar, verſ. 1. alluding to the coming of the water into the Temple from Etam a Spring ſhut up and a Fountain ſealed for that purpoſe: for the Pipes that brought the water from it, came down on the South ſide of the Temple, in the place that was called הורדת המים The coming down of the water, of which we have ſpoken already, and ſo into this Ciſtern in the Well-room, juſt over againſt the Altar, on the South ſide of it, and ſo was carried into the ſeveral Offices of the Temple, &c.

CHAP. XXIV.

The Water-Gate שער המים and the Room of Abhtines. עליית בית אבטינס

AT the Weſt end of the Draw-Well Room, was a Gate that opened directly upon the Altar, which was called a the Water-Gate. The Reader will readily conceive the reaſon of the name to have been, becauſe it joyned ſo cloſe to the Water-Houſe, and this Etymology might be very current and allowable, but the Talmudiſts give other reaſons of the name beſides. The Miſhneh in the Treatiſe Shekalim, hath this ſpeech upon it. b Why is the name of it called the Water-Gate? Becauſe through it the brought the Tankard of water, which was for the pouring out of water at the Feaſt of Tabernacles. Rabbi Eliezer the Son of Jacob ſaith, becauſe the waters ran out thereby, which came from under the threſhold, Ezek. XLVII. Of theſe two reaſons the former is more generally intertained for current, and it is indeed the more reaſonable in it ſelf. I have ſhewed in the Treatiſe of the Temple Service, Chap. XVI. Sect. 4. how high and how ſtrange a ſolemnity the Jews had at the Feaſt of Tabernacles, of pouring out of water upon the Altar, and rejoycing after it: For whereas all the year beſides their libation נסיך or pouring out the Drink-offering was of Wine alone, they now added and mingled water with it, and took ſuch joy and rejoycing upon that action, as the like was not uſed at any other occaſion: the manner and reaſon of which is fully diſcourſed in that place: c Now how was this libation of water? (ſaith the Talmud in Succah) There was a golden Tankard that contained three logs: One filled it at Siloam, and brought it in at the Water-Gate: and the Trumpets ſounded, &c. Siloam Fountain lay South of Jeruſalem (although the Pool of Siloam lay on the Weſt) and from thence the next way poſſibly to the Altar was through this Gate, it facing the Altar and the riſe to it, and it was no marvel, if, ſeeing the pouring out of water in libation was reputed ſo high a matter, the Gate through which it was brought did take its name from the bringing of that water through it. And it is not to be paſſed without obſervation, that they fetched their water for this ſolemn libation from Siloam a great way off, when the Draw-Well was ſo near at hand to have ſupplied it.

There is mention of a Water-Gate in Nehem. VIII. 3. where it is ſaid that Ezra read in the Book of the Law before the Street that was before the Water-Grte: but this was a Gate of the City, and not of the Temple, as is apparent in the ſame Book of Nehem. Chap. III. verſ. 26.

verſ. 26. and whether it took that name from the waters iſſuing out of Solomon's Pool and running that way, or from the waters running that way from the Temple, as Ezek. XLVII. 2. it is not a place here to diſcuſs.

d Talmid. Jeruſ. in Joma, per. 1.

Over d this Gate of the Temple that we are about, which was called the Water-Gate, there was a Room or Chamber which was called עליית בית אבטינס The Chamber of the Family of Abhtines. This Abhtines was one of the chief Men that gave denomination to the Office of which they were, to ſucceeding generations (as we obſerved e're while alſo about Phineas the Man of the Wardrobe, or Veſtry) and he is mentioned in the Treatiſe Shekalim, where all thoſe chief Officers are reckoned up, which Record let us here take out at large, e Theſe were chief Officers which were in the Temple: Jochanan the Son of Phinehas over the Seals: (what theſe Seals were, I have ſhewed in the Temple Service, pag. 16.) Ahijah over the Drink-offerings. Mathia the Son of Samuel over the Lots: (ſee there pag. 102, 103.) Pethahiah over the Birds: (ibid. 87, 88.) This Pethahiah is Mordecai: And why is his name called Pethahiah? becauſe he opened and expounded matters, and he underſtood the ſeventy Languages. Ben Ahijah over the Diſeaſed in their bowels. Nechonia the digger of Ciſterns: (ibid. pag. 17.) Gevini Keroz the Son of Gebber over the ſhutting of the Gates. Ben Bechi over the Correction (to cudgel the Prieſts or Levites that were found aſleep upon the Guards, ibid. pag. 50, 51.) Ben Arza over the Cymbal: (ibid. pag. 58.) Hagros ben Levi over the Song: Beth Garmu over the making of the Shew-bread: Beth Abhtines over the making of the Incenſe: Eliezer over the Vails: And Phinehas over the Wardrobe.

e Shekalim. per. 1.

So that this Abhtines was one that had the overſight of the making of the Incenſe: and all that ſucceeded in this Office were called Beth Abhtines or the Family of Abhtines, and this Room or Chamber over the Water-Gate, was the place where they did their work in this imployment.

Their traditionary Receipt for the compounding and making of the Incenſe was this: f They had eleven Aromatick ſimples of which they took theſe quantities: Of Stacte Onycha, Galbanum and Frankincenſe, of every one ſeventy pound weight: of Myrrhe, Caſſia, Calamus, Crocus, Ana ſixteen pounds. Of Coſtus twelve pound, of Cinnamon nine pound, of Cloves three, in all three hundred ſixty eight pound. All theſe they pounded very ſmall in a Mortar (wich was called g the Mortar of the Sanctuary, and which Mortar was carried h to Rome at the ſacking of Jeruſalem) and they added to it ſome Sodom Salt, Amber of Jordan (rarities not rarely ſpoken of in Jewiſh Writers) and an Herb of an odoriferous ſmoke, which very few were acquainted with: Every year they made this quantity of Incenſe, and every day in the year there was a pound of it offered, and ſo of the three hundred ſixty eight pound there was three hundred ſixty five pound gone: Of the three pounds that remain, the High-Prieſt took his handful on the day of Expiation: and the reſt was called מותר הקטורת The reſidue of the Incenſe: Not that the yearly ſtock was ſpent at the day of Expiation, for it was not ſpent till the beginning of the month Niſan, but that this was the account of the expence of it: On the firſt day of the month Niſan, or on their New-years-day, they began upon a new ſtock: i And the two pounds and odd that remained of the old, was given to work-men that repaired the Temple towards their pay: and then was bought of them again, and uſed as of a new ſtock. Every ſingle ſpicery was pounded by it ſelf, and all the while that he that pounded it, was about it, he ſtill ſaid הדק היטב הדק היטב To be pounded well, to be pounded well, &c. and then they mingled all altogether.

It was a caution that כל מעשיה בקודש בתוך העזרה k All the making and compounding of the Incenſe ſhould be in the Sanctuary in the midſt of the Court: By which whether the very open place of the Court be meant, or that part of this Room of Abhtines that ſtood in the Court, it is not much important to diſpute; this was the Room in which the Incenſe when it was made was reſerved, and likely it is that this alſo was the place where it was made: And here it was pounded again twice a year, and aired and looked to that it might take no hurt.

In this Room alſo the Prieſts kept a Guard every night, as it is related in the Talmud in the Treatiſe Tamid and Middoth in theſe words n In three places, the Prieſts kept Guards in the Sanctuary, namely in Beth Abhtines, and in Beth Nitſots, and in Beth Mohadh: Beth Abhtines and Beth Nitſots were upper Rooms, and there the younger Prieſts kept, &c. which nightly guarding was intentionally as much for the honour of the Sanctuary as for its ſecurity, and theſe two Guard-Chambers Abhtines and Nitſots, were both over againſt the Altar, the one on the one ſide of the Court and the other on the other: and here the younger younger ſort of Prieſts watched, but the grandees in Beth Mokadh, in the furtheſt end of the Court Weſt-ward, as we ſhall ſee when we come thither.

On the roof of this Water-gate, and of the room Abhtines, there was a Bath, in which the High-Prieſt did waſh himſelf the firſt time of his waſhing on the day of expiation: for although the Bathing place, on the top of the room of Happarvah (which we ſhall ſurvey in its place) was the place where he waſhed oftеſt on that day, yet here he waſhed firſt: for here had he ſpent ſome time in the Chamber of Abhtines before the day came, and here was the fitteſt and readieſt place for him to bath when the day was come: Here he had been all the night before, and when the morning was come, and he is to go about the ſervice, he firſt goeth to the top of this Gate and there batheth himſelf in Water. And this the Treatiſe Joma intendeth when he ſaith thus, o Five bathings of his Body and ten waſhings of his Hands and Feet did the High Prieſt uſe on that day, and all in the holy ground, on the top of the room of Happarbah, but only the firſt, &c. This was a place moſt convenient for a Bath, it being ſo near the Draw-well room, as joining to it, and this it may be helped forward the naming of it the Water-gate.

The Wood-room לשכת עץ and the room Parhedrin. לשכת פרהדרין

THE Pile of building that we are now about, joined to the Water-gate on the Weſt-ſide of it, and it carried a double name: for it was called either לשכת העץ The Chamber or room of the wood, or לשכת פרהדרין The room of Parhedrin. It was called the room of the wood, becauſe that after the blemiſhed Prieſts had wormed the wood, in a room of the ſame name in a corner of the Court of the Women, as we have obſerved, they brought that that they found fit for the Altar, into this room that it might be near, and ready to be carried to the Altar when there was occaſion.

As for the other name that this building carried, it is written two ways, a The Babylon Talmud, b Maymony and ſome others read it with r and call it לשכת פרהדרין The Chamber of Parhedrin. But the Jeruſalem Talmud, c Miſhnaioth in Octavo, &c. read it with l and call it לשכת פלהדרין The Chamber of Palhedrin: about which difference we ſhall not controvert: Now though the two Talmuds do thus vary one letter in this matter, of the name, yet they both agree upon another matter, and ſay, that in old time, it had been called לשכת בולוטין Παστοφόριον τῶν Βαλσυτῶν d The Chamber of the Counſellers. I obſerve alſo from Maymony, that it was called the High-Prieſts Chamber, by a ſingular propriety: for ſpeaking of putting of the High-Prieſt apart for ſeven days before the day of expiation into this room (for ſo the Talmuds in the place cited in the Margin inform us) he expreſſeth it thus מפרישין כנ" מביתו ללשכתו שבמקדש e They put him apart from his own houſe into this Chamber in the Sanctuary. And ſo the Jeruſalem Talmud doth alſo call it, though it do not expreſs it by the proper name, when it ſaith, עליית ביה אבטינת על גבי שער המים היתה סמוך ללשכתו היתרה that f the High-Prieſt was put for a certain time into the Chamber of Abhtines which was over the Water-gate, and which joyned to his own Chamber: And here by the way you may obſerve, that this Wood-room, and room of Parhedrin did joyn to the Water-gate as we have ſeated it: the one room being over the other, the Wood-room below and Parhedrin above.

Now it was called the High-Prieſts Chamber, not ſo much for that he was put apart hither for a few days in the year, as for that it was ordinarily imployed by the High-Prieſt to call his Brethren of the Prieſthood together in it, to conſult about the affairs of the Temple and the Service: ſo that it was as the Veſtry, or as I may ſo expreſs it, the Dean and Chapter-room, where they met together in conſultation about ſuch matters: We have obſerved * elſewhere, that beſides the High-Prieſt, there was the Sagan, two Katholikin, ſeven Immarcalin, and three Gizbarin, which were principal Officers in the Temple for the receiving, diſburſing, and taking care of the ſtock of it, and providing for the repairs of the buildings and the due adminiſtration of the Service: Theſe were the בולוטין Βαλσυτῶν Counſellors of the Temple, that adviſed and took care for the welfare of it, and this was the room where they ſat conſtantly in Counſel for that purpoſe: and hereupon it was called the Chamber of the Counſellors. The reaſon of the change of its name into the Chamber of Palhedrin, or Parhedrin (read it whether way you will) the Gemara of the Talmud in the place cited above giveth in theſe words. It was called the Chamber of the Counſellors till the High-Prieſthood began to be bought and ſold for money, and came to be changed often: theſe Counſellors were then alſo changed often, and then it was called the Chamber of Parhedrin. The meaning ſeemeth to be this, that whilſt the High-Prieſthood ſtood and and remained in its beauty and integrity, the High Prieſt and his Brethren, kept a ſolemn and grave council Table here for the benefit and advancement of the Temple, but when money and prowling did make and change High Prieſts, money and ſilver did alſo make members of this Council, and they ſought themſelves rather than the publick; the people therefore could not find in their hearts to call them Counſellors, but called them Parhedrin or Sitters only. Yet were they alſo called Counſellors even while they were called Parhedrin, to diſtinguiſh them from the great Council: Joſeph of Arimathea was one of theſe, Mark XV. 43.

The word Parhedrin is as like the Greek word Παρεδρεῖον, as Sanhedrin is like Συνέδριον, and it may very well be conjectured, that ſince the great Sanhedrin and Society, were both Counſellors, that this company was called Parhedrin, to diſtinguiſh it from the Sanhedrin: eſpecially conſidering how near they ſat together, there being but the Water-gate and the Well-room, between this room and Gazith: There ſat the great Council of the Nation, and it was called Sanhedrin, and here ſat the Council of the Temple, and it was called Parhedrin: that is, Aſſeſſores, or the Council that ſat near the Sanhedrin: And thus were there four Councils in the Temple: three of them not only Councils but Judicatories, namely the great Sanhedrin of ſeventy one, and the two leſſer Sanhedrins of twenty three. And this of Prieſts which was not ſo properly a Judicatory as meerly a Council.

The Jeruſalem Talmud expoundeth the word Palhedrin פלהדרין (for ſo it readeth it) by the word פריארתין, a word of as much obſcurity as the other: It is like it is ſome Greek or Latine word of Priority, but not eaſily pitched upon particularly: Baal Aruch renders Palhedrin by a word as hard as it ſelf too, namely by אגרדמין Agardemin: but he facilitates it by this interpretation, namely that it ſignifies g The overſeers of the weights, and meaſures, that were to look to the Ephah and the Hin, that they were right, and ſealed them, and they ſmote thoſe that kept ſhop in the mountain of the houſe, if they ſold too dear, and they bad them ſell cheaper.

The Gate of the Firſtlings.

THIS Gate which was next beyond the buildings laſt mentioned, Weſt-ward, was called by two names. Sometimes שער הקרבה a The gate of offering: ſo ſome read it: but moſt commonly שער בכורות b The Gate of the Firſtlings: both which names redound but to one and the ſame ſenſe, for the Gate took its denomination, c from the bringing of the Firſtlings through it to be offered up.

The Law concerning conſecrating to the Lord whatſoever firſt opened the Womb and Matrix, Exod. XIII. was intricated by the Jewiſh tradition with a World of difficulties, but for an ultimate reſolution, of what Firſtlings were fit to be offered and what not, there was one appointed whom they called מומחה Mumcheh, who did determine it: of this title the Gloſſaries give this interpretation and account. d Mumcheh is derived from the word Machah as it ſignifieth in that clauſe ומחה אל ים כנרת And it reacheth to the Sea of Cinnereth, Numb. 34. 11. which betokeneth going ſtraight: And this word Mumcheh means that he was skilful: and he received authority from the Preſident of the Sanhedrin, or from a Sanhedrin in the Land of Iſrael, of men ordained. e The head of the Sanhedrin gave him power for this office, ſaying to him התר בכורות מומין Looſe Firſtlings concerning blemiſhes: that is, take thou power to bind and to looſe as concerning blemiſhes of Firſtlings, to determine what blemiſhes do hinder them from being offered and what not: The Talmudiſts do uſe the phraſes of binding and looſing in reference to things prohibited or permitted: as התירו שאלת שלום בשבת מרוחק f Upon neceſſity they looſed ſalutation on the Sabbath, that is, they permitted it. g The School of Shammai אסר bound working on the Eve of the Paſſover, that is, prohibited it; but the School of Hillel התיר looſed it: that is, permitted it, or held and taught that it was lawful. h The Scribes have bound leaven: And i The wiſe men have looſed all fat things, &c. It were not a very hard taſk to produce hundreds of examples out of Jewiſh Writers to this purpoſe, wherein their uſe of this expreſſion of binding and looſing doth moſt ordinarily refer to things, and to things lawful or unlawful, as they were ſo held out by the Law and by their Doctors: And particularly the binding and looſing of Firſtlings, and the binding and looſing of vows, were of ſingular note and notice among them, k And the looſing of Firſt-lings (ſaith Abraham Zacuth) was a matter of more difficulty than looſing of vows: where, by looſing of vows, he meaneth not that any one had power to abſolve and acquit from lawful vows once made, but that there were ſome appointed to judge of vows, and to determine concerning them whether they were lawful or not lawful, and whether they bound or bound not.

No Firſtling muſt be kild or offered till it had been firſt viewed by the Mumcheh: And he that was not a Mumcheh (appointed by the Sanhedrin) and yet would take on him to view a Firſtling, and ſo it was killed upon his approval, he was to make it good: and he that received a reward or was hired to view a Firſtling, it was not current, unleſs he were authoriſed by the Sanhedrin ſo to do, as Ailah a wiſe man of Jabneh, to whom the wiſe men permitted to take four אסורות Aſſarii for viewing a lean Firſtling, and ſix for viewing a fat, &c. [l] [l] Talm. in Bicoroth per. 4.

A Firſtling Lamb or Calf, approved by the Mumcheh as fit for ſacrifice, and brought to the Temple for that purpoſe, was ſlain on the South ſide of the Altar, or at leaſt on the South ſide of the Court. The Talmudick tract Zevachin in the fifth Chapter doth purpoſely diſcuſs what Sacrifices were to be ſlain on the North ſide of the Altar, and what otherwhere: And having nominated particularly what on the North ſide; it ſaith, [m] That a Sacrifice of Thanksgiving, the Nazarites Ram, the ordinary Peace-offerings, the Firſtlings, Tithe, and Paſſover were ſlain in any part of the Court: where by any part of the Court, it meaneth the South ſide, in oppoſition to the North, of which it had ſpoken before, and it meaneth the South ſide in ſuch a latitude, as not only juſt over againſt the Altar, but in a larger extent, as we ſhall ſhew more fully when we come to ſurvey the ſides of the Court it ſelf. [m] Id. in Zevachin. per. 5.

The Firſtlings then being to be ſlain on this South ſide of the Court, on which we are ſurveying the Gates and Buildings, they were brought in at this Gate which we are upon, and from thence it took the name of the Gate of the Firſtlings: The Water-gate indeed was nearer the Altar, and a more direct way to it, but to have killed the Beaſts thereabout would have hindred the paſſage to the Altar, from the Draw-well, Water-gate and Wood-room, unto which places there was very frequent recourſe from the Altar, and therefore the Firſtlings and other Sacrifices that were to be ſlain on the South ſide of the Court, were brought in at the Gate above, as more out of the way, and ſlain thereabout as in a place of leſs interruption. Now whereas the Tradition mentioned, doth allot the South ſide of the Court for the proper place of ſlaying thoſe particular Sacrifices that it nameth, yet doth it ſpeak it in this latitude שחיבתן בכל מקום בעזרה That their killing might be in any part of the Court: becauſe that though ordinarily and regularly they were to be ſlain on the South ſide of the Court, yet if they were numerous and could not conveniently be ſlaughtered in that place, they might be ſlain on the other ſide, as the Paſſover were killed on both the ſides, becauſe of their number: whereas the Sacrifices that were to be ſlain on the North ſide muſt be ſlain there, and there was no diſpenſation to remove them thence.

The preſenting of the Firſtlings at the Gate that we are about, may put us in remembrance of preſenting the firſt born; All the males of Iſrael were to appear before the Lord thrice every year, Exod. XXIII. 17. now this command did not take in Children (as their tradition did interpret it) n till they were able to walk up out of Jeruſalem to the Temple in their Fathers hand: and the preſenting of the firſt born to the Lord, was not inforced by that command, but by that, Exod. XIII. 12. & XXII. 29. where both the Targums of Jonathan and Onkelos, do expound the ſetting apart of the firſt born to be before the Lord, or at the Temple: and ſo doth the Text of Scripture it ſelf in Numb. XVIII. 15. Luke II. 23. The place where they were preſented, was in the Gate of Nicanor, for that was both the moſt peculiar place of appearing before the Lord, and there Women that had born Children did ſtand to have their atonement made for them: And there it was where the Virgin Mary preſented our Saviour, Luke II. and there ſhe payed five ſhekels for his redemption, Numb. XVIII. And Hannah did the like at Shiloh: 1 Sam. I. 34. only ſhe had kept her Son longer than ordinary, becauſe when ſhe did preſent him at the Sanctuary, ſhe meant to leave him there for ever, and for that reaſon, ſhe redeemed him not neither, but gave him to the Lord. CHAP. XXVII.

The Gate הדלק Hadlak, or of Kindling, or of the burning fire.

IT is easie to justifie and assert the translation of הדלק by kindling, but is not so easie to give a reason why this Gate which stood most West on the South side did bear this name. The common opinion of Glossaries upon it is plausible enough, but only for one objection that may be made against it. a They hold that it was called the Gate of kindling or Burning, because through it wood was brought to the Altar to keep the fire continually burning according to the Law, Lev. VI. 12. But why this way? Since they might have gone a nearer way to the Altar by far, either through the Water-gate or the Gate of the Firstlings, seeing the Wood-room was between them two, as hath been shewed: and it is probable enough that the Wood out of the Wood-room was not brought through any of the Court Gates at all to the Altar, but out at a Door which went out of the room it self into the Court.

a Bartenor. & C. Lemp. in Mid. & Gloss. in Shekalim per.6.

To find out therefore a reason of the name, I cannot but look over to the other side of the Court, from this Gate that we are about, to that Gate there, that was over against it, and there I observe the Gate to be called Beth Mokadh, or the Gate of the burning fire, as well as this is called the Gate of kindling. And the reason of that name was, because a fire was kept there continually for the senior Priests, as shall be shewed anon, and so it may be well conjectured, a fire was kept here for the Levites: And though I find not mention either in the Talmud or Josephus of any building that joyned to this Gate, yet since there is mention in the Treatise Middoth of the Levites keeping a guard, בלשכת הפרוכת b In the Chamber of the vail, I find not where to allot that place better than to this Gate we are about: For when it speaketh of the Chamber of the vail, it meaneth not either any Chamber joyning to the body of the Temple it self, nor any Chamber in the Court (for the Levites kept not their Guards within the Court but without) but some Chamber without the Court, which was over against the place of the vail, which divided betwixt the Holy and most Holy place. And as there was a long building that ran along from that opposite North Gate up toward the West to the very corner of the Wall of the Court that way: so from this Gate Westward there ran a long building to the corner of the Court on this side, in which large piece of building having partitions within, there were two Guards of Levites almost joyning together: So there were three of those Guards very near together: one joyning to the Gate on the East side, c (for at five of the Gates of the Court the Levites Guarded, and this was one of the five) another joyning to the Gate on the West side, which was called the Guard over against the vail, and the third at the corner of the Court: Now as there was a common fire kept for the Priests on the other side of the Court, in a large building opposite to this, from whence the Gate joyning to it took the name: so is it very likely, there was a common fire kept for the Levites which gave this Gate the denomination of the Gate of kindling.

c Ibid.

Thus have we surveyed the Gates and Buildings on the South side of the Court, their order thus, coming up from the East towards the West: First, The room Gazith at the South-West corner: then the room of the Draw-well: joyning to that the Water-gate, and over that the room Abhtines: joyning to that Gate on the other side, the Wood-room, and over that the Council-Chamber: then the Gate of the Firstlings, with a Levites ward joyning to it on one side: then the Gate of kindling, and a Levites ward on either side it, and that building on the West-side of it running up to the West corner of the Court. Now Aba Jose, a Spokes-man in the Talmud, nameth yet one Gate more, and more West than these that we have named, on this same side which he calleth the upper Gate, and over against it on the North-side he nameth a Gate more than the common account and calleth it the Gate of Jechoniah: But he goeth alone in his opinion as to the number of the Gates of the Court: yet thus far do other of his Nation go with him, that they say there were three Gates on the North-side of the Court, and that there was besides them, a passage through Beth Mokadh large building out of the Chel into the Court, which I suppose is that which he calleth the Gate of Jechoniah: and the reason of the name is given, because Jechoniah went out at that Gate into his captivity: And so it may be that in this large building on this side which ran between the Gate of kindling and the West corner, there was a passage through, which he stiles with the title of the upper Gate.

But howsoever it was in his account in the second Temple, the very title of the upper Gate may not undeservedly call upon us, to look after that which is called the upper Gate of Benjamin in the house of the Lord; In the times of the first Temple, Jer. XX. 2. it is said ſaid there that Paſhur ſmote Jeremy and put him in the ſtocks that were in the high Gate or upper Gate of Benjamin, which was in the Houſe of the Lord. Our Engliſh hath made it ſhy to render it in the Houſe of the Lord, it may be becauſe they thought it improper to have a pair of ſtocks in the Temple: and therefore they have Tranſlated it which was by the Houſe of the Lord, as reputing it not a Gate of the Temple but ſome other: but the words in the Original are ſo plain, and the conſent of Tranſlaters ſo unanimous, that it meaneth in the Houſe of the Lord, that to ſwarve from it were but to ſtrain a plain and a facile Text, and to obſcure a place which is not obſcure of it ſelf. The mountain of the Temple lay in the lot of the Tribes of Judah and Benjamin, as hath been obſerved before, and the line that divided between the lots came along at the South-Eaſt corner of the Altar, as we ſhall obſerve anon, ſo that the Temple and Altar were in the Tribe of Benjamin, according to Moſes Propheſie, that God ſhould dwell between Benjamins ſhoulders, and ſo was the South-wall of the Court till you came down over againſt that point of the Altar, and then came in the lot of Judah. It appeareth therefore that there were but two Gates on this ſide of the Court in the times of the firſt Temple, and they were called the upper and the lower Gate of Benjamin, becauſe they ſtood in his lot: And there were two Gates on the North-ſide of the Court, and they were called, The Gate of the Altar, which was Northward, and the Gate of the Lord's Houſe which was Northward, as we ſhall ſhew by and by.

And for this place or engine of correction (were it a Dungeon as the LXX ſeems to hold it, or a Pillory as David Kimchies Father, or a pair of Stocks as our Engliſh) it is no Solœciſm to hold that it was in the Houſe of the Lord (namely in that part of this Gate that ſtood out of the Court in the Chel) ſince there was judging, ſcourging, mawling, and ſtoning, even in the Temple it ſelf, as hath been toucht before.

And now to be going over from the South-ſide to the North, along the Wall of the Court at the Weſt-end, there was no Gate upon that quarter at all, but the Wall was plain without any Gates or openings in it. And ſo Joſephus makes it clear when he ſaith, τὸ δ' ὄπισθεν δύσιν μέρος οὐκ εἶχε πύλιν, ἀλλὰ διηνεκὴς ἐδεδύμητο ταύτῃ τὸ τεῖχος. d That part that was on the Weſt had no Gate at all, but the Wall that way was an intire continued building: which relation is alſo agreeable to the general conſent of the Hebrew Authors, Aba Joſe only excepted, whom we mentioned even now, who ſpeaketh of two Gates here, but neither nameth them, nor telleth for what uſe they ſerved: and indeed what needed any Gate here at all, ſo far from the ſervice, and behind the Temple? There was indeed at the back of the Court-wall in the middle betwixt the North and South corners of it, a building ſtanding in the חל Chel, where the Levites kept a Guard, which was called אחורי בית הכפורת The Guard behind the mercy ſeat: but there is no evidence that there was any door out of it into the Court, and if there had been it was but a door and not a Gate. Of the Guards of the Prieſts and Levites about the Temple, the Record is thus, e In three places the Prieſts kept Guards in the Temple, in the Chamber of Abhtines, in Beth Nitſots and in Beth Mokadh. And the Levites in one and twenty places: five at five Gates of the mountain of the Houſe: Four at the four corners of it within: Five at five Gates of the Court, and four at the four corners of it without: One in the Chamber of Corban: One in the Chamber over againſt the Vail, and one behind the place of the Mercy ſeat.

CHAP. XXVIII.

The Gates and building in the Court-wall on the North-ſide.

WE are now come to the North-ſide of the Court, where before we fall to ſurveying of the Gates and Buildings, that were there, in the times of the ſecond Temple, it will not be amiſs to look what we find there in the times of the firſt, in that paſſage of Ezekiel, Chap. 8. verſ. 3, 5, 14. He brought me in the viſions of God to Jeruſalem, to the Door of the inner Court-gate that looketh toward the North, where was the ſeat of the Image of jealouſie which provoketh to jealouſie. And he ſaid unto me, Son of Man lift up now thine Eyes the way towards the North: ſo I lift up mine Eyes the way towards the North, and behold North-ward of the Gate of the Altar this Image of Jealouſie in the entry. And he brought me to the Door of the Gate of the Lords Houſe which was towards the North, and behold, there ſat Women weeping for Tammuz: Here are two Gates ſpecified on the North-ſide of the Court, and they are called the Gate of the Altar, and the Gate of the Lords Houſe towards the North: becauſe the one was over againſt the Altar, and the other over againſt the Body of the Temple: To that over againſt the Altar is the Prophet Prophet first brought in his vision, and there he seeth the Image of Jealousie: not in this Gate of the Altar, but in the mountain of the House Northward of this Gate, and of the Prophet as he stood in it. For the Prophet is not brought within the Court at this Gate, but is set without it, and there he is bidden to look Northward, and there he seeth that Image. This was not any Picture or Image to represent Jealousie by, but it is called the Image of Jealousie, because it provoked the jealous God to jealousie, it being set even in his Sanctuary and before his Altar: what Idol this was is but lost labour to go about to determine: I should as soon conjecture Molech as any other, because that was the highest Idolatry and most provoking, namely their burning of their Children in the fire, and because they were exceeding taxable and taxed for this Idolatry. Whether there were this Idol in the Temple at this very instant when Ezekiel had the vision, which was in the sixth year of Zedekiah, or whether the vision represent to him the Idolatry that had been in the Temple at any time, is not much easier to determine neither; but be the Idol what it would, and mean he the time when he will, it was no small abomination when an Idolatrous Chappel or Mansion is erected in the mountain of the Lords House, even facing the very Gate that opened upon the Altar. This Gate was the lower North-gate which in the times of the second Temple was called the Gate Nitsots or of the Song.

Before the Prophet is brought to the upper North-gate, the Text saith he was brought to the door of the Court, vers. 7. that is, to the East-gate which was the commonest way of entrance, and in that Gate the Sanhedrin used to sit in those times, and there he seeth their Council-chamber painted all about with imagery, and the Seventy members of the Sanhedrin themselves offering Idolatrous incense: Then is he brought to the upper North-gate, which opened upon the Body of the Temple, and there he seeth Women weeping for Tammuz: what Tammuz was, or what their weeping meant, it is not to our subject to insist upon here: I will only leave the Gloss of David Kimchi upon this matter with the Reader, and trouble him with no more discourse about it. Some interpret it (saith he) that they kept a feast to the Idol in the beginning of the month Tammuz: others interpret the word Tammuz to signifie burnt from למוא לאתונא Dan. III. 19. meaning that they wept for him that was burnt, because they burnt their Sons and Daughters in the fire. Others, that they had a trick to convey water into the Idols Eyes, which was called Tammuz, so that he seemed to weep and to beseech them that they would serve him. But our great wise Man Rabbi Moses bar Maiemon writes, that it is found in the Books of the ancient, that there was a Man of the Idolatrous Prophets whose name was Tammuz, and he called to a certain King and commanded him to worship the seven Planets and the twelve Signs, and the King slew him: And on the night of his death, all the Idols from all parts of the Earth were gathered into the Temple at Babel, to the golden Image which was the Image of the Sun, which Image hung between Heaven and Earth, and it fell into the midst of the Temple and all the Images about it: It told them what hath happened to Tammuz the Prophet, and all the Idols wept and lamented all that night, and when it was morning they flew to their own homes: So this became a custom to them on the first day of the month Tammuz every year, to bewail and lament Tammuz. But some interpret Tammuz to be the name of a Beast which they worshipped.

Thus may we suppose upon this Text of Ezekiel, that in the Temple before the captivity there were but two Gates on the North-side of the Court, or at least there is not mention of any more: but in the second Temple there were three: The names of them going from West to East, were these. 1. שער קרבן b The Gate of Corban. 2. שער נשים The Gate of the Women. And 3. שער שור The Gate of the Song. Now every one of these Gates is owned by a double name: for the Gate of Corban is also called בית מוקד Beth Mokadh: The Gate of the Women is also called שער קרבן The Gate Corban: And the Gate of the Song is also called שער ניצוץ The Gate Nitsots: And thus are those Talmudick passages to be understood which carry difficulty with them, because they seem to carry contradiction: whilest one reckons the North-gates thus, c On the North was the Gate of Corban, the Gate of the Women and the Gate of the Song: And another thus, d On the North was the Gate Nitsots, the Gate Corban and Beth Mekadh: The former, reckoning their order from West to East, and the later from East to West: the reason of these doubled and differing names we shall look after as we go along.

There were also other buildings on this side the Court besides the Gates, as well as there were on the South-side which we have surveyed already. And those were לשכת המלח לשכת הפרוה ולשכת המדיחין e The room for Salt, the room for Parvah, and the washing room, besides other rooms, which we shall find out in our progress.

CHAP. XXIX.

Beth Mokadh. בית המוקד

OUR Survey is to begin at the North-west corner of the Court-wall, and there we meet with the building called Beth Mokadh, a place of remarkableness for several particulars.

1. It was a building so large that a it raught from the North-west Angle of the Wall to the Gate below, of the same name, and so it took up a fourth part of the length of that side of the Court: b and it contained four several rooms in the four corners of it; that room which was properly called the room Mokadh being in the midst of them as the Center: And this the Treatise Middoth uttereth in these expressions, c There were four rooms in Beth Mokadh בקיטונות פתוחות לטרקלין ὡς κοιτῶνες ἀνεῳγμένοι εἰς τρικλίνιον· Like bed Chambers opening into a dining-room: Two of which Chambers stood within the Court and two without, and marks were set within to shew where the two grounds parted.

2. The four rooms in the four corners of it, were these.

d The South-west room was called לשכת טלאים The Lamb room, e because there they lodged the Lambs that were appointed for the daily Sacrifice. f And the room was never without six Lambs in it a day together. For no Lamb was offered but which had been taken up four days before: and so this necessitated, that if two of the six were taken out to day for the Morning and Evening Sacrifice, other two must be brought in before night: And by this means it was never without six in it a whole day together.

2. g The South-west room was the room of those that prepared the Shewbread, which God had appointed to be set before him on the golden Table every Sabbath. בית נרמו The Family of Garmu was for this work. These two rooms mentioned stood either wholly or some part of them within the Court.

3. i The North-west room בה גנזו חשמונאי את אבני המזבח was the place where the Maccabean family laid up the stones of the Altar, which the Grecian Kings had defiled. k For when Antiochus Epiphanus had made such miserable havock at Jerusalem, as that he had laid Religion, Laws, Liberties, Altar, Sacrifice, and all wast, and had defiled the Altar with abominable Sacrifices, Judas Maccabeus and his Brethren getting a little ground of their enemies and of their miseries, began to purifie and restore the Temple: and consulting what to do with the Altar stones which were prophaned, and which Mattathias their Father had therefore pulled down, 1 Mac. II. 25. they laid them up in this room till a Prophet should come that might resolve what to do with them, 1 Mac. IV. 44. &c.

4. l The North-west room was a room through which they went to a bathing place, out of the middle room which was properly called Beth Mokadh, whosoever had received any nocturnal pollution in their sleep. Now where this bathing place was it is controverted, whether under ground, or whether on the out-side of the outmost wall: The Treatise Tamid gives account of it in these words: m Doth a nocturnal pollution by Gonorrhea happen to any of them? He gets out and goes along in the Gallery that goeth under the Temple, and candles burn on either side, till he came to the bathing place: there was a closet and a stool: and if he found the door lockt he knew there was some one there, but if open he knew there was no body there: so he goes down and bathes himself, wipes himself, warms himself in the closet, and comes again and sits among his Brethren.

3. The room Mokadh which was in the midst of these four, they being as it were Parlors in the four corners of it, is said to be בנוי כיפה n built archwise: not that the surface or upmost part of it was like an arch of stone without any other roof, but that being raised and roofed like the other buildings about the Court, it was only in this lower room made archwise, because there was a passage through it out of the Chel into the Court. And there were two Gates to this room of passage, one towards the Chel, and the other towards the Court, and that into the Court had a Wicket in it, through which they commonly went in and out, the great Gate standing shut: and so it is like had that also into the Chel. And this passage I suppose is that which Aba Jose calleth the Gate of Jechoniah, of which we made mention before.

n Maym. in hith habbech. pe. 5.

4. This room was called Beth Mokadh, or the place of the burning fire, because a fire was kept here continually, all the cold time of the year for the Priests, both by day and by night: By day to warm themselves at when they came from the service, for upon that they attended barefooted and very thin clad, and in the night to keep them warm as they kept their Guard: for in this room was a Guard of the Priests as was observed before, before, and this was the chiefeſt Guard of all: o Beth Mokadh (ſaith the Talmud) was a great arched room, and it was ſet about with ſtone benches: on which the Elders of the Houſe of their Fathers ſlept, and the keys of the Court were in their keeping: But the young Men of the Prieſt-hood ſlept in their garments on the ground: they ſlept not in the holy garments, but put thoſe off, folded them up and laid them under their Heads, and lay in their own wearing clothes: So that this room was both a thorough paſs, and a great Hall, where was kept a common and a conſtant fire: and the Gates on either ſide of the arch being ſhut, it was as a cloſe room, and as if it had not been a thorough paſſage at all.

5. In this room there was a box or cabinet as we may call it, in which were laid up the keys of the Court, and taken out and in, as the Doors were locked or to be unlocked. The Talmud deſcribes it thus, p There was a ſlag of Marble and a ring was faſtned in it, and a chain, at which the keys of the Court were hung: when the time of locking the Gates came, he took up the ſlag by the ring, and took the keys off the ring, and locked the Gates within, and when he had done he put the keys on the chain, and the ſlag in its place again: Now this marble flag, which in Hebrew is called טבלא A table, on the upper or outſide of it had a ring by which to take it up, and on the innerſide, a chain ſo wrought as that the keys might fitly and readily be hanged on or taken off as there was occaſion: And this box appeareth to have been in the ground, partly becauſe we have mention of ſuch another flag with a ring in it, and that lay upon the ground, and duſt was taken from under it for the trial of the ſuſpected Wife, and partly becauſe the Tradition ſaith נתנ כסותו עליה That after the Prieſt had laid up the keys and laid down the flag, he laid his pillow upon it and there ſlept.

6. If any in their ſleep ſuffered Gonorrhea, they were to bath, as was ſaid before, and the way to the bathing place is expreſſed in theſe words הלך לי במסובה הולכת תחת הבירה He goeth down a turning ſtair caſe that went under the Temple. The word בירה doth generally ſignifie all the body and buildings of the Temple, as the whole ſtood like a ſumptuous and goodly Palace (for ſo the word doth properly ſignifie) and ſo it is uſed, 1 Chron. XXIX. 1, 19. Therefore it is hard to tell which way this paſſage to the bathing place lay, ſince the word will inlarge it to any part of the Temple. It appeareth that it was ſome vault under ground through which they paſſed; into which vault they went down by a turning pair of ſtairs, out of the North-weſt room of Beth Mokadh. And from thence whither they went, whether under the Chel, as Rabbi Eliezer conceiveth, or under ſome part of the Court, or Mountain of the Houſe, it is but in vain to ſearch: It ſeemeth the Bath was under ground, and a room by it with a fire in it to warm themſelves at when they had done bathing.

CHAP. XXX.

Of the Gate Beth Mokadh called the Gate of Corban: And of the other Gate of Corban, called alſo the Gate of the Women.

WE need not inquire why the upper of theſe two Gates was called Beth Mokadh; the conſidering that it joined to the Eaſt end of that piece of building that was ſo called, which we have newly ſurveyed, will reſolve that queſtion: but why the lower was called The Gate of the Women, and why both of them the Gates of Corban, will coſt more labour to find it out.

I ſhall tender about the former theſe two conjectures: 1. Becauſe at this Gate the Women in the former Temple, did weep for Tammuz; as was obſerved out of Ezekiel even now: And 2. Becauſe at this Gate the Women that brought Sacrifices went into the Court to ſee them offered. For although it was not lawful for Women to go ordinarily into the Court as it was for Men, but they were confined to their own Court, yet as I have obſerved elſewhere out of Toſaphta, Women when they brought Sacrifices might and did go into the Court of Iſrael as well as Men. It is true indeed that נשים יולדות Women after childbirth appeared in the Gate of Nicanor for the making of their atonement, and came but up into the Gate, and not into the Court at all, becauſe they came thither for their full Purification: but thoſe Women that were clean, and came not upon any occaſion of Purification, but brought Burnt-offerings, or Sin, or Treſpaſs-offerings, they preſented them and themſelves with them at this Gate. There was a Gate was nearer to the Altar than this, namely the Gate Nitſots, which we are to ſurvey by and by, but the place of the rings or ſlaughter place being between it and the Altar, it was not a place of of that clear and uninterrupted acceſs that this was of, and therefore the Sacrifices both of Men and Women were preſented here. Yet did the Gate bear the name of the Women rather than of the Men, as from the rarer matter of the Womens going into the Court, which was more commonly done by Men.

And this helps us to one reaſon why this Gate was called the Gate of Corban, or of the offering, namely becauſe the Sacrifices to be offered up were brought up in this way. And this very reaſon Bartenora giveth, ſaying, שם מכניסין קדשי הקדשים ששחיטתן בצפון a Here they brought in the moſt holy Sacrifices, which were to be ſlain on the North-ſide of the Altar. Over againſt this Gate on the other ſide of the Court there was a Gate that bare two names as well as this. It was called שער הקרבן The Gate of offering, becauſe the Sacrifices that were to be ſlain on the South-ſide of the Altar were brought in at that Gate, and it was alſo called the Gate of Firſtlings, becauſe thoſe were the chiefeſt of thoſe offerings. So alſo this Gate where we are, it was called the Gate of Corban or of offering, becauſe the Sacrifices to be ſlain on the North-ſide of the Altar were brought in by it: and it was called alſo the Gate of the Women, becauſe their paſſage through it with their Sacrifices was more rare and remarkable than Mens. b Now theſe were the Sacrifices that were ſlain on this North-ſide of the Altar: The moſt holy Sacrifices, the Bullock and Goat of the day of Expiation, the Bullocks and Goats that were burnt, all Sin-offerings, whole Burnt-offerings and Treſpaſs-offerings.

b Zevachim pet. 5.

Only the Lambs of the daily Sacrifice, though they were ſlain on the North-ſide of the Altar, yet is it like they were not brought into the Court at this Gate, but at that that joyned to Beth Mokadh, for in that piece of building the Lamb-room was, where they were kept, as hath been ſhewed. And ſo we have one reaſon why theſe two Gates bare the name of Corban. The upper was ſo called becauſe the daily Sacrifice or Corban was brought through it, and the lower, becauſe other Sacrifices were brought through that.

But there was ſomething more in the name beſides: As there were ſeveral Treaſure cheſts in the Temple, which have been named, and ſeveral Treaſuries in the Gate-houſes of the Mountain of the Temple, and in the Chambers that joyned to the Temple it ſelf: of Veſſels, Veſtments, Tithes, Firſt-fruits, &c. So on this ſide of the Court was the Treaſury of the Poll-mony, and for the Poor, and for the repair of the Temple; which more eſpecially was called Corban: The word as at the firſt and moſt properly it ſignified an offering (and ſo is it frequently uſed in Leviticus, and that is the ſenſe that we have newly parted with) ſo in the Jews common Language it came alſo to ſignifie the Treaſury of the Temple, as Matth. XXVII. 6. The Prieſts took the money and ſaid it is not lawful to caſt it εἰς κορβανᾶν Into the Corban. And ſo Joſephus ſaith, that Pilate occaſioned a tumult among the Jews, Ἀναλίσκων τὸν ἱερὸν θησαυρὸν καλεῖσθαι κορβωνᾶς εἰς καταγωγὴν ὑδάτων· c By conſuming the ſacred Treaſury which was called Corban upon making an Aquæduct. And ſo the Treatiſe Middoth reckoning the Guards that were in the Temple, nameth d one at the Chamber of Corban: one at the Chamber of the Vail, and one behind the Mercy ſeat: From which laſt paſſage, laid to this conſideration that we are about, namely, that there were two Gates on the North-ſide of the Court which were called Corban, there is ſome ground and probability to place the Corban or chiefeſt Treaſury of caſh or money there where we do. It appeareth by the diſtribution of the Guards in the Tradition cited, that the Guard at the Chamber over againſt the Vail, and at the Chamber of Corban were on the ſeveral ſides of the Court, or elſe there were no proportion or conformity in their ſtations. All the ſeven Gates of the Court were Guarded, two with Prieſts, and five with Levites: all the four Corners of the Court were alſo Guarded, and there was beſides (ſaith the Tradition) a Guard at the Chamber of the Vail, and another at the Chamber of Corban, and another behind the Mercy ſeat, that is, one on the one ſide of the Court over againſt the Body of the Temple, and another on the other ſide, and another juſt behind, which was called the Guard behind the Mercy ſeat. Now where can we ſo properly look for the Chamber Corban, as between thoſe two Gates that both bare that name? And the matter here ſeemeth ſomewhat nearly parallel to the caſe that we obſerved about the Gates and Houſe of Aſuppim upon the Weſt-quarter of the Mountain of the Houſe; for as there was a piece of building that ran between two Gates, which it ſelf was called the Houſe of Aſuppim, and gave occaſion to the Gates on either end of it, to be called the Gates of Aſuppim; ſo here was a piece of building that ran between two Gates, which it ſelf was called Corban, and gave occaſion to the Gates on either end it, to be called the Gates of Corban likewiſe.

c Joſ. de bell. lib. 2 cap. 14.

d Mid. per. 1.

To come down therefore from the Gate of Beth Mokadh, towards the Eaſt, there was firſt a piece of building joyned to that Gate, which was a Treaſury and was called Corban, and then was there a room where the Levites kept their Guard, and joyning to that there was another Treaſury or Corban, and joyning to the Eaſt end of that, a Gate called by the ſame name Corban, but called alſo the Gate of the Women.

Now to diſtinguiſh theſe Treaſuries, whether the one of them was the Treaſury for the half Shekel poll-mony, and the other for mony and veſſels offered for the uſe and repair of the Houſe, or whether one of them was the Treaſury for the Temple and the other for the Poor, which diſtinction we obſerved before, it is but in vain to inquire after, ſince it is not poſſible to reſolve when we have done all we can: only this I ſuppoſe may not unpertinently be obſerved, that the Treaſuries wherein they put money, (whether Chambers or Cheſts) were thoſe that moſt properly were called Corban, rather than the Treaſuries where they laid up other things: And according to the ſeveral places where theſe Chambers and theſe Cheſts ſtood, the place was called the Treaſury, and the Houſe of the Treaſury.

And here let us look after a place of Scripture, which ſpeaketh ſomething in relation to the Treaſury, and may not unproperly be taken into conſideration before we part with this ſubject.

The place is in 2 King. XII. 9. & 2 Chron. XXIV. 8. about the Treaſure or Collection cheſt that was made by Jehoiada, for the gathering of money for the repair of the Temple, which had been decaied and defaced in the days of Athaliah. And becauſe there appeareth a viſible contrariety between the two Texts that handle that matter, it may not be amiſs to lay them together, and then to ſee how they may be reconciled.

2 King. XII. 9. Jehoiada the Prieſt took a Cheſt and bored a hole in the lid of it, and ſet it beſides the Altar, on the right ſide as one cometh into the Houſe of the Lord.

Verſ. 13. Howbeit there were not made for the Houſe of the Lord, Bowls of Silver, Snuffers, Baſins, Trumpets, any Veſſels of Gold or Veſſels of Silver of the money that was brought into the Houſe of the Lord.

2 Chron. XXIV. 8. And at the Kings commandment they made a Cheſt and ſet it without, at the Gate of the Houſe of the Lord.

Verſ. 14. And when they had finiſhed, they brought the reſt of the money before the King and Jehoiada, whereof were made Veſſels for the Houſe of the Lord, even Veſſels to miniſter with, and to offer withal, even Veſſels of Gold and Silver, &c.

To heal the contrariety that ſeemeth to be in theſe Texts, the one ſaying the Cheſt was ſet beſide the Altar, and the other, that it was ſet without the Gate: the one that there were no Veſſels made of the mony that was offered, and the other that there were Veſſels made: it is to be obſerved that though the Cheſt might be the ſame, yet the ſtories concerning it and concerning the money coming to it are to be underſtood not of the ſame time. The zeal of Joaſh the King and the dulneſs of the Prieſts towards the repair of the Houſe of the Lord are here compared and laid together (though good Jehoiada did always the utmoſt in him towards it) Joaſh had urged the repair of the Temple, and that the Prieſts ſhould get up all the money accrewing to it for the uſe of it and beſtow it to that purpoſe: namely the half Shekel poll-money of every one that paſſeth the account: the money that any one was ſet at to redeem him from any ſingular vow, Lev. XXVII. and all the money that any offered of his own free-will: every one of the Prieſts to take it of his acquaintance: yet in the three and twentieth of the Kings reign, there was nothing done towards repairing: Thereupon the King ſeeing either the ſlackneſs, or falſhood, or both, of the Prieſts, requires them to meddle no more with receiving money, nor with repairing, ſince the buſineſs under their Hands went on no better: which they irreligiouſly and ſurlily are content to do, not caring whether the Temple be repaired or no. But good Jehoiada ſlacketh not, but ſets a Cheſt with a hole in it beſides the Altar, that what money might be had, might be put in there for the uſe appointed: But when that did not avail to do the work, nor to buy any Veſſels for the Houſe and Service of the Lord, for the money went ſtill through the Prieſts fingers, the Cheſt being in their Court, Joaſh the King either removes that Cheſt, or makes another and ſets it without the Court at the coming in, whither every one might have acceſs to it; and proclaims through all the Country that they ſhould bring in the money appointed by Moſes; the Princes and People come readily and joyfully and bring it in, ſo that there was enough to perfect repairs, and withal to make thoſe veſſels for the Temple that were wanting.

The room of Salt: of Parvah, and of the waſhing.

AS there were three rooms between the middle Gate Corban, which was alſo called the Gate of the Women, and the more Weſtward Gate Corban, which was alſo called the Gate Beth Mokadh, namely two Treaſuries and a Levites ward between the two: So were there three rooms alſo between the ſame middle Gate Corban, and the Gate more Eaſtward which was called the Gate Nitſots, and thoſe were a The room of the Salt: the room of Parvah, and the room of the Waſhers: The room of the Salt was the moſt Weſtward of the three, and joyned to the Gate of the Women, and it was ſo called, becauſe they there laid up the Salt for the uſe of the Temple. For howſoever Salt and Wine and Oil and ſuch things were ſold in the Tabernæ, for the uſe of particular perſons offerings, yet for the publick offerings and ſervice, theſe things were ſtocked up at the publick charge in ſeveral rooms appointed for them. a Mid. per. 5.

The uſe of Salt at the Temple was exceeding much, b for nothing was laid on the Altar unſalted, but only the Wood, the Blood and the Wine of the drink-offering: and how much Salt might be ſpent upon all their Sacrifices, let any one imagine, for this was the Law, with all thine offerings thou ſhalt offer Salt, Lev. II. 13. And they had not this way only for the ſpending of Salt, but they alſo ſalted the ſkins of all the Sacrifices when they had flayed them off. For the ſkins belonged to the Prieſts as their Fee: the courſe therefore of the Prieſts that was in ſerving, did ſtill Salt the ſkins of what Sacrifices they offered, that they might not be offenſive, and kept them till the end of the week of their Service: and on the Eve of the Sabbath, towards night they divided them to every one his ſhare. b Maym. in iſ-ſure mizbeah per. 5.

The place where they ſalted and laid up the ſkins till that time, was in the room of Parvah, which joyned to this room of the Salt, on the Eaſt; and which is the next piece of building that we are to ſurvey: The reaſon of the name is ſomewhat doubtful: the Gemarites in the Treatiſe Joma debating it, conclude in this Tradition: פרוה אמגושא c what is meant by Parvah? Rab Joſeph ſaith, Parvah was a Magician; d the meaning of אמגושא (ſaith Rabbi Nathan) is to this purpoſe: Parvah is the name of a man who was a Magician: And there are ſome of the wiſe Men that ſay that he digged a vault under ground, till he could come to ſee what the High Prieſt did on the day of Expiation. And the wiſe Men were aware of this vault that he had made, and they found him in it, and they called this Chamber by his name. The ſhort Gloſs upon the Miſhnaioth in octavo goes yet further. A Conjurer (ſaith he) whoſe name was Parvah built this room by Magick: And ſome ſay that he digged through the Wall to ſee the ſervice of the High Prieſt, and there he was ſlain. Magick was a matter more in uſe at the Temple among ſome of the Grandees there, than one could have poſſibly thought that it could have been: for the e Jeruſalem Talmud relates that ſome of the High Prieſts uſed to deſtroy one another with it. f But others deduce the reaſon of the name Parvah from Parim which ſignifieth Bullocks, becauſe of the many Hides or Skins of Bullocks that were laid up there: About which matter we ſhall not be curious to ſway the ballance one way or other: but ſhall leave the reaſon of the name to be diſputed by them that have a mind to ſuch a buſineſs, it is enough to our ſurvey to take notice of the place, and name and uſe of it without more circumſtances. c Joma per. 3. halacah. 6. d Aruch in פרוח e Talm. Jeruſ. in Joma per. 3. f R. Shemaiah in Mid.

At the Eaſt end of this building of Parvah, there was another piece of building which was called לשכת המריחין The room of the Waſhers: And the reaſon of the name was ששם מריחין את קרבי קדשים g Becauſe in this room they waſhed the inwards of the Sacrifices according to the Law, Lev. I. 9. It hath been a very general conceit, of waſhing the beaſts that were to be offered in the pool of Bethesda, of which there is mention, Joh. V. If that opinion mean, the waſhing of the Beaſt whileſt he was alive, I know not where the leaſt footſtep of any ſuch cuſtom is to be found, either in Scripture or in Jewiſh monuments of antiquity. And if it mean the waſhing of the Inwards after the Beaſt was ſlain, the room that we are about was the place where that was done, and they went no further: and when they had firſt waſhed them here, they did it again upon the Marble Tables, of which we ſhall ſpeak ere it be long. g Mid. ubi ſup.

h Out of this room of waſhing, there was a pair of winding Stairs, to the top of the room Parvah, i and on the top of that room there was a Bath, where the High Prieſt did bathe himſelf on the day of expiation, the ſeveral bathings that he was to bathe on that day, but only the firſt which was in the Bath on the top of the room Abhtines, as hath been obſerved before. It appeareth that here was a great iſſue or running cock of Water, in this waſhing room, which ſerved for the waſhing of ſo many Intrails as there h Ibid. i Joma per. 3.

was occaſion to waſh continually: and that there was a conveyance of Water to the roof of the adjoining room, where alſo a Cock ran to ſupply the Bath.

CHAP. XXXII.

The Gate, and Houſe Nitſots ניצוץ The Houſe of Stone Veſſels.

WE are now come to the Gate that was moſt East of all the three on this North-ſide, and it bare the double name of a the Gate Nitſots and b the Gate of the Song. The word Nitſots ניצוץ betokeneth properly ſparkling, as Eſa. I. 31. Ezek. I. 7, &c. and ſo it ſignifies the beams of the Sun, which as it were ſparkle at his riſing or going forth. But ſometimes it is uſed by the Rabbins to ſignifie Drops, which are as it were the ſparks of Water: and ſometime as Baal Aruch obſerves, Froth or Foam: Now to what ſenſe of all theſe to apply the name of this Gate, and to give the reaſon of its denomination in that ſenſe, will prove more labour than profit, though the pains be put to the beſt improvement. I ſhall leave it upon theſe two conjectures in the ſenſe of Sparkling: That it was called the ſparkling Gate, either becauſe the fire or flaming of the Altar ſhone upon it, it ſtanding in moſt oppoſition to the Altar of all the Gates on this North ſide: or becauſe the South Sun did give a great dazling light upon the gilding of this Gate, which it did by neither of the other on this North-ſide, the height of the Temple interpoſing betwixt the Sun and them: But this Gate lay clearly open to the South Sun, and ſo the leaves of the Gate being gilt, they gave a ſparkling and dazling reflexion into the Court.

a Mid. per. 1.
b Ibid. per. 2.

But why it is called the Gate of the Song, for ought I can find, is left alſo only to conjecture: And I ſhall only offer this; Becauſe they that came in at this Gate came in the very face of the Levites as they ſtood in their deſks ſinging, or playing on their Inſtruments and making the Temple muſick.

Joyning to the East-ſide of this Gate there was a building was called from the Gate, c The Houſe Nitſots, in which the Prieſts kept a Guard in the upper room, and the Levites in the lower: and between this building and the Gate there was as it were a Cloiſter paſſage, by which paſſage there was a way out of the very Gate into the room below where the Levites kept, and there was alſo a paſſage out of the Cloyſter into the Chel חיל And ſo is that clauſe in the Talmuds ſurvey of the Temple to be underſtood when it ſaith כמין אכסדרא היה והעליה בנויה עיל גביו d That this Gate was like a Cloiſter, and a Chamber was built over it, where the Prieſts kept Ward above, and the Levites below, and it had a Door into the חיל Chel. The meaning of which paſſage may be conceived to be this: That as you went through this Gate Nitſots out of the Court into the חיל Chel upon your right hand there was not a plain Wall for the ſide of the Gate, as the other Gates had, but that ſide was open with Pillars (as the Cloiſter ſides were of which we have ſpoken) and within thoſe Pillars there was a little Cloiſter or Walk which was almoſt as long as the paſſage through the Gate was broad: So that when you were in the hollow of the Gate you might ſtep in between the Pillars into this Cloiſter, and ſo into the room where the Levites kept their Guard, and over this Cloiſter and that room, and over the Gate, was there a place where the Prieſts kept their ward, and this was one of the three places where they warded: Out of the Levites room there was a door into the Chel.

Theſe buildings ran thus from this Gate of Nitſots Eaſtward a pretty way, and then there joined to them another building which raught to the very corner of the Court Wall. And it was called בירת האבן The Houſe of Stone: Not as if it were built of Stone and the other buildings of Wood, for the reſt were of Stone alſo; nor as if this differed in manner of building from the reſt; but becauſe all the Veſſels that were uſed in it were of Earth or Stone: And ſo the Gemara upon the Treatiſe Joma explaineth it, עיל פני בירה לשכת בירת האבן e Before the Temple, at the North-eaſt corner was the Chamber of the Houſe of Stone, and thither they put the Prieſt apart, that was to burn the red Cow ſeven days before. And it is called the Houſe of Stone, becauſe the work of it was in Veſſels of Dung, Earth, or Stone. In which paſſage they do not only give the reaſon of the name, but they alſo give an evidence of the ſituation of this place, when they ſay it was על פני בירה Before the Temple at the North-Eaſt corner. And as for the putting of the Prieſt apart into this room that we are about, who was to burn the red Cow, there is the like Record in the Treatiſe Parah, in theſe words, f Seven days before the burning of the Cow, they put apart the Prieſt that was to burn her out of his Houſe, into the Chamber which was before the Temple in the North-eaſt, which was called the Houſe of Stone, and they beſprinkled him all the Seven days, &c.

CHAP. XXXIII.

The Court of Iſrael, and of the Prieſts: And the Levites Desks where they Sung.

THUS having paſſed round about the Wall that incloſed the Court, and obſerved every particular Gate and Building in it, we are now to enter into the Court it ſelf, and to ſurvey that, and there we ſhall find much variety.

a The whole length of the Court from Eaſt to Weſt was one hundred eighty and ſeven cubits, and the breadth from North to South one hundred thirty and five. b The parcels of the total ſum of the length were theſe, from Eaſt to Weſt. a Mid. per. 1. b Ibid. per. 8.

The breadth of the Court of Iſrael eleven cubits.
The breadth of the Court of the Prieſts eleven cubits.
The breadth of the Altar two and thirty cubits.
Between the Altar and the Temple, two and twenty cubits.
The length of the Temple it ſelf, an hundred cubits.
Behind the Weſt end of the Temple to the Court-wall, eleven cubits.
The parcels of the breadth were theſe, going from North to South.
From the Wall of the Court to the Pillars, eight cubits.
From the Pillars to the Marble Tables, four cubits.
From the Tables to the place of the Rings, four cubits.
The ſpace of the Rings it ſelf, four and twenty cubits.
From the Rings to the Altar, eight cubits.
The Altar and the riſe to it, ſixty two cubits.
From the foot of the riſe to the South-wall of the Court, five and twenty cubits.

Of all theſe particulars we ſhall give account as we go along: And firſt it will be needful to clear the tearms, of the Court of Iſrael, and the Court of the Prieſts: Now theſe are to be underſtood in a ſtricter acceptation or in a larger: In the ſtricteſt ſenſe they were taken for the firſt ground you paſſed over as you went up from the Eaſt Wall of the Court, or where the Gate of Nicanor was, unto the Altar, and they are ſaid to be eleven cubits broad apiece. But in the larger acceptation, the Court of Iſrael, was a ſpace of ground upon which the Lay-men of Iſrael, for ſo let me call them, might ſtand, along within the Wall that incloſed the Court, on the North, South, and Weſt quarters of the Court as well as on the Eaſt.

The Court was Cloiſtered along the incloſing Wall of it within, even as we have obſerved of the Mountain of the Houſe, and the Court of the Women already: And ſo not only reaſon it ſelf doth evince unto us, which will tell that if the inferior places, and of leſs veneration, were ſo beautified, much more was this which was of the chiefeſt honour and higheſt Worſhip, but both Joſephus and the Talmudiſts, do alſo give teſtimony to ſuch a purpoſe: For Joſephus in thoſe words that we had occaſion to cite a good while ago, Αἱ ϛοαὶ αἱ μέλαξιν ἔνδον ὑπερμεμηκέϛαι, &c. c Cloiſters ran along the Wall within from Gate to Gate, born up with fair and great Pillars, &c. doth intimate no leſs: for though he doth particularly in that ſentence ſpeak of the Cloiſters before the Gazophylacia, or Treaſure-cheſts, which we placed in the Court of the Women, yet doth the ſcope of this Diſcourſe in that place, refer to both the Courts. The Talmudick Treatiſe Tamid likewiſe ſpeaking of the Prieſts firſt coming every Morning into the Court, it ſaith, d They came out through a Wicket out of Beth Mokadh, and being come into the Court they parted into two companies, and one went one way and another another, באכסדרה Per exedram, along the Cloiſter, round about the Court to ſee whether all was well and ſafe there. And you had mention even now of Pillars eight cubits diſtant from the North Wall of the Court, which though indeed in their very name they ſpeak that they were low Pillars and not ſuch as bare up the Roof of the Cloiſters, c Joſeph. de bell. lib. 5. cap. 14. d Tamid. per 1.

Cloiſters, as we ſhall obſerve when we come to ſpeak of them, yet were there higher Pillars by them that were ſuch Supporters.

On the North and South ſide therefore, and at the Weſt end of the Court, there was a Cloiſter like unto thoſe that we have ſpoken of already, born up with Pillars and roofed over head, that people might ſtand under unannoied of Rain and Weather, and this was the Court of Iſrael, that went round about the Court: for in this might Lay-men ſtand, and ſo they did, when there were great multitudes at the Temple, as there was at the three Feſtivals, when they were injoyned to appear before the Lord. In the Rubrick of the Paſover which is given by the Talmud in the Treatiſe Peſachin: It is ſaid, e Peſachin per. 5 e The Paſſover was killed in three companies: And the firſt company went in, and the Court was filled, &c. Now by the filling of the Court with people is not meant all the parts of the Court within the Wall that did incloſe it, but this Court of Iſrael or Cloiſter where the laity might ſtand, round about: And all inward, or what was incloſed by this Cloiſter, was in the large acceptation the Court of the Prieſts: This Cloiſter did not retain the ſame ſpace of liberty of ſtanding or walking, in every part of it, for here and there were buildings that ſtood out ſomething into it, as part of Beth Mokadh did at the North-weſt corner, and part of the building Gazith at the South-eaſt, &c. yet was there ſuch paſſage by them made more or leſs, that the buildings did not thruſt him that would paſs, into the Court of the Prieſts, but that there was a ſpace to paſs, ſometimes larger, and ſometimes narrower even all the Court round about.

Now at the Eaſt part or quarter of it as you came up out of the Gate of Nicanor, you entred upon that which was called in the ſtricteſt ſenſe, the Court of Iſrael, which was eleven cubits over as you went up towards the Altar, and then was that which alſo in the ſtricter ſenſe was called the Court of the Prieſts, and that was eleven cubits over likewiſe: Theſe two ſpaces were double Cloiſtered, being roofed over, and the roof ſupported with a double row of Pillars: the one row ſtanding out to the opening of the open Court, and the other row ſtanding where the two ſpaces parted the one from the other. Theſe were more peculiarly called the Court of Iſrael, and the Court of the Prieſts, upon theſe two or three reaſons.

1. Becauſe hither was the moſt ordinary acceſs of Iſraelites and Prieſts in their moſt ſolemn Worſhip, it being juſt in the face both of Temple and Altar.

2. Becauſe in that which was called the Court of Iſrael, the Stationary-men did conſtantly ſtand, in their attendance on the ſervice in repreſentation of all the people, as we have ſhewed them ſuch repreſentatives, * in another place: And in that which was called the Court of Prieſts, did thoſe Prieſts ſtand that had not imployment in the preſent ſervice (as all of them had not always) and waited upon the Worſhip and Service, which their Brethren now in imployment were about.

* Temple-Service, Chap. 7. Sect. 3.

3. That part of the room Gazith which ſtood within the Court, opened into both theſe Courts; and as that was the room, where the Prieſts caſt lots for the dividing of the Service amongſt them, ſo it was the Chappel (as it were) where they ſaid a good part of their daily Liturgy, and ſo the People and Prieſts in theſe Courts were ready to hear it. The one Court was diſtinguiſhed from the other by ſome grates or bars or ſuch like things which the Jews call ראשי פספסין which ſtood between Pillar and Pillar in that middle row of Pillars that bare up the roof of the Cloiſter. Into the Court of the Prieſts, whether largely or ſtrictly taken, the Iſraelites or lay People might not come but upon ſpecial occaſion, and that occaſion was threefold; namely, either to lay his Hand upon the Beaſt that he offered, or to kill him, or to wave ſome part of him, and then his coming into the Court either of Iſrael, or of the Prieſts, or both, was ordinarily at the North or South-ſide of the Court, according as his offering was to be ſlain on the North or South-ſide of the Altar, as we have obſerved before.

|| Maim. in Beth habbechirah per 6. || The Court of the People was level with the floor of the Eaſt-gate or the Gate Nicanor, but the floor of the Court of the Prieſts was two cubits and an half higher, and the riſing thus. Imagine you came up from the Gate of Nicanor: or rather imagine the Levites coming up from it with their Muſical Inſtruments in their Hands (which we obſerved before they laid up in rooms juſt under the Court of Iſrael, but the Doors of thoſe rooms opening into the Court of the Women) when they were riſen the many ſteps into the Gate of Nicanor and were come thorough it, they had on either Hand a fair paſſage into the Cloiſter or Court of the People, (ſuch another as he hath that cometh upon the Royal Exchange either out of Cornhil or Bartlemew-lane, he may ſtep into the Cloiſter walk on whether Hand he will) they walked upon even ground till they came over the breadth of the Court of the People, or to the Pillars which were on the further ſide of that Court which bare up the Cloiſter, and diſtinguiſhed the Court of the People and the Court of the Prieſts one from another: Then was there a riſing of two cubits and an half, but ſtepped up thus. f Firſt there was a ſtep of a cubit high, and then three ſteps of half a cubit high a piece, thus it was as you went directly up from the Gate of Nicanor forwards. But if you would turn on either Hand, there were the Deſks or ſtandings of the Levites, where they ſtood to Sing and to make their Muſick, made with ſteps, as even as that middle riſing juſt now mentioned: firſt a riſing of a cubit height, and that ran along at that height all along before the Rails and Pillars that parted twixt the Court of the Prieſts and Court of People: and then were there three ſteps up of half a cubit high a piece, and on the higheſt ſtep ſtood the Levites with their Inſtruments and their Song: their Feet even with the Floor of the Court of the Prieſts, and a Deſk before them.

Elias Levita it ſeems obſerved not this riſing both into the Court and in the Levites ſtation, when he ſaith, g that their דוכן Dukan (which was the name of their Deſks, and which the Learned render, Suggeſtus or Pulpitum) was nothing elſe but a bench or form whereon they ſtood: for their Feet ſtood even with the floor of the Court, and were not raiſed above it at all. His words are theſe, I wonder at this Targum (on Pſalme CXXXIV.) Lift up your Hands, O ye Prieſts, upon the holy דוכן For behold דוכן was אצטבא the bench on which the Levites ſtood when they Sung, and it is called דוכן Dukan in the Arabick: but in the Dutch and Vulgar, Bauca: In this conſtruction of it by אצטבא a bench, and owning it for an Arabick word he followeth, h Aruch, verbatim, but I confeſs I do not very well underſtand the cauſe of his wonder, eſpecially conſidering what he ſaith before the words cited, namely this: We call the place where the Prieſts lifted up their Hands when they bleſſed the people דוכן Dukan, and ſo is the Targum, Lift up your Hands, O ye Prieſts, on the holy דוכן and at this I wonder. Now if he wonder, that the Targum hath brought in the Prieſt bleſſing the People from the דוכן Desk or Pulpit, in that Pſalm: he might have found the like in other places. For the Chaldee of Jonathan upon the Law doth thus render the 23 verſe of the ſixth of Numbers, i Speak to Aaron and his Sons, ſaying, Thus ſhall ye bleſs the Children of Iſrael, ſpreading their hands upon the דוכנא Dukana, and they ſhall ſpeak to them in this manner: where the Hebrew Gloſs in the Margin interprets it, k by ſpreading their Hands in the place called דוכנא Dukana; and a little after, מקום איצטב נקרא דוכן The benched place called דוכן Dukan. And ſo the large Chaldee Paraphraſe upon the Canticles, Gloſſeth the ſeventh verſe of the third Chapter, (Behold his bed which is Solomons: threeſcore Valiant Men are about it) thus l when Solomon the King of Iſrael built the Houſe of the Sanctuary of the Lord in Jeruſalem, the Lord ſaid by his Word, How beautiful is this Houſe of the Sanctuary which is built to me by King Solomon the Son of David, and how beautiful are the Prieſts when they ſpread forth their Hands, and ſtand upon their דוכן Dukan and bleſs the People, the Houſe of Iſrael, by the threeſcore wonders that were delivered to Moſes their Maſter!

i Targ. Jonathi in legem. in Numb. VI.

l Targ. in Cant. III.

But it ſeems his wonder is at this, that the Jews ſo generally, and the Chaldee Paraphraſe particularly ſhould hold that the Prieſts when they bleſſed the People ſtood upon the דוכן Dukan, whereas the Dukan or theſe Desks were for the Levites and not for the Prieſts: And if I did conceive that they meant theſe very Deſks of the Levites, when they ſay, the Prieſts ſtood in the דוכן Dukan and bleſſed the People, I ſhould wonder with him alſo, but I ſuppoſe they meant ſome other Deſks appropriate to the Prieſts for this purpoſe, or the place of the Prieſts ſtanding when they bleſſed the People, and as by a name beſt known they call it Dukan.

The words of the Talmud in deſcription of theſe Deſks where the Levites ſtood to Sing and to make their Muſick are theſe. m Rabbi Eliezer the Son of Jacob ſaith, There was a riſing (viz. out of the Court of the People into the Court of the Prieſts) and it was a cubit high, and the דוכן Dukan was ſet above it, and in that there were three ſteps of half a cubit high a piece: So that the Court of the Prieſts is found to be higher than the Court of Iſrael by two cubits and an half. So that it appears indeed that the Levites ſtood upon raiſed ſteps in their Deſks, but it is plain withal, that the higheſt ſtep was no higher than the floor of the Court before them, and that that ſtep whereon they ſtood, was not called the Dukan, but the whole place of the three ſteps riſing.

m Mid. per. 2.

And thus were the eleven cubits of the Court of the Prieſts at this Eaſt quarter of the Court taken up and divided: Namely two cubits and an half taken up by the Deſks of the Singers (for as was the height of the ſteps, ſo was their breadth) and eight cubits and an half for the Prieſts ſtanding. The Court of Iſrael parted from the Levites Deſks, by Pillars and Rails: The Levites ſtanding parted from the Prieſts by a Wainſcot Deſk or ſome ſuch thing. The Court of the Prieſts open to the Altar, but only that the Pillars that ſupported the Cloiſter, ſtood in a row before it.

And ſo we have the dimenſions and platform of the Court, and of the Buildings and the Cloiſters that ſtood about it: But before we proceed to obſerve the particulars that were within it, I cannot but think of a piece of ſtructure, that in its ſtory looks ſomething like to ſome of the Cloiſters that we have deſcribed either in the Mountain of the

Houſe,

Houſe, or in one of the Courts, though I believe it was none of them, and that is The Covert of the Sabbath, of which there is ſpeech and mention, 2 King. XVI. 18. where it is ſaid of Ahaz, The Covert of the Sabbath, that they had built in the Houſe, and the Kings entry without, &c. How to frame the Verb to this ſentence is ſomewhat doubtful: whether to ſay he turned it from the Houſe of the Lord, and ſo doth our Engliſh, or he turned it to the Houſe of the Lord, and ſo doth the Chaldee Paraphraſt and ſome others with him: for the word in the Original doth not determine it. Were that the queſtion before us, I ſhould adhere to the ſenſe of our Engliſh (for the Kings entry without was turned to the Houſe of the Lord from its firſt making) but our queſtion is, what this Covert of the Sabbath was. The Seventy have rendred it Στρῶμα καθέδρας The foundation of the chair or ſeat, upon what miſtake in their unprickt Bible, a mean Hebrician will eaſily diſcover, namely that they read Muſadh for Muſach (Daleph and Caph final being like) and for Shabbath they read Shebeth. [u] The moſt received opinion about this matter is, that this was ſome ſpecial piece of building, that was purpoſely made for the courſe of Prieſts that went out every Sabbath to repoſe themſelves in, till the Sabbath was out, or till they might go home. And the reaſon of this conception is becauſe of the word Sabbath, which they ſuppoſe to refer rather to the change of the Prieſts courſes, who came in and went out on the Sabbath, than to the Service, or the Peoples attending, whoſe concourſe was greater at the Feſtivals than on the Sabbath; I ſhould rather take it to mean ſome Court of Guard that was made on the top of the Cauſey Shallecheth up towards the Gate Coponius, where the Kings Guard ſtood on the Sabbaths, having attended the King into the Temple, till he came out again, there to receive him again and to Guard him home: and I ſhould underſtand and conſtrue the word The Kings in conjunction with both particulars named, namely that it meaneth the Kings covert of the Sabbath as well as the Kings Entry without: and my reaſon for this opinion I ſhould fetch partly from the mention of theſe Gates that we had in ſpeech before, namely, The Gate of the Foundation, and the Gate behind the Guard, 2 King. XI. 6. And partly from the paſſage in Jerem. XXXVIII. 14. where it is ſaid, that King Zedekiah ſent and took Jeremy the Prophet unto him into the third entry that was in the Houſe of the Lord, where Solomon Jarchi doth ingenuouſly confeſs that he knows not what this third Entry in the Houſe of the Lord was: but perhaps, ſaith he, it meaneth the Court of Iſrael; the Court of the Women and the Chel being the two other. Kimchi doth well conceive that this Entry was as they came from the Kings Houſe into the Temple, but more of it he hath not determined. I ſhould ſay it meaneth the Gate Coponius: and conceive the King coming to the Temple, through theſe entrances or paſſages. Firſt, At the bottom of the Stairs or deſcent of Zion, much about his turning to come upon the Cauſey, there was the Gate of the Foundation; then being come up the Cauſey towards the Temple, he paſſed through the Gate behind the Guard, and walked through the Court of Guard, which I ſuppoſe was called the Kings covert for the Sabbath, and ſo through the Gate Coponius, which was his third entrance or Gate he paſſed through. Theſe Gates, we ſaid before, were Gates of Sion, meaning that they were in the way from the Temple thither, and not Gates of the Temple it ſelf.

According therefore to this ſuppoſal, I apprehend that Ahaz becoming a Renegado to Religion, did deface and defile the Temple within, and did clean cut off the way of the Kings acceſs thither without, as if he and his ſhould never have more to do there: And according to this ſuppoſal alſo I apprehend, that Zedekiah having gariſoned himſelf in the Temple, while the Chaldeans were now lying in Siege about the City, he ſends for Jeremy from his priſon in Zion, and he comes up to the Gate Coponius or Shallecheth, and there the King and he confer together. And now let us turn our Eyes and Obſervation upon what is to be found in the Court from which we have thus far digreſſed: and firſt we will begin with the Altar, which is not only the moſt remarkable thing to be obſerved there, but which muſt alſo ſerve us as a ſtanding mark, from whence to meaſure the place and ſight of other things.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Of the Altar of Burnt-offering.

THE Altar that Moſes made in the Wilderneſs, becauſe it was to be carried up and down, was of light materials and of ſmall dimenſions: for a it was of Shittim wood, and but five cubits ſquare, and three cubits high, with a Grate of Braſs hanging within it for the Fire and Sacrifice to lye upon. And therefore when it is called the brazen Altar, 2 Chon. I. 5. it is becauſe it was plated over with braſs, Exod. XXXVIII. 1. But when Solomon came to build the Temple, and there was to be no more removing of the Tabernacle of the Congregation as there had been before, b he made the Altar far larger and weightier than that of Moſes: namely of Braſs and of twenty cubits ſquare and ten cubits high.

b 2 Chron. IV. 1.

I ſhall not be curious to inquire whether Solomon's Altar were of braſs indeed or no; or whether it is ſaid to be of braſs, though it were of ſtone, becauſe it ſucceeded inſtead of Moſes his brazen one, as c ſome Jews conceive, d or as others, becauſe though it were of ſtone, yet it was over-laid with braſs: I ſee no reaſon why it ſhould not be properly and literally underſtood that it was of maſſie braſs indeed: for why may we not well conclude by the plating of Moſes his Altar over with braſs, that it was made of wood only for lightneſs, and had it not been for that, it had been all of braſs as well as the outſide: And that that outſide plating, might be a warrant to Solomon to make his Altar of maſſie braſs. It is true indeed that there is a command of making an Altar of Earth or Stone, Exod. XX. but it may very well be queſtioned, whether theſe Altars meant not ſuch as were made upon ſpecial and emergent occaſions, namely upon the Lords ſingular appearing to particular perſons, as to Gideon, Manoah and others, who upon ſuch appearances built Altars and ſacrificed, Judg. VI. 26. & XIII. 19. 1 King. XVIII. 30, 31.

c Vid. Kimch. in 1 King. VIII. 64.

There is but little to be diſcovered about the exact faſhion and Fabrick of Solomon's Altar, becauſe the Scripture ſpeaketh very conciſely of it: For it ſaith only thus, He made an Altar of braſs, twenty cubits the length thereof, and twenty cubits the bredth thereof, and ten cubits the height thereof, 2 Chron. IV. 1. So that it was four times as big in its ſquare, as was the Altar made by Moſes, and three times as high, and a cubit over: but whether it were exactly of the faſhion of that of Moſes, as whether the middle ſpace within its ſquare were hollow like his, or made up with ſtone, and whether it had a grated Hearth like his or a ſolid, and what was the manner of the aſcending and going up to it, may be rather apprehended by ſuppoſal, than certainly known by any ſcriptural deſcription or demonſtration.

The Sacrifices that are recorded to have been offered ſometimes at once, both upon the Altar of Moſes and that of Solomon, are exceeding wonderful, and may cauſe a Man to marvail, how ſo vaſt numbers ſhould be laid and burnt in ſo little a ſpace, as even the larger of them was of, though a very large time ſhould be allowed for it: as Solomon's thouſand Sacrifices upon Moſes his Altar, 1 King. III. 4. and the peoples ſeven hundred Oxen and ſeven thouſand Sheep upon Solomon's, 2 Chron. XV. 11, &c. Moſes his Altar was but five cubits ſquare, and how long a time might be required for a thouſand Beaſts whole Burnt-offerings, for ſo they are called, to be burnt in ſo ſmall a compaſs? David Kimchi upon that place and ſtory Gloſſeth thus, He offered not all theſe Sacrifices in one day, but before he returned again from Gibeon to Jeruſalem: yet it ſeemeth by our Rabbins that they took it to be done at one time. The greateſt ſolemnities that ever were at Jeruſalem laſted ordinarily but ſeven days; or at the utmoſt but fourteen, when they would double their Feſtivity, as at the Dedication of the Temple, 1 King. VIII. 65. now grant Solomon fourteen, nay twice fourteen days ſtay at Gibeon, yet will it ſeem difficult that he ſhould diſpatch ſo many Sacrifices even in that time. And at his own Altar at Jeruſalem how vaſt is the number of Sacrifices, that is mentioned, 1 King. VIII. 63. And Solomon offered a Sacrifice of Peace-offerings, which he offered to the Lord, two and twenty thouſand Oxen, and an hundred and twenty thouſand Sheep: ſo the King and all the Children of Iſrael dedicated the Houſe of the Lord, The ſame day did the King hallow the middle of the Court, &c.

Allow the whole fourteen days that are ſpoken of in verſ. 65. unto this buſineſs, and yet the Text ſeems to limit it to a ſhorter time; and for all that, a Man may rather ſtand amazed at ſuch a thing as this doing, than find out any ſatisfactory apprehenſion how it ſhould be done. Sure the divine fire upon the Altar, was of a more ſingular quickneſs of diſpatch than ordinary fires: or elſe I know not what can be ſaid to theſe things. The Jews do reckon ſeveral wonders that were continually acted at the Temple, as that no Flies infeſted that place, though there were ſo much ſlaughtering of Beaſts there, and that the ſmoke of the Altar always went ſtraight up and was never blown aſide by the wind, &c. which though it may be they are the leſs believed for the relaters ſakes, yet certainly well weighed in themſelves they carry very good ſenſe and reaſon in them. For who would have been able in the Summer to have ſtood in the Court near the Altar where there was ſo much blood ſhed, and fleſh ſtirring, if the ſlaughter place there had been troubled with ſtink, Flies and Waſps, as our common Slaughter-houſes are? And how reekey and ſmokey a place would the Temple and all the places about it have been, and how would thoſe that attended the ſervice, have been choaked and ſtifled, and no Man able to have indured in the Court, if the ſmoke from off the Altar had been blown up and down with every puff of wind, as we ordinarily ſee ſmoke to be? So that for the prevention of ſuch unconveniences as theſe which would have made the ſervice intolerable and unacceſſible, we cannot but acknowledge a continual miraculous providence and diſpenſation. And ſo in this particular that we have in hand: that multitudes of Sacrifices, ſuch as were eſpecially at the three Feſtivals, ſhould be diſpatched by the fire within the time allotted for the offering of ſuch Sacrifices, is rather to be aſcribed to miracle than to any thing elſe. The Altar is called Ariel, the Lords Lion, as we ſhall obſerve by and by, and it was a Lion of a very quick devouring.

Now whereas it is ſaid, That Solomon did hallow the middle of the Court that was before the Houſe of the Lord, for there he offered Burnt-offerings and Meat-offerings and the fat of the Peace-offerings becauſe the brazen Altar that was before the Lord was too little to receive them: lay this alſo in too, and yet it will be difficult enough to apprehend the diſpatch of ſo many thouſand Sacrifices in ſo ſhort a time, if this conſideration be not alſo laid in therewithal. But the queſtion that is moſt ordinarily raiſed out of theſe words is, in what ſenſe to underſtand this hallowing of the middle of the Court: whether he burnt the Sacrifices upon the very Pavement, as is the opinion of Rabbi Judah, or whether he ſet up Moſes's Altar by his own Altar and offered on it, or whether he built an Altar of ſtone by his brazen one: for theſe opinions are alſo held; but methinks the greater queſtion is about the place, and what is meant by the middle of the Court? Upon which quære, theſe two things, may firſt be taken into obſervation. 1. That fire from Heaven in the time of David, had appointed out the exact place of offering Sacrifice or of the Altar, 1 Chron. XXI. 1. and to go about that piece of ſervice in any other place of the Court, required either a prophetical warrant, or a diſpenſation through meer neceſſity, both which diſpenſers concurred here. 2. That this place which Solomon hallowed in the Court, was hallowed by the very ſervice performed upon it; The Altar of Moſes was hallowed at its firſt ſetting up, by being annointed, and ſo do the Jews, not without good ground, aſſert that Solomon's Altar was hallowed likewiſe: but this neceſſitated place, for ſo let me call it, which Solomon was conſtrained to ſet apart for that ſervice, was not ſo ſerved, but his very ſacrificing there did hallow the place: namely for ſuch a preſent imployment, but not for future. And ſo the current of the Text may be interpreted, he hallowed the middle of the Court, for there he offered Burnt-offerings: ſo that whereas the other Altar being anointed, ſanctified the gift, this extraordinary Altar did not ſo much ſanctifie the offering at the firſt, as was ſanctified by it: And ſo the Temple after the return out of the Babylonian Captivity and all the Utenſils belonging to it, were ſanctified by the very ſervice, for there was neither divine fire, nor any cloud of glory, nor any anointing Oyl to ſanctifie them.

The middle of the Court which Solomon hallowed, I ſuppoſe is to be expounded in the largeſt acceptation of either of the words, both the middle, and the Court: for the word the middle of a thing in the Scripture language, is not always taken for the very Center of the thing mentioned, but for any part within that thing, be it in whatſoever it will, as in the middle of the Land, and in the middle of the Congregation, meaneth but within the Land, and in the Congregation: So is the phraſe to be underſtood here, that Solomon hallowed the Court in any part of it for the burning of the Sacrifices, though the preciſe compaſs of the Altar, was fixedly pointed out as the only place for ſuch a purpoſe, by fire from Heaven: And as for the word the Court, the preſent occaſion doth ſeem to extend the ſenſe of it to the whole compaſs of the holy ground: for if we look upon the vaſt and infinite number of Sacrifices that were to be ſlain and offered, we can do no leſs, and all little enough too, than allow the whole compaſs of the holy ground for it: And the word the Court, ſtandeth not in oppoſition to the Mountain of the Houſe, but both the Mountain of the Houſe, and the Court it ſelf, are both called by that general name the Court in contradiction to the very body of the Temple.

Ezekiel's Altar is ſaid to be twelve cubits long, and twelve cubits broad, ſquare in the four ſquares thereof, Ezek. XLIII. 16. which g the Talmudicks do reckon up to four and twenty cubits upon every ſide of the ſquare: for they ſuppoſe that the account is not as meaſuring from corner to corner on every ſide, but meaſuring from the very midſt or center of the Altar to any of the ſides, and thither was twelve cubits: And the reaſon of this their conſtruction is, becauſe it is ſaid אל ד' רבעיו Towards the four ſquares of it. It might ſeem (ſay they) that the whole Altar was but twelve cubits ſquare in all: but when it is ſaid אל ארבעת רבעיו Towards the four ſquares thereof, it ſheweth, that he meaſureth from the middle, twelve cubits every way: And of this ſquare, namely of four and twenty cubits on every ſide, they hold the Altar to have been after the Captivity, and ſo they deſcribe it. R. Joſe ſaith, At the firſt the Altar was but twenty eight cubits on every ſide: And according to this meaſure it narrowed in its riſing till the fire place was but twenty cubits ſquare: But when the Children of the Captivity came up, they added thereunto four cubits on the North, and four cubits on the Weſt, like the faſhion of the letter γ Gamma.

As Solomon's Altar was ten cubits high, 2 Chr. IV. 1. ſo alſo was the Altar at the ſecond Temple, and ſo the Jeruſalem Talmud doth witneſs, ſaying נובה המזבח י' אמות h The height of the Altar was ten cubits: And of that height is Ezekiel's Altar, whoſe copy the Children of the Captivity did very much follow: Now as it was impoſſible for the Prieſts when the Altar was ſo high, to ſtand on the ground and to ſerve upon it, ſo had they an expreſs prohibition againſt going up to the Altar by ſteps, leſt their nakedneſs under their looſe Coats ſhould be diſcovered, Exod. XX. 26. Therefore as a temper between theſe two exigents, there was a gentle riſing made from the ground to the top of the Altar, whereon the Prieſts might go up to the Altar to ſerve upon it; and this riſing was called כבש Kebeſh which may well be Engliſhed The riſe of the Altar.

h Talm. Jeruſ. in Erubin per. 7.

The Gloſs upon the Miſhneh in the Treatiſe Zabim, and R. Nathan from thence hath taught us to underſtand the manner of this riſing, by that inſtance and deſcription that they give of the word כבש i That it is a great Plank that Mariners have, that when they will come down out of the Ship, they deſcend, or come down upon it, to ſave their feet from touching of the water: and this Plank is called כבש Kebeſh: And ſo in the Treatiſe of the Sabbath they have a caſe, about a כבש Kebeſh, or ſuch a Plank: k Doth an Idolater make a כבש Deſcent for himſelf, to go down by? an Iſraelite may go down after him. But doth he make it for the Iſraelite? it is not lawful for him to go upon it: There is an example of Rabban Gamaliel and the Elders, they were to come out of a Ship, and an Idolater had made כבש a deſcent for himſelf, Rabban Gamaliel and the Elders came down upon it. So that by this parallel we may obſerve the manner and nature of this כבש Kebeſh or riſe to the Altar, that it was a ſloping gentle riſing, but made of ſtone, whereby the Prieſts might go up to the Altar, without danger of diſcovering their nakedneſs: we might call it a riſing Cawſey to the top of the Altar; for ſo doth l Maymony call the Arched Cawſey over the Valley of Kidron to Mount Olivet by which the Red Cow was brought to her burning by this very name כבש Kebeſh.

Now as for the manner and form of the Altar and of this riſing up to it, and for the right underſtanding of all, which is not very facil, divers things are to be obſerved. As,

1. There are reckoned theſe ſeveral parts of the Altar. Firſt, The Foundation, יסוד which alſo in Ezekiel is called חיק The boſom or bottom upon the ground, Ezek. XLIII. 13, 14. This was one cubit high from the ground, and one cubit broad: and the length of this Foundation upon every ſide of the ſquare was two and thirty cubits. And therefore whereas it was ſaid before, that the bredth of the Altar and its riſe was ſixty two cubits from North to South, it is to be taken, as that the riſe is to be accounted a thing different from the Altar it ſelf, and lying a great ſpace further out than the compaſs of the Altar did, as we ſhall ſee anon: Now this Foundation which is ſaid to be two and thirty cubits ſquare every way, did not hold the compleat meaſure of a cubit broad in every part of it, but in the South-Eaſt corner of it, it wanted ſomewhat to make the corner a perfect Angle anſwerable to the other corners. And this is that which the Talmud meaneth when it ſaith היסוד היה מהלך על פני כל הצפון ועל פני כל המערב ואוכל בדרום אמה א' ובמזרח אמה א' m The Foundation was a perfect walk, all along on the North ſide, and all along on the South: but on the South it wanted one cubit, and on the Eaſt one cubit. That is, were a Man upon the Foundation, he might walk upon all the length of the North ſide, and might turn at the North-Weſt corner, and ſo walk on the Weſt quarter: but would he do ſo, to go off from the South quarter to the Eaſt, he could not, for when he was to turn at the South-Eaſt Angle, there was no ſuch Angle there, as there was at the other corners, for it was broken off, and wanted a cubit on the South-ſide, and a cubit on the Eaſt, which two cubits ſhould have met to have brought the corner into a ſharpe point like the others. Now the reaſon of the defect is given by them elſe where, to be becauſe, that very corner only of all the Altar was not in the Tribe of Benjamin, but in the Tribe of Judah. For they held it neceſſary that all the Altars ſhould be in the lot of Benjamin, becauſe of thoſe words of Jacob, n Benjamin ſhall raven as a Wolf, in the morning he ſhall devour the prey, and in the evening he ſhall divide the ſpoil: which how they underſtood of the Sanctuary and Altar being built

n Gen. XLIX. 27.

within Benjamin's lot, appears by the Gloſs that the Jeruſalem Targum and Jonathan put upon it. Benjamin, ſay they, is likened to a devouring Wolf, becauſe he was a ſtrong Tribe: In his Country the divine Majeſty of the Lord of all the world was to dwell, and in his poſſeſſion was the Houſe of the Sanctuary to be built; In the morning the Prieſts ſhall offer the daily Lamb, till it be the fourth hour of the day, and between the Evenings they ſhall offer the other Lamb, and at Even they ſhall divide what remaineth of the reſt of the Sacrifices, and every one ſhall eat his portion. But more copiouſly in the Treatiſe Zevachin or concerning Sacrifices, where this very point about the want of this corner of the Altar is copiouſly diſcuſſed. The fifth Chapter of that Book, ſetteth it ſelf purpoſely to deſcribe the ſeveral places where the ſeveral Sacrifices were ſlain beſide the Altar: and after other things it falls upon the queſtion that is before us about this deficient Angle of the Altar, and it handles and derermines it thus, o The South-Eaſt corner had no foundation: what was the reaſon? Rabbi Eliezer ſaith, becauſe it was not in the portion of the Ravener: As Rab. Samuel the Son of Rabbi Iſaac ſaith מובח אוכל בחלקו של יהודה אמה The Altar took up one cubit in the portion of Judah: Rab. Levi bar Chama ſaith, R. Chama bar Chaninah ſaith there went a line out of the portion of Judah, and entred upon the portion of Benjamin. And Righteous Benjamin was troubled at it, as it is ſaid חופף עליו כל היום (The Gloſſers render it, He was careful for it every day) Yet Righteous Benjamin obtained to become אושפיזכן Hoſt to the holy bleſſed God as it is ſaid; And he ſhall dwell between his ſhoulders: The meaning of which paſſage is to this purpoſe: that the line that parted the lots or portions of the two Tribes Judah and Benjamin, came juſt over at this point of the Altar, that if this Angle of the Foundation had been made like the other, a cubit of the Altar would have been in the lot of Judah, which they had no Scripture warrant for, for the Altar was to be in the lot of the Ravenor, that is of Benjamin that ſhould raven as a Wolf, therefore they choſe rather to make no Angle at all at this point of the Foundation, than to make it, ſince it would fall in the portion of Judah.

o Talm. Bab. in Zevachin. per. 5. in Gemara.

As this South-Eaſt point of the Foundation was remarkable for this, that it had no corner, ſo was the South-Weſt corner of it remarkable for another thing, and that was, for two holes that were in it near to the Angles point, one upon the Weſt Foundation, and the other upon the South, into which the blood that was poured upon the Foundation did run, and ſo into a ſink or common-ſhore under ground, which emptied it ſelf into the Valley of Kidron.

2. The baſe or foundation having thus riſen one cubit from the ground and carried a cubit bredth round about, but only in the Angle that hath been mentioned, the ſquare of the body of the Altar, was grown then, a cubit narrower on every ſide, and ſo it was but thirty cubits upon every ſide of the ſquare: and thus it held for five cubits high, and then it narrowed one cubit more, and this narrrowing was called סובב the Circuit of the Altar: And there the ſquare was but eight and twenty cubits on every ſide: But here the Talmuds meaſure differeth from the meaſure of Ezekiel, which though Rabbi Solomon obſerveth, yet he concludeth that the meaſure in the Talmud was the true meaſure in the ſecond Temple. Ezekiel ſaith, That from the bottom upon the ground, to the lower ſettle were two cubits, whereas the Talmud ſaith but one, and from the lower ſettle to the higher, Ezekiel reckoneth four cubits, but the Talmud five: In which difference in the particulars yet there is agreement in the main ſumm, and both of them do raiſe the Circuit of the Altar ſix cubits high, and therefore we ſhall not ſpend time to reconcile them here, but leave them to be taken up by and by; only we cannot paſs over the word that Ezekiel uſeth, for both the Foundation and the Circuit, and that is עזרה Azarah which is the common word that is uſed for the Court: Becauſe that as the people did tread in the Court at the time of the ſervice, ſo did the Prieſts upon theſe ledges or ſides of the Altar: eſpecially upon the higher, which was called the Circuit of the Altar, when they went about it to beſprinkle the horns of it with the blood of the Sacrifices: The manner of which action the Talmudick Chapter lately cited, giveth us the relation of, in the Miſhneh, in theſe words, p The Sin-offering of the Congregation, or of a private perſon, and the Goats, offered at the beginnings of the months, or at the ſolemn times, their ſlaughter was on the North ſide, of the Altar, and the taking of their blood in ſome of the Veſſels of the ſervice was on the North ſide, and it required a fourfold putting on the four horns. How was this done? He went up the כבש riſe of the Altar, and turned off to the סובב circuit of it: He went to the South-Eaſt horn, and then to the North-Eaſt, ſo to the North-Weſt, and laſtly to the South-Weſt, and the blood that was left he poured upon the Foundation on the South ſide: Either of theſe ledges the Rabbins ſometimes call מלבן q Malben, either becauſe they were as floors whereon the Prieſts trod, for ſo the word is ſometimes taken, or becauſe they were often rub'd to keep them white, ſince there was ſo much blood ſprinkled on them: ſ For the whole Altar was whited over twice a year, namely at the Paſsover and at the Feaſt of Tabernacles. Rabbi ſaith, that it was rubbed with a Map on the eve of every Sabbath.

3. A cubit height above this upper ledge, which was called the Circuit, there was a narrowing again, a cubit bredth, and there began the horns of the Altar, and now the ſquare was but ſix and twenty cubits upon every ſide. The horns were at every corner a cubit ſquare being hollow, and riſing a cubit upward: for it is a uſual ſaying among the Jews that גובה כל קרן וקרן ה' טפחים t The height of every horn was five hands bredth, or a common cubit, which is to be taken ſo as that the horns roſe but one cubit ſtraight up from their Foundation or firſt beginning, abating by degrees from a cubit ſquare in the bottom, into a Pyramidical ſharp, but ſo as that for one cubit height it roſe ſtraight, and then pointed outward like the tip of a horn: The loweſt part of theſe horns, was ſeven cubits from the ground, and therefore theſe words, bind the Sacrifice with cords to the horns of the Altar, Pſal. CXVIII. can hardly be taken in propriety, as if the Sacrifice ſtood tied to the Altar till it was offered; but as the Chaldee paraphraſeth it, it meaneth, Tie the Lamb that is to be offered, with cords till ye come to offer him, and ſprinkle his blood upon the horns of the Altar. Joab in fear of his life is ſaid to have fled to the Altar, and to lay hold upon the horns of it. 1 King. II. 29. in which paſſage the Hebrew Doctors ſay he was doubly deceived, Firſt, in that he thought to have refuge and eſcaping, for wilful murder; and Secondly, in that he looked for ſafety by taking hold of it, whereas the refuge of the Altar, was on the top of it אי"רול לא היה קולט המובח אלא על השגגה ועל גגו u Our Rabbins ſay, ſaith David Kimchi, the Altar was no refuge but for Man-ſlaughter committed unawares and but on the top of it. But whether Joab or they were the likelier to be deceived in this thing, I leave to them to diſcuſs between them: But this certainly cannot go unobſerved, that God in giving of the pattern of the Altar, was ſo punctual for the making of horns to it in the corners of it, as that that is a ſpecial charge, both about the Altar of Burnt-Offering, Exod. XXVII. 2. Thou ſhalt make the horns of it upon the four corners thereof: And alſo about the Altar of Incenſe, Exod. XXX. 2. The horns thereof ſhall be of the ſame. Now what the Lord intended to ſignifie by this ſo exact a preſcription, it is not good to be too bold to go about to determine, yet we may not unprofitably look upon them as a leſſon for inſtruction: reading to us that as the Altar ſignifieth Chriſt, who offered himſelf upon himſelf, the manhood upon the Altar of the God-head, and as the double Altar, of Sacrifice and Incenſe typified the offering up of Chriſt at his death, and the continual Inſcenſe of his mediation, ſo the horns of both Altars may well be conceived to ſignifie, the dignity vigor and merit of his death and mediation: upon which whoſoever layeth hold by aſſured Faith ſhall eſcape condemnation: and unto which (as the Prieſts to theſe horns at every Sacrifice mentioned) a ſinner in every ſervice is to make his addreſs and application.

u Kimch. in 1 King. II.

It is not an improper conception of Rabbi Solomon, about the Law concerning the Cities of refuge, Exod. XXI. 13. w that as God enjoyned them when they ſhould come into the Land of Canaan to appoint a place for the Man-ſlayer that had killed a Man at unawares to flee unto, ſo that while they were in the Wilderneſs God appointed them a place for refuge, upon ſuch occaſion, and that was the Camp of the Levites. Now the addition that follows in the next Verſe, that they ſhould take a wilful murderer from his Altar, to put to death, doth not only confirm that his ſuppoſal, but it doth give ſome intimation, that even in the Land of Canaan, and when their refuge Cities were ſet out, yet the Altar was then a Sanctuary for thoſe that fled to it in ſuch or ſuch caſes: A very eminent figure of deliverance from condemnation by laying hold upon Chriſts merits.

w R. Sol in Exod. XXI.

The x Jews diſpute why Joab, whom they hold to have been Preſident of the Sanhedrin, and knew the Law well enough, that a wilful murderer ſhould not eſcape by the Altar, why he ſhould flee thither: And they Anſwer, That it was either to ſave his Eſtate, which had he been ſlain elſewhere, had been forfeit: or to obtain his burial, which had he been Judged and Condemned judicially, he had loſt and been caſt away unburied: But it ſeemeth rather that the occurrence which is mentioned immediately before, and which occurred immediately before, namely about Abiathar, did give him occaſion to do what he did: For though Abiathar were in the ſame fault with Joab, in the matter of Adonijah, yet had he eſcaped death (being only put from his Office) upon theſe two reaſons, becauſe he had born the Ark and was High-Prieſt, and becauſe he had been afflicted and partner with David in his afflictions. under this later predicament Joab fell as well as he, and might hope for favour in that reſpect equally with him: And as for the former, Joab indeed was not, nor could not be a Prieſt, yet, thought he, I will do as much towards that as I can, that is, lay hold on the horns of the Altar, and there devote my ſelf to God and his ſervice by that ſolemn Ceremony, and it may be for theſe two conſiderations, Solomon will ſpare me, as he did Abiathar. (For that the laying hold of the Altar in this kind had a Vow in it for the future, as well as a preſent ſafety, might be argued from the nature of the Altar, which made holy what touched it, and from the very circumſtance of laying hold upon it.) But Joab to the wilful murder murder of Abner and Amasa, had added contempt and oppoſal of the King upon Davids Throne, which figured him that was to Reign over the Houſe of Iſrael for ever, and therefore unfit to eſcape, and uncapable to be any ſuch votary.

4. A cubit above the firſt riſing of the horns of the Altar, the ſquare narrowed a cubit again and ſo was now but four and twenty cubits every way, and ſo held on to that flat of it on the top where the fire lay: The cubits-ledge, that the abatement made to be as a bench round about, was היזוך כהנים the place whereupon the Prieſts went, and ſtood about the Altar to lay on the pieces of the Sacrifice, or to ſtir them as they lay in the fire: And this helpeth us to judge concerning the manner and faſhion of the horns ſpoken of laſt; namely, that they did not riſe directly upright higher than the Altar it ſelf, for then it had been impoſſible for the Prieſt to go about the Altar upon this ledge, for the horns would have hindred if they had riſen a full cubit ſquare up hither: but their form is to be conceived as was ſaid before, namely, that they roſe indeed up even with this ledge, but they ſo ſharpened and bended outward when they came level with it, that the Prieſts had paſſed between them and the Altar.

From the סובב Circuit of the Altar upward, which was four cubits, was that part which more peculiarly was called Harel, and Ariel, Ezek. XLIII. 15. And Harel was four cubits; and from Ariel upwards were the four horns. He had deſcribed the gradual riſings of the Altar hitherto in the Verſes before, in theſe characters and deſcriptions.

Verſ. 13. The bottom ſhall be a cubit, and the breadth a cubit. This was the Foundation of which we have ſpoken, a cubit high and a cubit broad.

And the border thereof by the edge thereof round about a ſpan: The edge of this Foundation was not ſharp as are the edges of ſtone ſteps, but it was wrought as are the ſtone borders of our Chimney-hearths, with a border of a ſpan over: and ſo the blood that was poured upon this Foundation could not run off to the Pavement, but was kept up that it might run down at the holes fore-mentioned, into the Common-ſhore.

וזה גב המזבח And thus was the top of the Altar: The top of the Altar was alſo finiſhed with ſuch another bordering.

Verſ. 14. And from the bottom upon the ground even to the lower ſettle, two cubits: Not that the Foundation called here the lower ſettle, was two cubits thick in the flatneſs of it, as it lay upon the ground, for the Verſe before ſaith, that the bottom was but a cubit, but that from this Foundation, there aroſe a ſlope riſing a cubit height, which was ſomewhat thicker than the body of the Altar preſently above it, and ſo from the ground to the top of this riſing, where the ſquare narrowed were two cubits: and from the top of this ſloping where the ſquare narrowed, to the Circuit, was properly but four cubits, but from the Foundation five. And ſo though the Talmud ſpeaketh differently from the Prophet (when it ſaith the Foundation or lower ſettle was but one cubit high, and he, two: and when it ſaith the height from the lower to the higher ſettle, or from the Foundation to the circuit was five cubits, and the Prophet ſaith but four) yet do they both mean but one and the ſame thing, but underſtood as hath been ſpoken: namely, the one taketh the Foundation or lower ſettle, barely as it lay flat upon the ground, and the other takes it with this cubital ſlope riſing from it, made leaning a cubit height to the body of the Altar: and this interpretation helpeth to underſtand that which David Kimchi profeſſeth he cannot tell what to make of; and that is, why the upper ſettle which was narrower by two cubits in the ſquare, is called the greater, and the lower, which was larger in the ſquare, is called the leſſer: The reaſon whereof is this, becauſe the upper, though it were leſs in compaſs, yet was larger in bredth, becauſe this leaning ſlope riſing that we ſpeak of, took up a good part of the bredth of the lower, and ſo the walk upon it was not ſo clear and large as it was upon the other.

And then the Prophet tells us, that when the body of the Altar was thus riſen ſix cubits high to the upper ſettle, which the Talmudicks call the circuit, That thence Harel was to be four cubits, and from Ariel and upward, the four horns.

a Kimch. in loc. Conf. Lemp. in Mid. p. 97.

There a are ſome that conceive that Harel and Ariel are indeed but one and the ſame word, though ſo diverſly written, from whom I cannot much differ, as to point of Grammar, becauſe the Letters ה א do admit of ſuch alternancy in the language, yet me thinks the difference of the words ſhould hold out ſome difference of the ſenſe: and Harel to ſignifie the Lords Mountain, and Ariel the Lords Lion upon the Mountain; the lower part at the horns more properly Harel, and the upper more properly Ariel. But

ſince the Text gives the b name Ariel to all that part that was from the Root of the horns upward, we ſhall not much ſtick upon it. The word Harel, if you will conſtrue it the Mountain of the Lord, David Kimchi tells you that it is as much as to ſay, The Houſe of the Lord, and becauſe they ſerved other Gods in every place upon high Hills, this which was the Hill of the Lord was but four cubits high: And if you will take the word Ariel, our Rabbins of happy memory, ſaith he, ſay the Altar was called Ariel (or the Lords Lion) becauſe the holy fire that came down from Heaven couched on it like a Lion.

The

The word Ariel doth alſo ſignifie one exceeding ſtrong, 2 Sam. XXIII. 20. and ſo doth Arel, Eſai. XXXIII. 7. But take it whether way you will here, either for a ſtrong thing or for the Lords Lion, the Altar was very properly ſo called, either becauſe of the devouring of many Sacrifices, Lion like, or becauſe of the great ſtrength and prevalency the people had by Sacrifice, the Lord owning them wonderfully in that ſervice, whileſt gone about according to his Will: or becauſe of the ſtrong Lion Chriſt, whom the Altar and Sacrifices did repreſent. Jeruſalem, and eſpecially Zion the City where David Dwells, is alſo called Ariel, the ſtrong one, or the Lion of the Lord, becauſe of its prevalency againſt all enemies whatſoever, whileſt it continued to be the Lords, through the ſtrength of thoſe promiſes that were made unto it: but when it forſook the Lord, and became prophane, it is threatned that it ſhall become as the other Ariel, or the Altar, where was continually abundance of ſhedding of blood and ſlaughter, Eſai. XXIX. 1, 2.

The very top of the Altar was four and twenty cubits ſquare, and this was called מערכה Maaracah, or the Hearth, where, as we obſerve elſewhere, there were fires continually burning, but eſpecially one very great one for the Sacrifices. And thus was the bulk and platform of the Altar; It was a large pile of ten cubits high riſing by degrees, ſo as that at the foot it was two and thirty cubits on every ſide of the ſquare, but at the top came to be but four and twenty.

The riſing thus: 1. The baſe one cubit riſing, and then the ſquare leſſened a cubit. 2. The body of the Altar riſing plain five cubits, and then leſſening one cubit in the ſquare. 3. A cubit riſing again, and the ſquare leſſening a cubit, and at the bench where it narrowed there ſtood the four horns out at the four corners. 4. A riſing again one cubit, and a narrowing one cubit, and there was the bench where the Prieſts ſtood to ſerve. 5. And then a riſing two cubits, and there was the Hearth.

Thus ſtood the Altar, and thus ſtood the Prieſts upon the higheſt bench to ſerve, but how came they up thither? If they could have gone up the ſteps that we have mentioned, namely, where the ſquare ſtill deſcended, yet was it unlawful, becauſe of that command, Exod. XX. 26. But they could not go up that way neither, for we have ſeen that between the firſt bench and the ſecond there was five cubits riſing, which is a meaſure far beyond any Mans ſtepping up: the way therefore for them to go both to the top of the Altar, to their bench two cubits below the top, and to the other benches, as there was occaſion, was thus provided.

There c was a gentle riſing Cawſey (for ſo let us call it, they called it כבש Chebbeſh) on the South ſide of the Altar ſixteen cubits broad, that began two and thirty cubits from the Altar foot and roſe eaſily to the head of it in a gentle deſcent, made of the ſame materials that the Altar was, of which hereafter, ſo that this Cawſey lay out from the Altar two and thirty cubits on the South ſide, leaving on either ſide it four cubits breadth, which it wanted of the breadth of the Altar.

c Mid. per. 3*c*

On d the Weſt ſide of it there ſtood two Tables, one of Silver, on which they ſet and laid the Veſſels of the Service: the other of Marble which was called the Table of the Fat, on which they laid the pieces of the Sacrifice when they were to be brought up to the Altar. And there was alſo on e the ſame ſide of it, and (as f it is probably conjectured) made in the very ſide of the Cawſey or riſe it ſelf, a place into which thoſe birds that being preſent to be offered, did prove unfit, were caſt, till ſome convenient time to convey them away, this was called רבובה Rebubah, for ſo we may conclude upon g R. Nathan's credit who ſo readeth, though others differ: שם נותנין פסולי העוף חטאת h And there (ſaith the general conſent) they laid up the Birds unmeet for Offering. i On the Eaſt ſide of it, was the place where they laid the guts and garbidge of the Birds that were offered, and where he that cleanſed the Incenſe Altar poured down the aſhes he brought forth, and he that brought the firſt aſhes from off the Burnt-offering Altar, did the like: But theſe things continued long there after they were laid down, but were ſpeedily by ſome or other conveyed away: k By the Marble Table, which called the Table of the Fat, the Prieſts ſtood when they ſounded their Trumpets at the time of Divine Service.

The l ordinary way of going up this Cawſey, or Bridge, or call it what you will, was on the right ſide of it, that is, on the Eaſt, and to come down on the Weſt, (only upon three occaſions mentioned in the place cited in the Margine, he came down the ſame way he went up, but backward) and this helps us ſomewhat to underſtand a ſtory (which we ſhall have occaſion to look after elſewhere) related in Joma m of two Prieſts going a ſtrife who ſhould firſt get up to cleanſe the Altar of its aſhes, (which was the firſt work done in the Morning) the one of them thruſt the other off the Bridge and broake his leg, becauſe they went ſo near the ſides, though they had room enough to have gone up in the middle without danger, but the manner was not to go up that way.

As n a Man went up, firſt there was a little Cawſey on the Eaſt ſide, that brought him from the firſt beginning of this great Cawſey to the Foundation of the Altar if he had occaſion to go thither: And as he went up higher, when he was come as high as the Circuit, there was another to carry him off thither, if he had occaſion to ſprinkle blood upon the horns of the Altar: But above that I read not of any ſuch come off; not that the Prieſts had not conſtant occaſion to ſtep off to the uppermoſt ledge or bench, (for there they uſed to ſtand continually when they were turning the pieces in the fire, or the like) but becauſe by the time that the riſe was come up thither, the ſtep off was ſo eaſie, that a leſs matter than what deſerved the name of כבש a bridge would ſerve the turn.

Thus was the form of the Altar and the aſcent to it: but I muſt mention here before I have done with the form of it, ſomewhat that was viſible upon it, that had ſome reference alſo to the form of it, and that was, o A red line that went round about it in the juſt middle between the bottom and the top, to be a direction to the Prieſts that they might ſprinkle the blood above or beneath (for ſometime they did the one and ſometime the other, as we ſhall ſhew when we treat concerning Sacrifice) as the occaſion called upon them to do, and not miſtake. For whereas ſome blood was to be poured or ſprinkled at the bottom of the Altar, and ſome upon the horns of it, ſome below, ſome above, to make ſure that either of theſe ſhould keep its right place and not tranſgreſs, they ſet this line to be a bound between them.

The materials and manner of working up this renowned pile, let the Reader take in the Talmuds and in Maymonides his own words and expreſſions p When they built the Altar (ſay they) they built it ſolid like a Pillar, and they made no hollow in it: but one brought whole great ſtones and little (for an iron tool might not be uſed upon them) and he brought Mortar and Pitch and Lead, and mixt all and poured all into the great baſe that he had laid according to his meaſure, and ſo he built on upwards: and he put in the midſt of the buliding a piece of Wood or of Stone at the South-Eaſt horn according to the meaſure of the Foundation, and ſo he put in the midſt of every one of the horns till he had finiſhed the building; then he took away thoſe pieces that were in the midſt of the building, and ſo the South-Eaſt horn was left without a Foundation and the reſt of the horns were left hollow.

q Midd. per. 3.

Theſe q ſtones that made the Altar and the riſe to it are recorded to have been gotten in the Valley of Bethbaccerem, a place mentioned in Neh. III. 14. and Jer. VI. 1. and the ſame Record tells us, That twice a year the Altar was whited, namely at the Paſſover and at the Feaſt of Tabernacles: and the Temple whited once a year, namely, at the Paſſover: Rabbi ſaith, on the Eve of every Sabbath they rubbed the Altar with a Map becauſe of the blood; they might not Plaſter it with an iron Trowel, leſt that touching ſhould defile it; for iron was made to ſhorten Mans days, and the Altar was made for the prolonging Mans life, and it is not fit that that which would ſhorten ſhould be lifted up upon that that would lengthen.

Thus was the faſhion and proportion of the Altar the Lords Table, Mal. I. 7. the holineſs of it was ſuch that it ſanctified the gift, Matth. XXIII. 19. that is, whatſoever came upon it, being fit to be offered המובח מקדש הראוי לו The Altar ſanctified whatſoever was fit for it. It is a Talmudick Maxim in the Treatiſe Zevachin, the very beginning of the ninth Chapter: And at the ſeventh Halacah of the ſame Chapter, they ſay, That as the Altar ſanctified what was fit for it, ſo alſo did the riſe of the Altar: and there they diſcourſe at large with what things, if they were once brought to the top of the Altar, might come down, and what might not, which we ſhall not inſiſt upon.

Before we part from the Altar, we have yet one thing more to take into obſervation about it, and that is the baſe and wretched affront that ungodly Ahaz put upon it, in not only ſetting up another Altar by it, but alſo in removing the Lords Altar out of its place, and out of its honourable imployment to give place to his. The ſtory is 2 King. XVI. He ſends the pattern of an Idolatrous Altar from Damaſcus, and Uriah the Prieſt maketh one according to that pattern: and when the King came home and ſaw the Altar, he offered upon it his Burnt-offering, Meat-offering, Drink-offering, &c. And he brought alſo the brazen Altar which was before the Lord from the fore-front of the Houſe, from between the Altar and the Houſe of the Lord, and put it on the North ſide of the Altar, verſ. 14. Rabbi Solomon expounding this place, conceiveth that by the Altar of the Lord is not meant the Altar properly and indeed, but ſome appurtenances that related and belonged to the Service of the Altar, and this concluſion he produceth from two or three traditional Premiſes: his words are theſe, This Altar that he removed cannot be the brazen Altar that Moſes made, for that was laid up; and it cannot be the Altar of ſtone which Solomon made, which indeed is called the brazen Altar in the Book of Chronicles, for that could not be removed from place to place, but by pulling down: and behold we have a Tradition, that the fire that came down from Heaven in the days of Solomon, went not off the Altar till Manaſſeh came and cauſed it to go off, for he pulled the Altar down: So that I cannot interpret the Altar here but of the Lavers and Baſes of braſs which ſerved for the Altar, and ſtood beſide it, them Ahaz removed, &c.

You

You need not marvail if he go alone in his opinion when you look upon it, and how it is ſtrained, and eſpecially from this pinch, becauſe though the Altar of Solomon is called brazen, yet he holds it to have been of Stone, and overlaid: were it of Braſs or were it of Stone, Ahaz his modeſty was not ſo much but that he would pull it down to ſerve his turn as well as remove it. It appeareth by the Text alledged, that Urijahs modeſty was a little more than Ahaz had; for he had ſet his Altar behind the Altar of the Lord, betwixt it and the Eaſt-gate, ſo that the Lords Altar was betwixt that new-found one and the Temple (it ſeemeth the ſpace at the entring in from the Eaſt-gate, was more open in the times of the firſt Temple than it was in the ſecond.) But when Ahaz comes, he removes Solomons Altar towards the North, and brings up his own and ſets it in the place of it, and ſo does as it were ſupplant the Lord of his poſſeſſion and uſurp upon it, putting the Lords Altar out of uſe as well as out of its place, and giving his own the greatneſs becauſe it was the greater, in the imployment for all the Sacrifices that were to be offered, both ordinary and extraordinary, both of the King and People: while the Altar of the Lord muſt ſtand by as a cypher, only with this dignity, which was leſs than none at all, The brazen Altar ſhall be for me to ſeek to when I think good. As for the departure of the Divine fire from off the Altar, which had come down in the days of Solomon, of which our Rabbin ſpeaketh, it is not unworthy ſome of the Readers thoughts: For the Temple was ſo oft prophaned, yea and ſometimes ſhut up, before the Captivity into Babel, as 2 Chron. XXIV. 7. & XXVIII. 24. &c. that it is hardly to be imagined, but that the fire which had been continued from the deſcent of that Divine fire, was at ſome of theſe times or other extinguiſhed. And then Quære how Hezekiah and Joſiah in their Reformation did for fire again upon the Altar.

CHAP. XXXV.

The Contents of the Court betwixt the Altar and the North-ſide of it; and betwixt the Altar and the South-ſide.

THE moſt ordinary and univerſal ſlaughter of the Sacrifices was on the North-ſide of the Altar, and ſo is it declared at large in the Treatiſe a Zevachin through the fifth Chapter, of which we have had occaſion to ſpeak before; The moſt Holy offerings (ſay they) are ſlain on the North-ſide, the Bullock and the Goat of the day of Expiation, their ſlaughter was on the North, and the taking of their Blood in a Veſſel of the Service, was on the North: The Bullocks that were to be burnt, and the Goats that were to be burnt, were ſlain on the North, and their Blood to be taken on the North: The Goats of the beginning of the months and of the ſolemn Feaſts were ſlain on the North, and their Blood taken on the North: The whole-burnt-offering moſt Holy was ſlain on the North, the Peace-offerings of the Congregation and Treſpaſs-offerings, were ſlain on the North, &c. and generally the greateſt number of Sacrifices were ſlain on that ſide the Altar: On that ſide of the Altar therefore were neceſſaries and accommodations for that purpoſe and convenience, and thoſe were eſpecially theſe three, the place of the Rings, the Tables, and the Hooks in, the Pillars.

a Talm. in Zevach. per. 5.

מן המזבח לטב עזרת ח אמות b Eight cubits from the Altar Northward was the place of the Rings, and that place was four and twenty cubits over towards the North ſtill. חוו ' סדרים שהי ' ד ' c Now the Rings were in ſix rows, four in a row: but ſome ſay they were four rows, and ſix in a row, and there they ſlew the Sacrifices. Theſe Rings or Staples rather, were fixed down in the Stones of the Pavement, and either a bending Hook was faſtned to theſe Staples, that they might bring the Neck of the Beaſt under and hold him faſt, or they drew down the Necks of the Beaſts to be ſlain with cords to theſe Staples and there faſtned them, and ſo they had them at command to ſlay them with facility. It is not much to be controverted whether there were ſix rows of theſe Rings, four in a row, or four rows with ſix Rings in a row; this doth not much break the ſquare, ſince the ſame number of Rings and the ſame compaſs of ground remaineth ſtill.

b Mid. per. 5.

c Ibid. per. 3.

Here was the place where they tyed the Sacrifices till they were killed, and where they killed them: and this place is commonly called בית טבחים The place of the ſlaughter: and to theſe Rings they tyed the Sacrifice with cords, till they were to offer him, and to ſprinkle his Blood on the Horns of the Altar, as the Chaldee Paraphraſt renders the 27. verſ. of the hundred and eighteenth Pſalm.

Now although the command was ſtrict and expreſs that ſuch and ſuch Sacrifices ſhould be ſlain on the North-ſide of the Altar, Lev. I. 10, 11, &c. that is in propriety, juſt between the Altar and North-wall of the Court: yet where there were many ſuch Sacrifices to be ſlain at once, ſo that this place of the Rings was not able to contain them, then they killed them higher up in the Court, namely in that ſpace that was between the Altar and the Porch, but on the North-ſide of it, as near as might be in the place parallel to this place of the Rings. This matter is handled and decided in Toſaphta on the Treatiſe Corbanoth in theſe words, d Which is the North-ſide of the Altar, where it was fit to kill the moſt Holy Sacrifices? It was from the North-ſide of the Altar, to the North-ſide of the Court even juſt over againſt the Altar which was thirty cubits breadth. The words of Rabbi Meir, Rabbi Eliezer from Rabbi Simeon addeth the ſpace from the Altar to the Porch, even to over againſt the cloſets of the Butchering knives, which was twenty two cubits. But Rabbi addeth the place where the Feet of the Iſraelites trod, which was eleven cubits broad, and one hundred eighty and ſeven cubits long: and the place where the Feet of the Prieſts trod, which was eleven cubits broad, and one hundred eighty and ſeven cubits long: מקו הכותל הצפוני ועד כותל חעורה המורחי From the ſide of the North-wall, to the Eaſt-wall of the Court: That is, along the North-wall, from the Weſt-end of the Court to the Eaſt, for ſo both the meaſure of one hundred eighty and ſeven cubits, which was the juſt length of the Court confirmeth, and the ſame Author in the next following Chapter doth alſo illuſtrate in theſe words, e Rabbi Joſi ſaith, All the Altar may be underſtood for North-ward: As it is ſaid, And he ſhall kill it on the ſide of the Altar, North-ward before the Lord. Rabbi Joſi from Rabbi Judah ſaith, From the midſt of the Altar North-ward was as the North, and from the midſt of the Altar the other way was as the South: And ſo Rabbi Joſi from Rabbi Judah ſaith alſo, There were two Wickets in the Houſe of the Butchering knives, opening toward the Weſt, and eight cubits from the ground, ſo that the Court might be fit for eating of the moſt Holy things, and for the killing of the leſſer Holy Sacrifices, even behind the Oracle. From both which allegations taken up together, we may obſerve, 1. That the Iſraelites had a ſtanding on the North-ſide of the Court as well as on the Eaſt, which though it was not, nor indeed could be exactly eleven cubits broad, as was their ſtation at the Eaſt-end, yet was it a ſtation for them as well as that: And our Author when he ſpeaketh of the place where the Feet of the Iſraelites trod, of eleven cubits broad, and of the place where the Feet of the Prieſts trod of eleven cubits broad: he meaneth not that there was ſuch a ſpace for the Iſraelites and the Prieſts to ſtand in all along the North-ſide of the Court as there was in the Eaſt, but his meaning is this, that when the Sacrifices to be ſlain on the North-ſide of the Altar were exceeding many indeed, that rather than want room to kill them, they ſhould not only ſlay them in the place of the Rings, but even in the ſtanding of the Prieſts and Iſraelites at the Eaſt-end, namely ſo far on that ground, as lay even with that ſpace that was on the North-ſide of the Altar: and ſo might they uſe the like ſpace all along the North-ſide of the Court for the ſame purpoſe, even to beyond the Weſt-end of the Temple. 2. That the Houſe of the Butchering knives, called בירת חליפות was in that end of the Porch that pointed North-ward, and that the Doors thereof were behind the Porch Weſt-ward, even where the wing of the Porch ſtood out more Northerly than the breadth of the Temple and extended: and there the going up to theſe Doors was by ſteps even eight cubits high: and the reaſon why the Doors were there, rather than in the front or the end of the Porch, was becauſe the paſſage to them there, took up the leaſt room, and was the leaſt hindrance in the Court.

מן חטבעות לשולחנות ד מן השולחנות ולמנסין ד f Four cubits from the North-ſide of this place of the Rings there ſtood Marble Tables upon which they waſhed the Inwards of the Sacrifice, and cut it up into pieces: and four cubits further North, there were the Pillars on which they hung up the Sacrifice upon hooks, that ſo they might flea it. These Pillars the Jews call מנסין which g Aruch Interprets עמודים קצרים Pillars low or ſhorty (it may ſeem the word is taken from the Latine Nanus, and ſo the Treatiſe Parah, ſpeaketh of a red Cow מנסת low and ſmall, Nana & minuta:) Now theſe Pillars were not thoſe that ſupported the Cloiſter on this North-ſide of the Court, but low Pillars ſet by theſe or joyning to them, i eight in number, over the Heads of which were laid tranſom beams of Cedar, and hooks of Iron faſtned both in theſe beams and in the Pillars, on which hooks they hanged up the Beaſt ſlain for Sacrifice, that they might the better come at him to flea him. The Pillars had every one of them three hooks in them, one above another, that they might be fit for Beaſts of ſeveral bigneſſes and cizes. And before theſe Pillars, or rather, before the ſpace that was between the Pillars (ſo that one might eaſily paſs between) ſtood the Marble Tables, on which, after that they had given the Entrails of the Beaſts their firſt waſhing, in the waſhing room mentioned before, they waſht and dreſt them a ſecond time, and made them fit and fair for the Altar, and on which after they had flead the beaſt as he hanged upon the hooks, they cut him in pieces according as he was to be cut and divided for his laying on the Altar to be offered up.

From

From theſe low Pillars to the North-wall of the Court were eight cubits, and this was the place and ſpace for Iſraels ſtanding on this ſide the Court: for though theſe Pillars ſpoken of did not bear up the Cloiſter under which the People ſtood, yet did they ſtand ſo even or cloſe to thoſe Pillars that did, that from theſe Pillars we may, and the Jews do count and meaſure the ſpace of the Iſraelites ſtation on this ſide, and it was three cubits narrower than their ſtanding at the Eaſt-end. Thus was the ſpace taken up that was between the Altar and the North-ſide of the Court, now let us come to view the ſpace on the other ſide of the Altar toward the South: Where firſt the כבש Cauſey or Riſe that went up to the Altar took up two and thirty cubits: even juſt as much ſpace on this ſide, as there was betwixt the Altar and the further-ſide of the place of the Rings on the other. But here a queſtion may not improperly be moved out of the Arithmetick of the Talmudicks about the meaſure of the Altar, and the riſe of it, which they hold out: for they ſay expreſly that k the Altar was two and thirty cubits ſquare, and that l the riſe on the South-ſide was two and thirty cubits long, and yet ſumming up both together, they ſay that m the Altar and the riſe were but ſixty two cubits: whereas according to the two particulars named, they ſhould be ſixty four: But the reaſon of the account is from this, either becauſe they reckon the length of the Cauſey or riſe, not from the outſide of the foundation of the Altar, but from the narrowing of the Altar above the Circuit; for thither did the Cauſey bring them and land them there, as the ordinary place of their Service, when they went to beſprinkle the Horns of the Altar with the Blood of the Sacrifices: or elſe becauſe they reckon not the two firſt cubits of the riſe or the very entrance upon it, it being ſo flat and near to the ground, as that there was ſo much of the riſe gone, before there was any ſtepping off to the Bridge that went to the foundation of the Altar: And yet though they do ſometime account thus of the Altar and the riſe, that they took up but ſixty two cubits, yet in diſtributing the one hundred thirty and ſeven cubits of the Courts breadth into particular ſpaces, they then allow, as they cannot do otherwiſe, thirty cubits to the Altar, and as many to the riſe: for the particulars are thus: (that we may ſum them again.)

k Mid. per. 3.
m Ibid. per. 5.

From the North-wall to the Pillars,	8 cubits.
The place of the Marble Tables,	4 cubits.
From theſe Tables to the ſpace of the Rings,	4 cubits.
The ſpace of the Rings it ſelf,	24 cubits.
From the Rings to the Altar,	8 cubits.
The Altar it ſelf,	32 cubits.
The riſe or Cauſey,	32 cubits.
From the riſe to the South-wall,	25 cubits.
	In all 137 cubits.

Now theſe five and twenty cubits which were between the Foot of the riſe and the South-wall, is given account of by the Treatiſe Middoth in theſe words: והמותר בין הכבש לבותל ומקום הננסין And the reſidue of ſpace which was between the riſe and the Wall, was alſo a place of low Pillars.

Theſe were ſome Sacrifices ſlain on the South-ſide of the Altar as well as theſe that have been mentioned were on the North: There were Sacrifices which were called קדשי קדשים The Holy of Holies, or the moſt Holy Sacrifices, and thoſe were the Burnt-offering, Sin-offering and Treſpaſs-offering and others reckoned before, and theſe were diſpenſably tied to be ſlain on the North-ſide of the Altar, or at leaſt on the North-ſide of the Court, as hath been ſpoken: And there were Offerings which were called קדשים קלים The leſſer Holy things, and theſe might be ſlain in any part of the Court, and were not bound to that ſide: as תודה ואיל נזיר קדשים קלים n Thanksgiving-offerings and the Nazarites Ram which were leſſer holy Offerings, were ſlain in any place of the Court: Peace-offerings which were of the leſſer holy things, were alſo ſlain in any part of the Court, and ſo were the Firſtlings, the Tenths, and the Paſsover, which were alſo reckoned as leſſer holy things. Now although they ſpeak of any part of the Court, as permitted to ſlay the Sacrifices in, yet moſt eſpecially have they reference to the South-ſide of the Altar in oppoſition to the North, and the South-ſide underſtood in that Latitude, as the North-ſide was when extremity and multitude of Sacrifices put them to it: For when the Sacrifices were no more than what could be killed within the very compaſs between the North-ſide of the Altar and the North-wall of the Court, they were ſlain there, but when numerouſneſs of Sacrifices urged o all the North-ſide of the Court from Eaſt to Weſt ends, and as far South as to the middle of the Altar, was uſed to ſlay the Beaſts in, and all that, was accounted as the North: So on the South-ſide of the Altar, there were Marble Tables and low Pillars for the very ſame uſe that there were on the other ſide of the Altar, namely for the fleaing and cutting up and waſhing the Intrals of the Sacrifices, but n Zevachim per. 5.

o Ibid. per. 6.

when greater ſtore came than that very ſpace juſt between the Altar and the South-wall would contain, then all the South-ſide of the Court was permitted for that uſe, even as far as the middle of the Altar betwixt North and South.

The five and twenty cubits ſpace therefore that we are to give account of between the South-wall of the Court, and the foot of the riſe of the Altar, were thus parcelled. 1. There were eight cubits from the Court-wall to the Pillars, as there were on the North-ſide, and this was the breadth of the Cloiſter, and the ſtanding of Iſrael on that ſide the Court. 2. The diſpoſal of the Tables, as on the other ſide before the Pillars, took up four cubits. 3. And then the thirteen cubits between theſe and the foot of the Altar riſe, was partly (as is probable) taken up with ſome rings as on the North-ſide, though not ſo many (for they needed not) and partly with ſome plain pavement next to the riſe, that the Prieſts might have acceſs to it the better.

CHAP. XXXVI.

The ſpace between the Altar and the Porch.

THE Altar ſtood before the Gate or entrance of the Porch, that gave acceſs into the Temple, and the ſpace between the foundation of the Altar and the foundation of the Porch a was two and twenty cubits: But there was not ſo much clear ground or plain pavement and paſſage between them, for the ſtairs of the Porch being in number twelve, and every ſtep a cubit broad, beſides the half pace or inlarging at every third ſtep, cauſed that theſe ſteps lay down a great way in the Court towards the Altar: and took up a good ſpace of theſe two and twenty cubits. Every one of theſe ſteps was half a cubit high, and thereupon the whole riſe ariſeth to be ſix cubits from the ground to the landing in the Porch, ſo that he that ſtood in the Porch-gate, his Feet ſtood even and level, with his Feet that ſtood upon the Circuit of the Altar: b Upon theſe ſteps of the Porch the Prieſts ſtood when they came out from burning Incenſe and bleſſed the People.

As concerning the ſpace betwixt the Porch and Altar, theſe things are remarkable about it.

1. c That no man might come upon this ſpace that had any blemiſh upon him, nor any man might come here bare headed: the reaſon of the former reſtraint is eaſie to be apprehended, becauſe of the holineſs of the place, being ſo near both to the Alar and the Temple: and the reaſon of the later is, becauſe in their greateſt devotions they uſed to cover their Head, and therefore none might come bare-headed into ſo devout a place.

c Kelim. ptr. 1.

2. That no man might ſtand upon this ſpace or ſtay within it, while the Prieſt was burning Incenſe in the Holy place. d For whileſt they burned Incenſe in the Temple every day, all the People departed from the Temple, ſo that between the Temple and the Altar there was not a man till he that burned Incenſe came forth. And ſo at the time that the High Prieſt went in with the Blood of the Sin-offering, which was to be ſprinkled within, all the People withdrew from between the Altar and the Temple, till he came forth again: And becauſe they might know the time when to withdraw from this ſpace at the daily Incenſe, the Sagan or Preſident of the Service called to the Prieſt that was within the Holy place with a loud voice, and gave him notice when he ſhould begin with the Incenſe, ſaying to him, Offer the Incenſe, and as he ſpake thus, the People withdrew: The reaſon of this cuſtom I ſhall not be curious to look after, but whether the Ceremony did not fitly reſemble, how far diſtant all men are from having any ſhare with Chriſt in his Interceſſion, which the offering of the Incenſe reſembled, be it left to the Reader to conſider.

3. In this ſpace between the Temple and the Altar, was the murder committed upon Zacharias the ſon of Barachias, as our Saviour mentioneth, Matth. XXIII. 35.

Now there are various conjectures who this Zachary ſhould be: ſome think of Zachary the Prophet, whoſe Book of Propheſie we have in the Old Teſtament. Some ſuppoſe it might be John Baptiſts Father, and ſome conceive that Chriſt ſpeaketh there predictively, foretelling that they ſhould ſlay Zachary the ſon of Baruch in the Temple, the ſtory of which Joſephus giveth in lib. 4. de bell. cap. 19. But the Talmudiſts do help us to underſtand it of Zachary the ſon of Jehoiada, who was ſtoned by the people in this place in the days of King Joaſh, 2 Chron. XXIV. Why he is called the ſon of Barachias and not the ſon of Jehoiada is not a place here to diſpute: the Jeruſalem Talmud hath this ſtory concerning his ſlaughter, which may give us cauſe to think, that our Saviour ſpake according according to the common received Opinion: and was underſtood to mean Zachary the ſon of Jehoiada, though for ſpecial reaſon he calleth him the ſon of Barachias, e Rab. Jochanan ſaith, Eighty thouſand young Prieſts were ſlain for Zacharias blood. R. Jordan asked R. Aha, where ſlew they Zacharias? In the Court of the Women, or in the Court of Iſrael? He ſaith to him, Not in the Court of Iſrael, nor in the Court of the Women, but in the Court of the Prieſts, &c. And ſeven Tranſgreſſions did Iſrael tranſgreſs that day: They ſlew a Prieſt, a Prophet, a Judge, ſhed innocent Blood and defiled the Court, and the Sabbath, which was alſo the day of expiation. And when Nebuzaradan came thither he ſaw the Blood bubling. He ſaith to them, What meaneth this? They ſaid to him, It is the Blood of Bullocks and Rams and Lambs which we have offered upon the Altar. Preſently he brought Bullocks and Rams and Lambs and killed them, and as yet the Blood bubled or reeked above theirs. And when they confeſſed not, he hanged them up. They ſaid, The Lord is pleaſed to require his Blood at our hands. They ſay to him, It is the Blood of a Prieſt and Prophet and Judge, who Propheſied to us concerning all that thou haſt done to us, and we ſtood up againſt him and ſlew him. Preſently he brought Eighty thouſand young Prieſts and ſlew them: And ſtill the Blood bubled: Then he was angry at it, and ſaid to it, What wouldeſt thou have? That all the People ſhould periſh for thee? Preſently the holy bleſſed God was filled with compaſſion and ſaid: What? Is this Man that is but Fleſh and Blood, filled with pity towards my Children, and ſhall not I be much more? Of whom it is written, For the Lord thy God is a merciful God, he will not forſake thee nor deſtroy thee, nor forget the covenant of thy Fathers: Preſently he gave a ſign to the Blood and it was ſwallowed up in the place. R. Jochanan ſaith, The Eighty thouſand young Prieſts fled to the midſt of the Chambers of the Sanctuary, and they were all burnt, and of all them, none was left but Joſhua the ſon of Jozedeck: as it is written, Is not this a brand pluckt out of the fire? Zech. In this ſpace between the Altar and the Porch, there ſtood the Laver, but not directly before the Altar, but removed towards the South, ſo that it ſtood betwixt the riſe of the Altar and the Porch, as we ſhall obſerve in the viewing of it by and by. But the Talmud ſpeaketh of a Veſſel, which by its relation appeareth to have lain directly betwixt Porch and Altar, which it calleth Migrephah, but what to Engliſh it, is not very ready.

The Treatiſe Tamid ſpeaketh thus of it, f They (that were to go into the Temple to burn Incenſe, and to dreſs the Lamps) came between the Porch and the Altar, one of them taketh the Migrephah and Rings it between the Porch and the Altar; one man could not hear another ſpeak in Jeruſalem, becauſe of the ſound of the Migrephah. It ſerved for three things: The Prieſt that heard the ſound of it knew that his Brethren the Prieſts were gone in to Worſhip, and he ran and came. A Levite that heard the ſound of it, knew that his Brethren the Levites were gone in to ſing, and he ran and came. And the chief of the ſtationary men brought them that had been unclean and ſet them in the Gate of Nicanor. Now what kind of thing this Migrephah was, I find but little light towards an exact reſolution. g Some ſay it was a great Veſſel which they rung to make a ſound, but of what faſhion, and whether for any other uſe alſo, they leave uncertain.

The Chaldee renders יעים by מגרפיתא in Exod. XXXVIII. 3, &c. which ſeemeth to be the ſame word with this that we are about, and ſo he underſtands it to mean ſome of the fire-ſhovels that belonged to the Altar, which being either rung upon, or ſhoved upon the pavement, would make a loud noiſe being of braſs, and very big.

The Jews upon the ſound of this and divers other things at the Temple do hyperbolize thus, h Even from Jericho they heard the noiſe of the great Gate of the Temple when it opened. From Jericho they heard the ringing of the Migrephah. From Jericho they heard the noiſe of the Engine that Ben Kattin made for the Laver. From Jericho they heard the voice of the Crier that called them to their Services. From Jericho they heard the ſound of the Pipe. From Jericho they heard the ſound of the Cymbal. From Jericho they heard the ſound of the Song. From Jericho they heard the ſound of the Trumpets. And ſome ſay alſo, The voice of the High Prieſt when he uttered the Name Jehovah on the day of Expiation, &c. The truth of which things is not to be pleaded, ſeeing it is apparent that they are uttered by way of Hyperbole, only it may not be improper to obſerve how common the phraſe was, From Jeruſalem to Jericho, which is alſo uſed in Luke X. 30.

Concerning the Veſſels and Utenſils of the Temple.

SECT. I.

The Laver. כיור

THE firſt command of making the Laver, and the end of it being made, is related in Exod. XXX. 18, 19, 20. &c. in theſe words, Thou ſhalt make a Laver of braſs and his Foot of braſs, to waſh withal, and thou ſhalt put it between the Tabernacle of the Congregation and the Altar, and thou ſhalt put water therein, For Aaron and his ſons ſhall waſh their Hands and their Feet thereat, when they go into the Tabernacle of the Congregation, they ſhall waſh with water that they dye not, or when they come near the Altar to miniſter, &c.

And the making of it is related in Exod. XXXIV. 8. He made the Laver of braſs, and the Foot of it of braſs of the looking glaſſes of the Women aſſembling, which aſſembled at the Door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation. The meaſures and the receipt of it is not at all deſcribed: The Holy Ghoſt hath left it undetermined what was the form or the cize of it, but hath given notice only of the materials of it and the end: It was made of the brazen Looking-glaſſes of the Women that aſſembled at the Door of the Tabernacle: The Septuagint expreſſeth it, of the faſting Women which faſted at the Door of the Tabernacle, reading צמאות for צבאות: The Jeruſalem Targum, with which alſo Jonathans agrees, reads it, of the Looking-glaſſes of the modeſt Women, which were modeſt at the Door of the Tabernacle: which Aben Ezra's Gloſs upon the place helps us to underſtand thus, It is the cuſtom of all Women (ſaith he) to look their faces in Looking-glaſſes every morning, either of Braſs or Glaſs, that they may ſee to dreſs their heads; but behold there were Women in Iſrael that ſerved the Lord, that departed from this worldly delight, and gave away their Glaſſes as a free-will-offering, for they had no more uſe of them, but they came every day to the door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, to pray and hear the words of the Commandment: The end of it was to waſh the Hands and Feet of the Prieſts, but the moſt ultimate end was to ſignifie the waſhing and purifying by the Spirit of Grace, which is ſo oft called water in the Scripture; and ſo the ſprinkling of the Blood of the Sacrifice, and the waſhing in the Water of the Laver, did read the two great Divinity Lectures, of waſhing by the Blood of Chriſt from guilt, and by the Grace of God from filthineſs and pollution.

The cize and meaſure of the Laver, at the ſecond Temple, is not deſcribed neither, only we have theſe things recorded of it in the Antiquities of the Hebrew Writers.

1. That it ſtood between the Altar and the Porch, as the Primitive appointment was, Exod. XXX. 18. but not juſt and directly between them, but משוך כלפי הדרום a a little aſide toward the South. And the reaſon given for the placing of it there, is this; b Becauſe it is ſaid, And the Altar of Burnt-offering at the Door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation: meaning that the Altar was to be before the Tabernacle of the Congregation, and the Laver not to be before the Tabernacle of the Congregation, but it was ſet a little aſide toward the South.

a Mid. per. 3. Sect. 6.
b R. Sol. in Exod. XXX. ex Zevachin.

2. That at the firſt it had but two Spouts or Cocks out of which the Water ran, at which they waſhed, but that in aftertimes c Ben Kattin made twelve Spouts or Cocks to it, as the Miſhneh recordeth in the Treatiſe Joma: It calleth the Cocks דדי Paps, d because (ſaith Aruch) they were as the Paps of a Woman, and Water ran out of them, at which they waſhed their Hands: and ſo Rabbi Solomon characterizing the Laver, ſaith, e It was like a great Cauldron, and it had Paps (or Cocks) that voided Water out of their Mouths: Now the Gemara of the Babylon Talmud upon the Miſhneh cited, diſputing the caſe why Ben Kattin ſhould make twelve Spouts to it, they reſolve it thus, That the Tradition was, that he made ſo many that the twelve Prieſts his Brethren which had to do with the dayly Sacrifice might waſh themſelves at it altogether: we obſerve in its due place, that there were ſo many Prieſts imployed about the offering up of the dayly Sacrifice, ſome for one part of the Service, and ſome for another: Therefore this Ben Kattin being a Prieſt himſelf, did ſo provide that theſe many Prieſts that were to be imployed together, might alſo ſtand and waſh together: and by this that ſo many might waſh together at the ſeveral Cocks of it, it appeareth to be a Veſſel of great reception and capacity.

3. There is frequent mention among the Talmudicks of an appurtenance to the Laver, which they call מוכני כיור which before we can Engliſh, will coſt ſome inquiry. The Miſhneh even now cited, recordeth that as Ben Kattin made the Cocks for the Laver, ſo alſo that he made מוכני לכיור the Mukene to the Laver, that the Water of it might not be unclean by ſtanding all night. And ſo in the Treatiſe Tamid, f where it is diſcourſing of the Prieſt that ſhould cleanſe the Altar, going to waſh his Hands and Feet at the Laver, it ſaith, That his fellows heard the ſound of the wood which Ben Kattin made, the Mukene for the Laver: The Gemara upon the former place diſputes מאי מכנת g what is the Mukene? Rabba ſaith, It is a wheel: And ſo ſaith Aruch, פירוש מוכני גלגלא הוא h The meaning of Mukene is a wheel: Now in what place and to what uſe this wheel was, is now all the queſtion: i ſome ſay, it was to let down the Laver into the Well, to fill it with Water, or to let it lie in the Well all night: and ſo there is ſpeech in the Treatiſe Zevachim of k drawing and fetching up the Laver out of the Molten Sea which Solomon made, for it was let down into that all Night, leſt the Water of it ſhould be polluted by ſtanding all night in it.

But when we obſerve the greatneſs of this Laver that we are ſpeaking of under the ſecond Temple, at which, as hath been related, twelve men might ſtand round and waſh together; and when we conſider that there was no Well near to the place where the Laver ſtood, by divers paces, it will appear a thing unimaginable, that one Prieſt ſhould let down the Laver into the Well and fetch it up again full of Water, for the Treatiſe Tamid makes, the dealing with the Mukene of the Laver (be it what it will) to be but one Prieſts work. I do not remember that I have read of what matter the Laver of the ſecond Temple was made, whether of Braſs, or ſtone Conduit-like: for to hold it of Wood is very unſuitable to the exceeding great ſtatelineſs of the Temple in other things: yet were it of Wood, it would have been a very hard talk for any one man to manage it in that manner as they do a bucket in a Well, be the Engine of Ben Kattins making never ſo active, and cunningly contrived; l and therefore Maimonides leaves it as a thing of doubtfulneſs, about letting it down into the Well, for, ſaith he, They let it down into a gathering of Waters, or into the Well, and on the morrow drew it up, or they filled it every day in the morning.

Therefore by the Mukene of the Laver, I ſee not what elſe can be underſtood, than ſome contrival either found out, or at leaſt the coſt of it diſcharged by Ben Kattin the Prieſt, whereby Water was drawn up and forced by the Wheel in the Well-room in ſome ſingular conveyance to fill the Laver when there was occaſion: Not that the Laver was ſtirred out of its place or needed any ſuch removal, but (as it is known by common experience,) Water by the working of a Wheel was carried in Pipes into it at pleaſure. So that whereas the ſtanding of the Water in it all Night, did make that Water uſeleſs and unlawful for that end that the Water of the Laver was to ſerve unto, it either was evacuated over Night, when the work of the Day was done, or if it ſtood all Night it was let out in the Morning by the Prieſt that was to do the firſt work of the day, (namely who was to cleanſe the Burnt-offering Altar of its aſhes,) and he had no more to do to fill the Laver again, but only to go into the Well-room, and there to draw at the Wheel a while, and that brought up Water by conveyances into it: So that now to give an Engliſh tranſlation to the word מוכני Mukene, we may very well call it the Engine of the Laver, and ſo doth m Rabbi Nathan give us ſome incouragement to do, when he tells us that it is a Greek word, and I ſuppoſe he means the Greek word Μαχανὴ Machina, an Engine.

m Aruch ubi ſup.

4. There was never to be ſo little Water in the Laver, but that it might be ſufficient to waſh four Prieſts a row: and the reaſon of this Tradition Baal Turim would derive from this, n becauſe the word רחצה which is uſed for this waſhing, Exod. XXX. 18. is obſerved by the Maſoreth to be uſed in all four times: But a reaſon ſomething more rational is given by others, and that is this, o Becauſe it is ſaid, And Aaron and his ſons ſhall waſh thereat, now theſe were four, Aaron, Eleazer, Ithamar, and Phinehas.

n Baal hatturim in Exod. XXX.

o Maym. ubi ſup.

5. Their manner of waſhing at the Laver, was thus, p He laid his right Hand upon his right Foot, and his left Hand upon his left Foot, and the Cock or Spout running upon them, he thus ſtood ſtooping and waſhed Hands and Feet together: And he that went about the Service with unwaſhen Hands and Feet in the morning, was liable to death by the Hand of Heaven: And none might enter into the Court to do the Service there till he hath bathed, yea though he were clean: And in the Service he muſt ſtand upon the bare pavement, ſo that here was exceeding hard and bitter Service all the Winter when he muſt bath his Body in cold Water before he enter, and waſh Hands and Feet in cold Water being entred, and ſtand in thin linnen and on the cold Stones all the while he was there.

SECT. II.

Solomons ten Lavers, 1 King. VII.

IT is not much important to queſtion and ſearch whether the Laver made by Moſes in the Wilderneſs eſcaped the fate of time and ſurvived to be ſet up in Solomons Temple, as ſome Jews aſſert; but it is pertinent to obſerve, that were it, or were it not, Solomon made exceeding great proviſion in that caſe, and to that end, for which the Laver was ordained, and as in all other particulars of the Temple he ſhewed and provided for magnificence as well as he did for neceſſary uſe and for conveniencies: ſo in this proviſion for Water for the occaſions of the Temple, he did not only take care for abundance, but he did it with that coſt and ſumptuouſneſs, that only himſelf in the other things he did can ſhew a parallel. I believe neither any ſtory, nor any Founders Art, did or will ever ſhew ſuch Maſter-pieces of Workmanſhip in that ſkill and in that mettle, as were his Lavers and his molten Sea: and the Holy Ghoſt hath been as copious and preciſe in the deſcription of theſe two, but eſpecially of the former, as in any piece of Art or Workmanſhip, eſpecially of that bigneſs, in all the Scripture.

a Vid. D. Kimch. in 2 Chron. IV.

The great addition that Solomon made to the firſt pattern, in the number of Candleſticks, Shewbread Tables, and Lavers, was not only in ſtate neither, but ſomething in Figure ſeemeth to have gone along with it; namely, that there might be ſignified the abundance of Light, Bread of Life, and Purifying, that was to be exhibited in and by him whom the Temple did repreſent: And as Moſes his ſingle parcels did hold out a ſignification of theſe things themſelves; ſo his decuplated number did hold out the happy abundance of them to be found in him that is all Light, Life, and Holineſs.

The Lavers, ten in number, and all of one mold, cize, and faſhion, were for the waſhing of the parts of the Sacrifices that were to be waſhed, as the Sea was for the bathing of the Prieſts. Their ſituation was five on either ſide the Court, over againſt the Altar and place of ſlaughtering, as evenly and conveniently as they could be ſet: For howſoever b ſome of the Hebrew Doctors have been of a mind, that all the ten Tables of Shewbread that Solomon made, ſtood on one ſide of the Houſe, and the Table that Moſes made juſt in the midſt of them, and the like by the ten Candleſticks and the ten Lavers; yet is the Text ſo plain about the Lavers, that they were placed five on the one ſide of the Houſe and five on the other, 1 King. VII. 39. that it doth not only put the matter out of all doubt for them, but it doth confirm the like for the two other ſufficiently, if there were no other confirmation.

The faſhion of every one of the Lavers (for by any one of them you may view all the reſt) is deſcribed by the Holy Ghoſt to this purpoſe.

Firſt, There was a flat piece of braſs, of a very great cize for length, breadth, and thickneſs, born upon four Wheels: ſuch pieces are not to be ſeen in theſe our days, and it is great odds that no days have ſhewed ſuch but only theſe; for every piece is ſaid to be four cubits long, and four cubits broad, and three cubits high: and ſince in the World we cannot find a piece of Braſs to parallel them withal, we muſt compare them to ſomething of another material, and ſo let us liken them for proportion to a Stone or Marble Table of theſe dimenſions. The Septuagint (by what miſpriſion, it is hard to tell) have made the length of every one of them five cubits and the height ſix, and ſo c Joſephus who conſtantly followeth them, hath followed their error, upon which miſtake we ſhall not ſpend time: that that d Rabbi Solomon giveth occaſion to ſcruple at, is better worth looking after, and that is, whether when the Text ſaith, that the height of every piece was three cubits, it mean that it was ſo thick, or that the upperſide of it was ſo far from the ground as it lay upon the Wheels. Of theſe two things the later ſeemeth to be the more probable upon theſe two conſiderations.

1. Becauſe it is not ſaid, the thickneſs, but the height of it was three cubits, as ſhewing that it meaneth not the maſſie thickneſs of the piece, but that as it ſtood ſupporting the Laver, the ſurface of it was ſo high from the ground.

2. There was no need of ſo vaſt a thickneſs, either for the weight that it was to carry, or for the ſumptuouſneſs that it was to bear, but half ſuch a thickneſs would more than abundantly diſcharge both the one and the other. And therefore the conception of our Rabbin is very probable, and not unfit to be entertained, and that is, that where as the Wheels are ſaid to be a cubit and an half high, verſ. 32. it is not to be underſtood of the full height of the Ring of the Wheel, but of the height from the ground to the Axletree, or laying on of this maſſie piece of Braſs, and that this piece was a cubit and a half thick it ſelf, and ſo the ſurface of it lay three cubits high from the ground.

Theſe

Theſe huge pieces of Braſs are called by the Original מכונות (which word the Seventy and Joſephus reſerve in the Greek, and write it Μαχανὰθ) which our Engliſh hath well rendred A Baſe, and ſo hath the Chaldee בסיסא by the very Greek word Βάσις. For as when Moſes was commanded to make the Laver, he was alſo commanded to make את כנו his Baſe, Exod. XXX. 8. (which our Engliſh hath tranſlated his Foot: not to be conceived a long Leg or Shank whereon the Laver ſtood, but ſome flat maſſie piece of Braſs whereupon it was to ſit) ſo for the ſetting and ſetling of theſe Lavers, this baſe of this cize and deſcription was מושב כיור as e the Rabbins ſtyle it a Seat or ſettle for the Laver to reſt upon.

e R. Levi Gerſon & D. Kimchi in 1 King. VII.

Now whereas it is ſaid, that every baſe had four brazen Wheels, verſ. 30. it is not to be ſo taken as to apprehend that they ſtood two and two on a ſide, as our Coach Wheels or Waggon Wheels do, but as the baſe was ſquare, ſo there was a Wheel on every ſide the ſquare. And this appeareth at verſ. 32. where it is related, that the Wheels were under the borders, and we ſhall obſerve by and by, that the borders were on every ſide. The Wheels that Ezekiel ſaw in his Viſion, Chap. I. were placed in the like poſture, namely, ſtanding ſquare and not one edging before another.

Thus lay the baſe upon his Wheels: And now for the working of it unto its compleatneſs; we are firſt to obſerve two rows of brazen ſtaves or bars (but not very long) molten of the ſame piece with the baſe, ſtanding up, one row upon the very edge of it round about, and the other ſtanding a little more inward, (and that but a very little) upon it. Theſe are thoſe that the Text calleth שלבים, and which word almoſt all the learned in the language both Jews and Chriſtians, do ſay doth ſignifie סולם כמין חוגקי ברים ſtaves or bars ſet in rows like the ſtaves of a Ladder, and which, if I may make ſo homely a compariſon, I may reſemble to the ſtaves of a Cart ſtanding on either ſide it, ſave that this had ſtaves all about, and theſe too in a double row, whereas a Cart hath but ſingle.

Between this double row of ſtaves, there was a border or board of braſs, if I may ſo term it, put between, and ſtood up between them all about upon every ſide of the ſquare, upon which border were engraven the repreſentation of Oxen, Lions, and Palm-trees. This border in the Original is called מסגרות and that in the plural number; not becauſe the row of the bordering was doubled as the row of ſtaves, but becauſe the one border went about upon every ſide of the ſquare; and under the border on every ſide ſtood a Wheel.

At the foot of the ſtaves and border, namely, upon the very edge of the baſe outward, there were large ſhelves of braſs laid round about, not level as our ſhelves that we ſet any thing upon, ſtand againſt a Wall, but ſloping and deſcending much after the manner as weather-boards are laid over windows to put off the rains. The Hebrew Text calleth theſe לויות מעשה מורך Appendices made in a deſcending manner, rendred by the Italian, our Engliſh and ſome of the Rabbins, additions made of thin work: The uſe of theſe ſhelves or additions, was, That upon them the Prieſts might waſh what they had to waſh, and the filth by reaſon of the ſlopeneſs of the ſhelves or benches might ſtill run off: For the waſhing of the parts of the Sacrifice, was not in the Laver it ſelf, but in water running out of the Laver in Cocks and ſpouts, which ran upon theſe benches or ſhelves, and they caſt the water, both from off the edges of the baſe, and from off the Wheels which ſtood under them as under a covert.

At the head of the rows of the ſtaves, there was כן ממעל a Baſe above, verſ. 29. that is, ſome reſt or ſettle edging inward, upon which the ſides of the Laver did reſt as it ſate down into its baſe. David Kimchi conceiveth that it may mean a bench, or reſt שהיו מושבין בו קיתון whereon to ſet a Tankard, or ſome leſſer Veſſel by which they took water out of the Laver: but if it be conſidered how high it was to the top of the Laver, this will be found a very improbable way for getting of water out of it, and neceſſity it ſelf will inforce us to conclude that the water they had out of it, they had at Cocks: This upper reſt or baſe was gathered into a circle or coronet, which is called a Chapiter in our Engliſh and כותרת in the Original, of a cubit and a half over, and about this circular edge as near as it would bear a ſquare, a ſquare bordering was ſet, ingraven as thoſe below, and ſo the Laver bottom being ſet in this Coronet, it ſtood raiſed two degrees or aſcents of borderings above the baſe. This bordering above the Coronet was a cubit high, and the Laver bottom for height was but of the breadth of a cubit and an half over, but then it flowred over and dilated it ſelf ſo, as that it lay over the upper bordering, and that it ſate upon and over the lower bordering and the ſtaves, and came out even with the edges of the baſe, and this ſpreading of it out is called its mouth, verſ. 31. and ſo we may obſerve that the Laver was round in the bottom and ſquare in the top; (we ſhall obſerve the juſt contrary in the molten Sea) and at the four corners of the baſe, with which the four corners of the Laver pointed and flowred even, there were ſquare brazen Pillars, molten with the baſe it ſelf, and of one piece with it, the feet of which ſtood upon the ground and their heads ſtood under the points of the Laver to bear it up, and to keep it ſteady: Theſe Pillars are called כתפות ſhoulders in the Text, and they are ſaid to be מעבר איש ליותך at the ſide of every one of the ſloping ſhelves, becauſe at their joyning to the baſe theſe ſhelves joyned to it alſo, and at every corner of it theſe ſhelves were joynted to theſe Pillars and their ends reſted upon them: Now the Feet of theſe Pillars ſtood not upon the very ground, but there was a ſquare of brazen planks caſt alſo with the reſt, which lay on the ground upon which theſe Pillars and the Wheels ſtood, and theſe the Hebrew calleth סרגים, which the Chaldee and the Rabbins do explain by another word of the very ſame letters, but tranſpoſed גסרים Boards, or Planks.

And now let us take up the Text that containeth this ſtory about the Lavers, in a Paraphraſe verſe by verſe along with it, and as near the words of it as we can for the better underſtanding of the deſcription, which is as copious as the deſcription of any ſo little a piece in all the Bible, and as abſtruſe as the deſcription of any piece whatſoever, great or little.

1 Kings chap. VII. verſ. 27. And he made ten baſes of Braſs, four cubits was the length of every baſe, and four cubits the breadth, and three cubits the height of the ſurface of it from the ground.

Verſe 28. And this in the work of every baſe: they had borders, and the borders were within rows of ſtaves.

Verſe 29. And upon the borders that were within the rows of ſtaves, there were Lions, and Oxen, and Cherubins: and upon the Head of the rows of ſtaves there was another baſe or ſettle: and at the Foot of the ſtaves, or below the Lions and Oxen, there were additional boards ſet in a ſlope and deſcending faſhion.

Verſe 30. And every baſe had four Wheels of Braſs, and planks of Braſs; and the four corners of it had ſhouldring Pillars; the Pillars were caſt to be under the Laver, at the ſide of every one of the additional boards.

Verſe 31. And the mouth of the Laver, that is, the ſpreading and dilating of it ſelf into its full ſquare, was from within the circular Coronet that the upper baſe made, even from a cubit above it: and the mouth of that Coronet was round like a baſe, a cubit and an half over: and alſo about the mouth of it ingravings and borderings ſtood up a cubit high, but ſet about it in a ſquare, and not in a circle.

Verſe 32. And the four Wheels were on the four ſides under the borders: and the axle-trees of the Wheels were joyned to the baſe, and the height of a Wheel to the baſe, was a cubit and an half.

Verſe 33. And the work of the Wheels was like the work of a Charet-wheel: their Axle-trees and their Naves and their Felloes and their Spokes all molten.

Verſe 34. And there were four ſhouldring Pillars at the four corners of every baſe, theſe ſhouldring Pillars were of the baſe it ſelf.

Verſe 35. And on the top of the baſe, even at half a cubit height above the ſurface of it (ſo high were the rows of ſtaves) there was the round compaſs of the Coronet of the upper ſettle: and on the top of the baſe, the ſtaves and the borders that were there, were of one piece with it ſelf.

Verſe 36. And he graved upon the plates of the Staves and upon the borders thereof Cherubins, Oxen, and Palm-trees according to the proportion of every one: and there were ſo on the ſloping ſhelves round about.

Verſe 37. And he made ten Lavers of Braſs: one Laver contained forty baths, and every Laver was four cubits ſquare: and upon every of the ten baſes was one Laver.

SECT. III.

The Molten Sea.

IT was an equal wonder of Art, that ſo great and vaſt a veſſel as the Molten Sea ſhould be caſt, and that when it was caſt it ſhould be got up from the plain of Jordan where it was caſt, to the Temple: Being brought thither, it was ſet upon twelve brazen Oxen, at the Eaſt end of the Court of the Prieſts towards the North-eaſt corner.

The dimenſions and contents of it are thus accounted by the Book of Kings, It was ten cubits from the one brim to the other, it was round all about, and his height was five cubits, and a line of thirty cubits did compaſs it round about: And it contained two thouſand baths, 1 King. VII. 23, 26. with which account the Book of Chronicles doth agree exactly in every point but only in the laſt, and there it differeth exceedingly, for it ſaith, it contained three thouſand baths, 2 Chron. IV. 5. Now that difference breedeth no ſmall difficulty how to reconcile it, and that is not all the difficulty in this ſtory of the Molten Sea neither, for it is not eaſie to caſt, how ſo ſmall a compaſs (though it was indeed a huge compaſs for one veſſel) ſhould contain ſo great a quantity of Water. The Bath of the Hebrews which was the greateſt liquid meaſure that they

they had in uſe, was within a very little (a pint or ſuch a thing) even and equal with the receit of our Engliſh buſhel, or eight Gallons: now how a Veſſel of but five cubits deep and of ten cubits from ſide to ſide, ſhould contain three thouſand baths, or near upon twenty four thouſand gallons of Water, is of ſome difficulty to imagine: The cubit in this Veſſel is to be taken parallel to its meaſure in other Veſſels and parts of the Temple, and ſo that particular will help nothing to a reſolution. The Jews have deſervedly taken this ſcruple into their conſideration and diſpute; and the concluſion that they have made upon the doubt and debate is this, a that this Sea was ſquare in the bottom for three cubits high, and every ſide of the ſquare was ten cubits broad, and ſo the whole was forty cubits about: and this ſquareneſs they go about to prove from the Oxens ſtanding in a ſquare facing under it (in which opinion they are far different from their Countryman Joſephus, for he ſaith, that the Sea was εἰς ἡμισφαίριον ἐκαμαρμόσον, b faſhioned in form of an Hæmiſphere, or half a Globe, which if I underſtand aright, doth augment the ſcruple that we are upon. And they ſay withal, that the upper part of it, namely for the height of the two upper cubits it was round, and they contracting into the round and circular form did ſo much take in the compaſs which lay out in the four corners of the Quadrangle below, that now it was but thirty cubits about, according as the Text ſaith, that a line of thirty cubits did compaſs it round about. In which aſſertion although they ſpeak that which is uncouth, and not ordinarily apprehended upon this matter, yet is their diſpute ſo rational if it ſhould particularly be given at length, that if it be not found on the ſuddain worth the believing, yet certainly is the matter very well worth the conſidering, and ſo be it left to conſideration.

b Joſeph. Ant. lib. 8. cap. 2.

Now as for the difference which is between the Book of Kings and the Book of Chronicles, about the contents of this Veſſel, (which is a doubt more obvious and conſpicuous to the Eye) whileſt one ſaith, it contained two thouſand Baths, and the other, three thouſand, the anſwer that is given generally by the Hebrew Writers, may be ſome ſatisfaction (which is, that of liquid it contained but two thouſand Baths, but of dry things that would lye heaped above the brim, it would hold three) though I believe there is more in it. The Molten Sea was for the Prieſts waſhing themſelves in it againſt they went about the Service, 2 Chron. IV. 6. Now their waſhing being twofold, either of their Hands and Feet, or of their whole Bodies, this Veſſel ſerved for both, but in diverſe manner: Their Hands and Feet they waſhed in the Water that ran out by ſome Cocks and Spouts out of it; but for the waſhing or bathing of their Bodies they went down into the Veſſel it ſelf: Now had it been always full of Water to the brim, it had been too deep for them to ſtand in, and would hazzard their drowning; therefore there was ſuch a gage ſet by Cocks or Pipes running out continually, that the Water was kept at ſuch a height, as ſhould ſerve for their purpoſe abundantly, and yet ſhould not at all indanger their perſons: And ſo may we very well reconcile the difference in queſtion by ſuppoſing, that the Text that ſaith, that it contained two thouſand Baths meaneth, the common and conſtant quantity of Water that was in it, that was fit and ſerved for their waſhing, and the other that ſaith, it contained three thouſand Baths meaneth that it would hold ſo much being filled up to the brim.

About the Body of this huge Veſſel, there were two borders of Ingraving., the Work of which the Book of Kings calleth פקעים which the Chaldee and the Jews interpret Ovals, but the Book of Chronicles calleth them Oxen: not in their full proportion but the Heads only, and the reſt in an Oval, in ſtead of the Body; and it is conceived by ſome that out of theſe Heads, or out of ſome of them the Water iſſued forth, they being made as Cocks or conveyances for that purpoſe.

The ſupply of Water to theſe huge Veſſels (and that ſo abundantly that they were not only always full, but continually ran out and yet were full ſtill) was from the Well Etam, of which we have ſpoken before: And the Jeruſalem Talmud in the Treatiſe Joma, ſpeaking particularly of this Molten Sea, and how it was for the Prieſts to bath their Bodies in againſt they came to the Service, it propoſeth this queſtion, d But is it not a Veſſel? Yes, but Rabbi Jehoſhua the ſon of Levi ſaith, אמת המים מושכת לו מעין עיטם A Pipe of Water cometh into it out of the well Etam: The meaning of the diſpute is this; It was not lawful to bath for Purification in a Veſſel, but in a gathering of Waters upon the ground, and how then might the Prieſts bath in the Molten Sea which was a Veſſel? To this Rabbi Joſhua giveth this ſatisfaction, That the Sea was as it were a ſpring of Water, for Water ran into it continually out of the Well Etam, and accordingly Water ran continually out of it.

SECT. IV.

Baſins, Chargers, Diſhes, &c. King Ptolemies and Queen Helens tables.

IT is not to be imagined that either the numbers, or the names, or the ſeveral faſhions, or the ſeveral uſes of all the Veſſels in the Sanctuary ſhould be given: it is ods there were but a very few Prieſts though they waited there, that were able to give a preciſe diſtinct account about theſe things: therefore our going about to ſpeak of them, it is rather becauſe we would not ſay nothing, than from any hope or poſſibility we have, to give an eſtimate or deſcription of them any whit near unto the full.

Their number was ſo great, that they were reckoned to five thouſand and four hundred in Ezr. I. 11. and ninety and three are averred by the a Talmud to be uſed every day about the dayly Sacrifice: and in the Treatiſe Joma it appeareth that b there were ſpecial Veſſels for the Service of the day of expiation, and that King Monobazes made golden handles to them; and ſo other peculiar Services had their peculiar Veſſels, in ſo much that partly becauſe of the multitude of imploiments of Veſſels at ſome certain times, and partly becauſe of the change of Veſſels at ſpecial times, the number could not but be very great, nor is it to be ſuppoſed certain: the piety of one or other ſtill offering one Veſſel or other in devotion.

The ſeveral faſhions and cizes of them are rather to be gueſſed at, than determined; and the uſes to which they were put, muſt help us better towards ſuch a conjecture, than either their names do, or any deſcription we can find of them.

1. There were Baſins in which the Blood was taken when the Beaſt for the Sacrifice was ſlain, as Exod. XXIV. 6. and theſe the Jeruſalem Talmud thinketh to be thoſe that are called אגרטלין Agartalin, Ezr. I. 9. c Thirty Agartalin of Gold. R. Samuel bar Nachman ſaith, שאוגרין בו דמו שרל טלרה In it they gathered the Blood of Lambs. A thouſand Agartalin of Silver: R. Simeon ben Lachiſh ſaith, It was that wherein they took the Blood of Bullocks.

c Talm. Jeruſ. in Joma per. 3.

2. There were diſhes out of which the Blood was ſprinkled on the Altar; and theſe are held to be called כפורים Kephorim, in the place alledged out of Ezra: and to be the ſame with מזרקים Mizrakim, of which word there is frequent mention in the Scripture: d Kephorim (ſaith Solomon Jarchi) are Mizrakim, and they are called Kephorim, which betokeneth cleanſing, becauſe he that took the Blood in this Veſſel wiped off the drops and Blood that ſtuck on his Hand, on the ſide of the diſh: which action we have taken notice of in handling the manner of ſprinkling the Blood on the Horns of the Altar: So that, in theſe Jews conſtruction, Ezra reckoneth by name but the two ſorts of Veſſels that were firſt and moſt certainly uſed in the Service, namely the great Chargers or Baſins in which they took the Blood, and the leſſer diſhes out of which they ſprinkled it: And it may be the קערה and the מזרק that every one of the twelve Princes offered at the dedication of the Tabernacle, Numb. VII. were theſe two ſorts of Veſſels: The Mizrakim are ſaid to be before the Altar, Zech. XIV. 21.

d R. Sol. in Ezr. I.

3. There were great Voiders or Trays, as I may call them, of Gold or Silver, in which the inwards of the Beaſts were taken and brought to waſhing, and brought when they were waſhed to the Altar: And diſhes in which Salt was brought for the ſalting of all the Sacrifices. And diſhes in which the Meat-offering was mingled, and other diſhes in which it was offered. And it may be theſe that brought the Inwards or the Meat-offering, were thoſe that העלות meaneth, if that word meaneth any Veſſel at all, as it is thought it doth, in 2 Chron. XXIV. 14. Some think it meaneth Peſtels (ſaith Kimchi) wherewith they pounded the ſpices for the Incenſe: But in mine opinion it was a little Veſſel, wherewithal they took Wine out of the Hin for the Drink-offerings: And ſo it is uſed in the words of the Rabbins, The Maids of the Houſe of Rabbi as he was teaching them in the Language of Wiſdom, ſaid, הני עלת נפקת בכך doth the עלת go into the Tankard? That is, the little Veſſel wherewithal they drew Wine out of the Tankard, &c. I ſhall not trouble my ſelf nor the Reader about this Word nor about his Opinion; the Tranſlation that our Engliſh hath made of it is not only very facil, but alſo very warrantable.

4. There were Veſſels out of which they poured the Drink-offering, it may be thoſe are they that Joſephus calls Phialæ, Vials, eas he reckoneth the holy Veſſels upon the place of Ezra before alledged, but nameth more kinds than he doth: let the Reader draw among all the names he uſeth, ψυκτῆρες, ἀσπίδια, κάδδοι, σπονδεῖα, φιάλαι, which may be the title of theſe Drink-offering Veſſels that we are about; I ſhould chooſe between the two laſt, and take Phialæ the rather of the two: and the pouring out of the Vials in the Revelation may chance receive ſome illuſtration, by the Readers reflecting upon the pouring out of the Vial of the Drink-offering.

5. There

5. There were Chafing-diſhes to take Coals from the Altar for the burning of the Incenſe, and Diſhes wherein to take Aſhes from the Altar, and from the Altar of Incenſe, and Diſhes for Frankincenſe, and the Diſhes Teni and Coz, which they uſed about the Candles and Incenſe Altar: and Cenſer or Perfuming pans for the Incenſe, Diſhes about the Shewbread, and ſuch variety of Diſhes, Baſins, Vials, Cruſes, Tankards and ſuch like Veſſels, that it were an endleſs labour to ſpeak of them or ſeek after them particularly. To which may be added, the Axes, Knives, Fleſh-hooks, Forks, Fire-pans, Tongs, Snuffers, Pots, Chaldrons, the Veſſel Peſachtar (a word uſed by the Chaldee Paraphraſt, Exod. XXVII. 3, &c.) and the Inſtruments of Muſick, of which we have ſpoken elſewhere, the Mortars for making the Incenſe; and when we have reckoned all we can, we are ſure we cannot reckon all, and therefore muſt leave them to ſuppoſal and conjecture. And to the Diſcourſe of them which I muſt leave thus imperfect, let me add two Utenſils more, which indeed were not of the like nature with theſe that have been ſpoken of, yet may well come in mention with them, becauſe they were all Furniture of the ſame Houſe, and thoſe were two Golden Tables, but of ſeveral natures and uſes, beſtowed by Ptolemy Philadelphus King of Egypt, and Helena, Mother to Monobazes.

f Ariſteas and Joſephus after him, relating the ſtory of Ptolemies ſending for the Septuagint to come to him to tranſlate the Bible, they tell what ſumptuous bounty and gifts he beſtowed upon the Temple and preſented thither; and among other things that they ſpake of (as a great ſum of mony, certain Golden and Silver Goblets, and certain Golden Vials, χρυσᾶς φιάλας) they mention and deſcribe a Golden Table, of that richneſs, coſt and curious Workmanſhip, as the like hardly to fellow it in any ſtory, as the Reader may peruſe them in the places cited in the Margin, for I ſhall not ſpend time upon their deſcription.

f Ariſt. in Hiſt LXX. Joſ. Ant. l.12. cap.2.

There is relation alſo in the Talmudick Treatiſe Joma, of a Golden Table of Queen Helens beſtowing and devoting, but it was not of the faſhion and nature of any Tables that we have mentioned hitherto, but it was of a form and quality far differing from them. It was not שולחן Menſa, but טבלא Tabula, and the Tradition concerning it is thus: g Queen Helena, Mother to King Monobazes, made the Golden Candleſtick that was over the Temple door; And ſhe alſo made the Golden Table on which was written the Section of the Law concerning the ſuſpected Wife; Numb. V. So that this was a written Table hanged upon a Wall, and not a Table with Feet ſtanding upon the ground, as thoſe were of which we have ſpoken. The Gemara of the Jeruſalem Talmud informs us about it in theſe words: h She made the Table of Gold on which was written the Section of the ſuſpected Wife, and when the Sun roſe, the beams ſparkled on it, and ſo they knew that the Sun was riſen. And what was written on it? R. Simeon ben Lachiſh in the name of R. Januai ſaith, Aleph Beth was written on it. But behold the Tradition is: As was the writing on the one ſide, ſo was the writing on the other: It was not thick nor thin, but a mean between both. As was the א that was on the one ſide ſo was the א that was on the other. As ב on the one ſide, ſo ב on the other. R. Hoſaiah ſaith, All the Section of the ſuſpected Wife was written on it, and out of it he read and interpreted the whole Section. It ſeems this Table hung upon the Wall of the Gate of Nicanor, for in that the trial of the ſuſpected Wife was made, the manner of which we have obſerved elſewhere.

As there were Tables and Candleſticks of Gold, 2 Chron. IV. 7,8. in the holy place, ſo there were Tables and Candleſticks of Silver which were uſed in other places, 1 Chron. XXVIII. 15. as in the Courts and in the Prieſts Chambers.

SECT. V.

The Prieſts Garments.

IT will not be much neceſſary to ſpend large Diſcourſe upon this ſubject about the Garments of the ordinary Prieſts which they wore in the Service, ſince we have deſcribed the Veſtments of the High Prieſt at large in another place, who wore all the ſame Garments that the other Prieſts did, but he wore other alſo, we ſhall therefore but briefly touch theſe particulars concerning them.

1. That the Garments wherewithal the Prieſts were arraied when they were about Divine Service, were peculiar for that place and occaſion, and differing from the Garments that they uſed in their ordinary wearing. Some Jews think there were ſuch Prieſtly Garments before the Law, and they ſpeak of ſuch, bequeathed from Father to Son in the holy Line even from Adam to Iſaac, and they think the Veſture in which Jacob obtained the Bleſſing was of this nature: but about this we ſhall not be inquiſitive.

2. The Prieſts when they were come up in their courſes to the Service, put off their ordinary wearing Clothes, waſhed themſelves in Water, and put on the holy Garments: See Lev. VIII. 6. a Yea whilſt they were at the Temple and attending there on the Service, any

any of them that would ſleep by Night, he ſlept not in the holy Garments, but in his own wearing Clothes, and in the Morning when he was to go to his Service, he put off his own Clothes, bathed himſelf in Water, and put on the Garments of the Prieſt-hood. Theſe expreſſions in Scripture, Put off the old man, and be renewed and put on the new, Epheſ. IV. 22, 23, 24. Put on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Rom. XIII. 14. Baptized into Chriſt, and putting on Chriſt, Gal. III. 27. Waſhed from our ſins, and made Prieſts, Rev. I. 5, 6. Not unclothed but clothed upon, 2 Cor. V. 4. ſeem to allude to this cuſtom.

b Rab. Sol. in Exod XXVIII.

2. The holy Garments of the Prieſts were of white Linnen, and they conſiſted of four parcels, whereas the High Prieſts Garments were of eight parcels, and they were of other Colours as well as white: And, as hath been obſerved elſewhere, every Prieſt was firſt tried by the Sanhedrin, whether he were right and fit, and being ſo found he had his white Garments put upon him, all which Garments were found at the publick charge. The Man clothed with linnen, with a writers Inkhorn by his ſide, Ezek. IX. 3. Walking with Chriſt in white, Rev. III. 4. Araying in white Robes, Rev. VII. 9, &c. do ſeem to refer to this holy Garb and Colour of the Prieſts.

3. Upon their Feet they wore nothing at all whilſt they ſerved, but ſtood in the Court barefooted, were it never ſo cold; nay though they were barefooted, yet might they not ſtand upon any thing to keep their Feet from the cold pavement, but muſt ſtand barely upon that, were the Service never ſo long and the ſeaſon never ſo ſharp: The reaſon of their barefootedneſs was becauſe of the holineſs of the ground, as Exod. III. 5. Joſh. V. 15. and the reaſon of their ſtanding only on the bare ſtones, was to ſhew their fervour and zeal to the Service.

4. Upon their Thighs and Loins they wore linnen breeches to prevent the diſcovery of their nakedneſs, Exod. XXVIII. 42. either when they ſtood upright aloft upon the Altar, or when they ſtooped down to any work of the Service, either there or in any other place. And here I cannot but think of that ridiculous paſſage in c Martial. in lib. 3. Epig. 24. which ſuch a proviſion as this might have prevented: And of that paſſage in the Treatiſe Tamid d where ſome of the Prieſts are ſaid to be delivered to the Chazanim or Overſeers, and they ſtripped them of their Garments, and left nothing upon them but their breeches.

c Martial. lib. 3 Epig. 24.

d Tamid. per. 5.

5. Upon their Bodies they wore a linnen Coat or Surplice which was called כתונת תשבץ Exod. XXVIII. 4. by the Seventy χιτῶνα κοσυμβωτὸν· upon which Nobilius maketh this comment: e Græcam dictionem retinet S. Hieronymus ad Marcellam. S. Auguſt. q. 114. habet cum cornibus, &c. Hierome retaineth the Greek word (Coſymbotam) Auſtin in queſt. 114. Tranſlates it with horns, and addeth that the Latine Interpreters thought it better, to call it the Coat with horns, than if they had ſaid, with tufts. But others Interpret it ſtrait and girt: which Interpretation ſeemeth not impertinent, ſeeing that afterward in this ſame Chapter Coſymbi and Coſymboti do ſignifie knots. But others Tranſlate it out of the Hebrew, Ocellatum, or checkered. And ſo it might be ſhewed from the Original of the Hebrew word uſed, that it ſo ſignifieth, and this linnen was wrought, Diaper-like, with checker or diced work, or ſome ſuch kind of Workmanſhip, which ſet it out with neatneſs as well as it was white.

e Nobil in LXX in Ex XXVIII.

6. This Coat was girt to them with a long ſcarf, which went divers times about them like a ſwaddle, which was called אבנט, and which both helped to keep them warm in their thin clothing, and to ſtrengthen their Backs in their hard Service, which ſometime they met withal, tugging with the Beaſts that they were to ſlay, and lifting at them when they were killed.

7. Upon their Heads they had a Bonnet or a Mitre, which was a linnen ſcarf often wrapped and wrapped about their Heads, after the manner of the Turkiſh Tullibants, as is more fully deſcribed in the Temple Service, Chap. 4.

In theſe four parcels of Veſture, the High Prieſts and the other Prieſts were alike, for the High Prieſt wore theſe as well as they, but he had four other parcels over and above which they might not wear, and by which he was ſingularly diſtinguiſhed from them; and theſe were 1. מעיל The Coat of the Ephod: this the Seventy call Ποδήρη· 2. אפוד The Ephod it ſelf, which he put upon that Coat, and claſped it together over his Paps with a curious girdle. This helpeth to underſtand that in Rev. I. 13. ἐνδεδυμένον ποδήρη καὶ περιεζωσμένον πρὸς τοῖς μαστοῖς. 3. חושן The Breſt-plate: in which were put the Urim and Thummim, Exod. XXVIII. 30. which in the Apoſtles application ſeem to ſignifie Faith and Love, 1 Theſ. V. 8. 4. ציץ The Golden Plate upon his Forehead in which was written קודש ליהוה The holy One of the Lord (compare Luke IV. 34.) which have been particularly ſpoken to in the Tract and Place cited a little above.

As the Prieſts Garments were provided at the Publick charge, ſo when they were overworn they returned to the Publick again; for their Coats and Breeches, &c. were ravelled to make yarn for the Lamps, and for the lights at the ſolemn nightly Feſtivity in the Feaſt of Tabernacles, and it is like, for the Prieſts Candles in their Chambers.

SECT. VI.

The anointing Oil.

THE appointment and compoſition of anointing Oil is laid down, in Exod. XXX. 23, &c. where the Lord commanded thus, Thou ſhalt take unto thee principal Spices, of pure Myrrhe five hundred ſhekels, and of ſweet Cinnamon half ſo much, even two hundred and fifty ſhekels: and of ſweet Calamus two hundred and fifty ſhekels: and of Caſſia five hundred ſhekels after the ſhekel of the Sanctuary, and of Oil Olive an hin: And thou ſhalt make it a holy anointing Oil, &c. The Simples need not to be diſputed of, only I cannot but obſerve and wonder at the conception of Rambam about one of them, who holdeth מור Mor which our Engliſh hath very properly Tranſlated Myrrhe to be a the congealed Blood of an Indian Beaſt: whereupon one of his Gloſſaries takes him up thus, b It cannot enter into my Head, that they would put the Blood of a Beaſt into any holy compoſition, much leſs of a Beaſt unclean. But מור Mor is that that is ſpoken of in the Canticles, I am come into my Garden, my Siſter, my Spouſe, I have gathered my Myrrhe.

a Maim in Kele Mikdaſh. par. 1.
b Gloſſ. ibid.

For the making up of theſe Simples into the compound of the anointing Oil, the way and manner is recorded to have been thus; c They were bruiſed every one apart, and by themſelves, and then were they mingled and boiled in clean Water, till all their ſtrength was come out into that Decoction: which Decoction ſtrained, and having Oil put to it, was again boiled to the height of an Ointment and ſo reſerved.

c Ibid.

This anointing Oil was only in uſe in the times of the Tabernacle and firſt Temple, and with it were their Veſſels ſanctified, according as was appointed in the place of Exodus even now cited, and deſcribed Levit. VIII. but there was no ſuch Ointment under the ſecond Temple, for there the Veſſels were ſanctified by their very uſe and ſerving in them: and ſo indeed was the Temple it ſelf: For there was neither cloud of Glory to ſanctifie the Houſe, nor divine Fire to ſanctifie the Altar, nor holy Oil to ſanctifie the Veſſels, nor Urim and Thummim to honor the Prieſts, and yet was the Place and Service then as holy as it was before. God by this abatement of thoſe external advantages and excellencies, and yet by the continuance of the honour of his Worſhip and Service, making way to the dignifying of the Spiritual Worſhip under the Goſpel, when ſuch external and viſible appearances of his Preſence were not to be looked for, and when all Ceremoniouſneſs in holy things ſhould be aboliſhed and laid aſide.

With the holy Oil whileſt it was in uſe and imployment, was the High Prieſt anointed, as well as other things, and when the uſe of the Oil ceaſed, then was he conſecrated by the arraying of him in the Garments appointed for the High Prieſts wearing, and he was ſaid to be מרובה בגדים conſecrated by the veſtments, as we have obſerved in another place. The manner of his anointing whiles that was uſed, is deſcribed by the Talmudiſts to have been כמין כי יו ונירת d after the form of a Greek Chi: They anointed the Kings (ſay they) after the form of a Crown, but the Prieſts after the form of a Chi. What means, after the form of a Chi? e R. Menaſſes the ſon of Gada ſaith, After the form of a Greek Chi. But what means this? f R. Solomon ſaith, It was firſt poured on his Head, and then put between his Eyebrows, and drawn this way and that way with the Finger of him that put it there: which others expreſs thus, g One poured the Oil upon his Head, and it ran down this way and that way, like two pearling droppings upon his Beard, as Pſal. CXXXIII. 2.

The Oil and anointing wherewith the Prieſts and the Veſſels of the Lords Houſe were ſanctified, did denote the Word and the Spirit of God, whereby he ſanctifieth the Veſſels of his Election, even perſons of his Choice, to his Service, and Acceptance: Oil and anointing do ſignifie the Word as well as the Spirit. And in that ſenſe ſhould I interpret the anointing, in 1 John II. 20. 27. Ye have an unction, that is the word, from the holy One, and ye know all things by it. And the anointing, that is, the Word, which ye have received of him abideth in you: and ye are not to ſeek for Teaching from any Man, for the ſame Word hath taught you abundantly of all things, &c.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

The Emblem of the Divine Glory at the Temple. Ezek. I. Eſay VI. Rev. IV. &c. Explained.

THE Prophet Ezekiel ſaw the viſionary Glory that he hath deſcribed, Chap. I. and Chap. X. four times over. 1. At the River Chebar among the Captives of his own Captivity, Chap. I. 1: that is, that Captivity which was carried away with Jechoniah, for then was he himſelf Captived. 2. In a plain among the Captives of the other Captivity, that is, Jehoiakims, Dan. I. who dwelt indeed upon the Coaſts of the ſame River, but at ſome diſtance from the other, Chap. III. 15, 20, 23. 3. In the Temple, Chap. VIII. 4. And 4. at the renewed Temple again, Chap, XLIII. 2, 3.

The viſion and Glory that he ſaw, was thus;

Ezek. I. verſ. 4. Behold a whirle-wind out of the North, &c.) Out of the North appeared a ſtormy cloud, with fire wrapped in it, which flamed into a brightneſs all about, and in the middle of all was as a glowing fire. For out of the North, namely, from Babel, was a ſtorm to riſe and fire to come, that was to deſtroy both City and Temple, and that ſhould cauſe the Glory of the Lord which dwelt there, to come out thence as out of burning, as this Glory that he ſaw which repreſented that, came out of this fire.

Verſ. 5. Four living creatures, and this was their appearance, they had the likeneſs of a Man.) That is, in ſtature and proportion of Body, Thighs, and Legs, they had the likeneſs and erect ſhape of a Man; only their Head and Feet and ſome particulars elſe were different, of which he giveth account in the following verſes.

Verſ. 6. But every one had four Faces, &c.) I render the conjunction ו But; becauſe (the Particle bearing it) it being ſo tranſlated, giveth the clearer and the readier ſenſe. They had the likeneſs of a Man, But every one had four Faces.

And in verſ. 7. The ſame particle ו in וכף being Tranſlated exegetically, For, doth alſo clear the ſenſe, Their Feet were ſtraight Feet, for the ſole of their Feet was as the ſole of a Calfs Feet.

And they ſparkled, &c.) that is, their Feet ſparkled like burniſhed Braſs; for the brightneſs of their Bodies is deſcribed at verſ. 13.

Verſ. 8. And the hands of a Man were under their Wings on their four ſides; ſo had they four their Faces and their Wings.) That is, they had their Faces and their Wings on their four ſides: namely, a Wing on their Breaſt and a Face that way, a Wing on the Back and a Face that way, and a Wing on either Shoulder and Faces likewiſe, and under their Wings every way was a Mans Hand and Arm.

Verſ. 9. Their Wings were joining one to another.) This is explained at verſ. 11.

They turned not about when they went, they went every one ſtraight before his Face.) Which way ſoever they were to go, they needed not to turn their Bodies, to ſet their Face that way as Men and other Creatures do; who when they are to go this way or that way, they turn their Bodies till their Faces ſtand the way they are to go: but theſe did not, nor needed they to do ſo; for go which way they would, they had a Face that led them that way.

Verſ. 10. As for the likeneſs of their Faces, &c.) Every one had the Face of a Man before, and the Face of an Eagle behind, the Face of a Lion towards the right Hand, and the Face of a Bullock towards the left.

It is not much important to diſpute, whether they had four Heads as well as Faces, or only one Head faced on every ſide; I ſhould rather hold for the former, and could give ſome reaſons that ſway me to that opinion, but I ſhall not inſiſt upon them here.

Some there have been that have conceived that the quarters of their Faces are named in reference to their ſtanding towards Ezekiel; as that the Face towards Ezekiel was a Mans, the Face which was upon Ezekiels right Hand (which was the left Hand of the Cherub) was a Lions; the Face on Ezekiels left Hand (which was the Cherubs right) the Face of a Bullock; and the Face of an Eagle behind: but they that have been of that opinion have not obſerved, that the four living Creatures ſtood not in a ſtraight line all facing Ezekiel, but in a ſquare poſture, as ſhall be ſhewed by and by.

Theſe living Creatures are called Cherubins by this Prophet very often, Chap. 10. and by that name, laid to this deſcription, he teacheth us how to conceive of the form of the Cherubins that we read of ſo oft in Scripture, as the Cherubins upon the Mercy ſeat, and the the Cherubins that overſhadowed the Ark in Solomons Temple, and the Cherubins wrought in the Tabernacle Curtains, and carved upon the Temple-walls, &c. namely, of this four-fold feature or having ſo many Faces; ſaving that in the Imbroidery of the Curtains and Sculpture upon the Walls, only two of the four Faces could be made to appear. And ſo it is evident, in Ezek. XLI. 19. where he ſaith, there were Cherubins and Palm-trees carved upon the Walls, ſo that a Palm-tree was between a Cherub and a Cherub, and every Cherub had two Faces: ſo that the Face of a Man was towards the Palm-tree on the one ſide, and the Face of a young Lion was towards the Palm-tree on the other ſide. Their other two Faces were to be conceived obſcured in the Wall, as if they were looking into it. But it may not paſs unobſerved that theſe two Faces of a Man and a Lion, were not the Cherubs oppoſite Faces, that is, that before and that behind, but they were his Face before and his Face on the right ſide: and hence I have one reaſon to conjecture that they had four Heads as well as four Faces, becauſe it will otherwiſe be very harſh to imagine how his Fore-face and right Side-face ſhould be ſet to look before and behind. Now theſe two Faces of a Man and a Lion were the Faces that the Cherub that ſtood upon the right Hand of the Ark as it ſtood facing the People, looked upon the Ark and the People withal, his humane Face toward the Ark, his Lions towards the People: And we ſhall obſerve afterward how thoſe whom the Cherubins repreſented, had in Office to look mutually towards God and his People, and were Mediators between them.

The Prophet, in Chap. X. verſ. 14. reckoning the four Faces of theſe Cherubins again, begins with the Face of a Bullock firſt, which was a left Hand Face, and inſtead of the Face of a Bullock, he calls it the Face of a Cherub: was not the Face of a Lion or Eagle the Face of a Cherub, as well as the Face of a Bullock? It ſeemeth ſtrange therefore that he ſhould call the Bullocks Face, the Face of a Cherub rather than any other: But the reaſon ſeemeth to be taken from this conſideration: The High Prieſt when he went into the moſt Holy place up to the Ark, the Cherub that ſtood by the Ark upon his right Hand, whither he was more ready to look than on his left, ſtood facing him with the Face of a Bullock. Now the Prophet in this place is ſpeaking of Gods Glory flitting from the Temple, where it dwelt eſpecially on the Ark between the Cherubins, and as if he looked at that right Hand Cherub, which was now flitting from his ſtation and removing, ſo he nameth that Face that looked upon him: and he calleth the Face of a Bullock, the Face of a Cherub, becauſe that was the Face of the Cherub that was moſt looked on and obſerved by him that went into the moſt Holy place.

Verſ. 11. Thus were their Faces: and their Wings were parted upward,) Though their Wings joyned one to another at the ſetting on, yet they opened and parted upward, as alſo do the Wings of other flying Fowls: who though they grow near together at the roots, yet they ſpread and part wider and wider towards the points: And the like in ſome parity may be conceived concerning the parting of their Faces, that they grew upon one root as it were, but parted upward, into ſo many Heads: and ſo the conſtruction of the verſe ſeemeth to carry it ופניהם וכנפיהם where the Particle ו in the beginning of the verſe is not ordinary, and requireth obſervation: It may very well be rendred, Both their Faces and their Wings were parted upward.

Two Wings of every one were joyned one to another, and two covered their Bodies, &c.) The deſcription of the living Creatures, in Eſay VI. and the parallel to them, and theſe in Rev. IV. muſt help us to Interpret this eleventh verſe, about their Wings. The Apocalyptick calls them living Creatures, and numbreth them four, and nameth their four Faces punctually as this Prophet doth, but reckoneth their Wings to be ſix a piece, Rev. IV. 8. Eſay nameth indeed the living Creatures that he ſaw by another name, than either John or Ezekiel do, yet he meaneth the very ſame, both for number and form, for he ſaw the very ſame Glory of God that theſe deſcribe, that is, Gods Glory at the Temple, as the very firſt verſe of that Chapter doth explain it: And in this ſenſe is the word His Glory to be underſtood, John XII. 41. He ſaw four living Creatures, with four Faces, and in all things like to theſe deſcribed here, as to their form and proportion, and he ſaith, every one of them had ſix Wings, Eſay VI. 2.

The Prophet Ezekiel ſaith no leſs as to that matter, although he ſpeak it not ſo very plainly out: for laying verſ. 11. and verſ. 23. together, we ſhall find the account of their Wings to be to this purpoſe, and the ſame number. They had Wings that were parted above: theſe were the two wherewithal they flew: And they had other two which joined one to another, over their Heads, theſe are parallel to thoſe wherewithal Eſay ſaith they covered their faces: and they had two wherewithal they covered their Bodies: thoſe are they, that he ſaith, covered their Feet: Thus is the eleventh verſe to be underſtood: which the twenty fourth ſpeaketh parallel to, and ſomething explaineth. It is ſaid there, that under the Firmament (which was over their Heads) their Wings were ſtraight one towards another: and they had two Wings which covered on this ſide, and two Wings which covered on that ſide: and the meaning thereof is this, that they always carried two of their Wings ſtraight upright, joining together over their Heads, and when they ſtood ſtill they covered their Bodies with four Wings, two on Back and Belly, and two on either ſide: Whereas it is ſaid in verſ. 24. that when they ſtood they let down their Wings, it is to be underſtood only of thoſe two Wings wherewithal they flew, for they had every one of them two Wings that they never let down, and they were thoſe wherewithal they covered their Faces; and they had two other which they never lift up, and they were thoſe wherewithal they covered their Back and Belly, or ſecret parts before and behind. For that expreſſion of Eſay, They covered their Feet, meaneth, they covered their ſecret parts: for in that ſenſe is Feet ſometime taken in Scripture, as The hair of the Feet, Eſay VII. 20. &c.

And thus are we to reconcile thoſe two verſes in this firſt Chapter of Ezekiel, which ſeem to be diſſonant, the one whereof, namely, verſ. 11. ſaith, That with two of their Wings they covered their Bodies; and the other, which is verſ. 23. ſpeaks of four that covered their Bodies; which mean diſtinctly thus, that two of their Wings continually covered their ſecret parts before and behind, and they never lifted them up; and when they ſtood ſtill, they let down their Wings wherewith they flew, and with them covered their ſides. And ſo it appeareth that their two Wings grew out at their Shoulders, and the Wings wherewith they covered their Faces, grew out at their Breaſt and Back, and thoſe grew out below them that covered their ſecret parts.

Verſ. 12. And they went every one before his Face whitherſoever their mind was to go, &c.) Went they backward, forward, ſide-way, any way, they had every one a face to go that way, and needed no turning about to ſet their Faces that way they would go.

Verſ. 13. Their appearance was like burning coals of fire, &c.) Hence Eſay calleth them Seraphim, or burning ones; and that the rather, becauſe fire is there threatned to the Temple.

It went between the living Creatures, &c.) It, that is, fire: Every one of the living Creatures was of a glowing and flaming brightneſs, glowing like coals of burning fire, and flaming like Lamps; and yet beſides this fierineſs that they carried every one with them, there was fire alſo in the midſt of them, of a great brightneſs and flaſhing as lightning: So in Rev. IV. 5. Out of the Throne went lightnings, and thunders, and voices.

Thus was the appearance of theſe Cherubins, one thing more being added out of Ezek. X. 12. That their whole Body, and their Backs, and their Hands, and their Wings were full of Eyes: The like is ſaid, Rev. IV. 6. Now their poſture or manner of ſtanding was ſuch, that ſtanding ſtill or moving, they were in a ſquare form, as if four men ſhould ſtand ſo, as to make a ſquare ſpace or a Quadrangle in the midſt between them: Their quadrangular ſtanding, was (as I may ſo expreſs it) Lozenge-wiſe, or after the Diamond ſquare; one looking toward the South with his humane Face, and another with his humane Face towards the North, a third with the ſame Face toward the Eaſt, and the fourth with the ſame towards the Weſt. Thus they ſtood when they ſtood, and in this quadrature they moved when they moved: and to this ſenſe is that paſſage to be underſtood in Chap. X. 6, 7. where it is ſaid that fire was between the Cherubins, and one of them raught fire from between them, that is, out of the ſquare ſpace that was in the midſt of them as they ſtood. And ſo is Ezek. I. 15. which is the next verſe that comes to be explained, to be underſtood.

Verſ. 15. And behold a Wheel on the Earth by the living Creatures לארבעת פניו on his four Faces,) That is, on the four ſides or Faces of the ſquare Body as it ſtood; namely, a Wheel before every one of the living Creatures on the out-ſide of the ſquare: A Wheel before him that ſtood with his humane Face looking Eaſt, and a Wheel before him that ſtood with his humane Face looking Weſt, and ſo before them that ſtood looking North and South. Or if you will apprehend this whole Body as it ſtood in its ſquare, in the form of any of the living Creatures as he was ſingle, do but conceive that one ſtood looking Eaſt with his Face of a Man, and another Weſt with his Face of an Eagle, another looking South with his Face of a Lion, and the fourth looking North with his Face of a Bullock; and ſo you have the four ſeveral Faces on the out-ſide of the ſquare, and the four ſeveral Faces on the inſide of it, and the four Wheels ſtanding before the out-ſide ſtaves.

Verſ. 16. As it were a Wheel within a Wheel,) The faſhion of every Wheel was ſo, as it were one Wheel put croſs within another, ſo that they could run upon either of theſe croſſing Rings as there was occaſion: were they to go Eaſtward, they ran upon the one Ring, but were they ſuddainly to turn South, then they ran upon the croſs Ring: And ſo as the living Creatures had Faces to lead them any way, ſo had theſe Wheels Rings or Rims to go on any way: And this is meant in verſ. 17. when it ſaid, they went upon their four ſides, and turned not when they went: Not but that they turned about as Wheels do when they go, but when they were to change their way, as to go from Eaſt to South or North, or from Weſt to either of theſe quarters, they needed not to fetch a compaſs and wind wind about to ſet themſelves to go that way, but they readily turned upon the croſſing Ring and needed no more ado.

And thus did the living Creatures ſtand in one ſquare, and the Wheels in another ſquare about them: And let us take a pattern of their motion, ſuppoſing the living Creatures to ſtand with their humane Faces looking ſeverally to the four quarters of Heaven. Were they to move Eaſt, he that ſtood Eaſt his humane Face led him, and his Wheel ran before him; He that ſtood Weſt, his Eagles Face led him, and his Wheel followed him; He that ſtood South, his Face of a Bullock led him; and he that ſtood North, his Lions Face led him, and their Wheels ran beſide them: Were they to turn ſuddainly South; He that ſtood South, his humane Face led him, he that ſtood North, his Eagles, he on the Eaſt his Lions, and he on the North his Bullocks, and now the Wheels ran upon the other Ring.

Verſe 18. Thus were their Rings,) That is, one croſs within another: And they were high, and they were reverent,) ויראה להם It were an eaſie ſenſe, if the clauſe were Tranſlated, And they were dreadful, that is, Wheels had their dreadfulneſs as well as the living Creatures: But ſince the word יראה doth moſt properly and moſt generally ſignifie, the inward affection of fear or reverence, it ſeemeth in this place to mean the reverential and attendent poſture in which the Wheels ſtood, ready to move or ſtand according to the motion or ſtanding of the living Creatures, and both they and the living Creatures obſervant of that Preſence and Glory, upon which they waited: Had it been יראה מהם it might very well have carried it into that conſtruction, but being יראה להם it may the better countenance this that is produced, and R. Solomon ſpeaketh of ſome that did ſo interpret it.

Such was the faſhion of this divine Chariot, of living Creatures and Wheels, the Creatures drawing as it were and acting the Wheels, whitherſoever they moved, and the Wheels moving or ſtanding together with them in all voluntarineſs and compliance: Now the Lords riding upon this glorious Carriage, is deſcribed in the verſes following; An Azure Sky juſt over their Heads, born up as it were with the points of their Wings which they held upright over their Heads, covering their Faces with them: Above that Sky a Throne, on which ſat the reſemblance of a Man all fiery; from his Loins upward like fire glowing, and from his Loins downward like fire flaming: and a brightneſs in the form of a Rain-bow round about him. Compare Rev. IV. 2, 3.

And now to take up the moral or ſignification of this Emblem, we will firſt begin with the conſideration of the general Intention of it, and then deſcend to the Application of particulars.

That it intends in general to ſignifie and character out unto us, the Lords Glory and Preſence dwelling at his Temple, and among his People, theſe Obſervations will make it paſt doubting or peradventure.

1. The Temple is very commonly in Scripture ſtiled by the Name of Gods Throne, as Jer. XVII. 12. A glorious high Throne from the beginning is the place of our Sanctuary, Ezek. XLIII. 7. The place of my Throne, and the place of the ſoles of my Feet, where I will dwell in the midſt of the Children of Iſrael, &c. Which the Lord proclaimeth when his Glory was returned to the renewed Temple, as is apparent in the verſes immediately preceding. And ſo the Prophet Eſay ſaith, I ſaw the Lord ſitting upon a Throne high, and lifted up, and his Train filled the Temple, &c. And the Houſe was filled with ſmoak, &c. Eſay VI. 1, 4. Where he characterеth the Lords ſitting parallel to his dwelling in the Cloud of Glory upon the Ark, and from thence filling the whole Houſe with the train of his Glory. And ſo in the Book of the Revelation, where the Lord is inthroned, with ſuch living Creatures attending him as are deſcribed here, there are ſo plain intimations, that it meaneth his Glory at his Temple, that nothing can be plainer: for when there is mention of a Sea of Glaſs before the Throne, and of ſeven Lamps, Rev. IV. verſ. 5, 6. and of a golden Altar of Incenſe, Chap. VIII. 3. and of a voice from that Altar, Chap. IX. 13 &c. the alluſion is ſo clear to the Molten Sea, ſeven Lamps of the golden Candleſtick, the Altar of Incenſe, and the Oracle given from beyond it, which all were before the Ark where the Lords Glory dwelt in the Cloud, that the matter needeth no more proof than only to obſerve this: And that the Throne and Glory of God throughout all that deſcription meaneth in this ſenſe, there is evidence enough in that one clauſe in Chap. XVI. verſ. 17. a voice came out of the Temple of Heaven from the Throne.

2. Ezekiel himſelf ſheweth that this glory referred to the Temple, becauſe he hath ſhewed it pitched there, flitting thence and returning thither again. 1. He ſaith, That the Glory of the God of Iſrael was at the Temple, namely, that that he had ſeen and deſcribed in the firſt Chapter, Chap. VIII. 4. though he be there in numbring up the abominations that were committed in the Temple, which were great and many, yet doth he relate that this Glory was there ſtill, becauſe the Lord had not yet withdrawn his Preſence thence. But, 2. At the laſt the provocations in that place do cauſe it to depart; and and that departure he deſcribeth in Chap. X. and there he ſetteth forth the very ſame Glory, and almoſt in the very ſame terms that he doth in Chap. I. He telleth that this Glory of the Lord departed from off the Cherub, that is, from off the Mercy ſeat, where it had always dwelt between the Cherubins, and went out, firſt to the threſhold, verſ. 4. then to the Eaſt-gate, verſ. 19. then to the City and to the Mount Olivet, and ſo departs, Chap. IX. 23. But, 3. When he ſpeaketh of and deſcribeth a new Temple, then he ſheweth his Glory returned thither again, Chap. XLIII. 2, 3, 4. And upon theſe three particulars of its pitching at the Temple, flitting thence and returning thither again, we may take up theſe obſervations for the further clearing of this ſignification.

1. That the Prophet maketh ſome diſtinction betwixt the Glory of the Lord dwelling upon the Cherub, that is, on the Mercy Seat, over the Ark, and the Glory of the Lord upon theſe Cherubins: for he ſaith, The Glory of the Lord went up from the Cherub, and ſtood over the threſhold of the Houſe, theſe Cherubins then ſtanding on the right ſide of the Houſe, Chap. X. 3, 4. and then that the Glory of the Lord departed from off the threſhold of the Houſe, and ſtood over the Cherubins, verſ. 18. The Glory of the Lord in the repreſentation that the Prophet deſcribeth in the firſt Chapter was upon the Cherubins already, for he ſaith, The Glory of the God of Iſrael was there, according to the viſion that I ſaw in the plain Chap. VIII. 4. and yet he mentioneth another Glory now added to it: namely, the Cloud of Glory that dwelt upon the Mercy ſeat, for he ſaith, that upon the flitting of that Glory from off the Cherub to the threſhold, the Houſe was filled with the Cloud; the meaning of this we ſhall look at afterward.

2. As to the flitting of this Glory from the Temple, the Prophet ſaith, He ſaw it when he came to deſtroy the City, Chap. XLIII. 3. that is, when he came to foretel that the City ſhould be deſtroyed. And he dated the time of his firſt ſeeing of this Glory, in the fifth year of the Captivity of Jehoiakim, Chap. I. 2. which was the fifth year of the reign of Zedekiah, 2 Kings XXIV. 8, 17, 18. in which very year Zedekiah did rebel againſt the King of Babel, which action was the very beginning of Jeruſalems ruine.

3. As to the returning of this flitted Glory again to the new built Temple, Chap. XLIII. it is obſervable that the Cloud of Glory which had deſcended and filled the Tabernacle, and had done the like at Solomons Temple, did never ſo at the ſecond Temple, or that built after the Captivity, as the Jews themſelves confeſs, and that not without good reaſon: Yet doth the Prophet as clearly bring that Glory into his new Temple, as ever it had come into them: but only that this was in a viſion, and ſo it ſhewed viſionarily, the Lords dwelling in his Ordinances and preſence among his People under the ſecond Temple, unto which the People returned out of Babel, and in the Spiritual Temple or Church under the Goſpel (for Ezekiels new Temple promiſed a bodily Temple to the returned, and promiſed and typified a Spiritual Temple under the Goſpel) even as he had done viſibly in his Cloud of Glory, in the Tabernacle and firſt Temple. And ſecondly he addeth further, that when that Glory was entred, the Eaſt-gate at which it came in, was ſhut and never opened after, Chap. XLIV. 2. to denote the Everlaſting dwelling of the Lord in the Church of the Goſpel among his People, and never departing as he had done from Hieruſalem Temple.

This then being the ſignification of this appearance and Glory, in general, we are next to look upon the particulars of it, which will more fully alſo confirm and clear this matter, and firſt we will begin with the living Creatures, or Cherubins.

For the better diſcovery of them what they were, and what they meant, theſe things do deſervedly challenge ſpecial conſidering and obſervation.

1. That they are plainly diſtinguiſhed from Angels: For in Rev. V. 11. there is mention of many Angels round about the Throne, and about the living Creatures, and the number of them was ten thouſand times ten thouſand, and thouſands of thouſands: And in Rev. VII. 11. All the Angels ſtood round about the Throne, and about the Elders, and the four living Creatures: So that here is apparent difference between Angels and living Creatures both in their names and in their placing: For the living Creatures were about the Throne, the twenty four Elders about the living Creatures, and the innumerable multitude of Angels about all.

2. That they were ſuch as Chriſt redeemed from the Earth; For obſerve in Rev. V. 8, 9. The four living Creatures as well as the four and twenty Elders fall down before the Lamb, &c. ſaying, Thou waſt ſlain and haſt redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every Kindred and Tongue, and People and Nation, and haſt made us unto our God Kings and Prieſts, &c. So that the living Creatures were redeemed, and were of People and Nations, and were made Kings and Prieſts as well as the twenty four Elders, which cannot be applied to Angels.

3. That theſe living Creatures or Cherubins are never mentioned but in viſion or Hieroglyphick; In viſion, as in theſe places that have been cited of Eſay, Ezekiel, and the Revelation, Revelation, and in Hieroglyphick, as the Cherubins covering the Ark, and wrought in the Tabernacle Curtains, and on the Temple Walls. It is true indeed that it is ſaid, in Gen. III. God placed Cherubins at the Gate of Eden, which is only for the fuller and more feeling apprehenſion of the thing, the Cherubins being ſuch forms as with which the People were beſt acquainted ſeeing them in the Tabernacle Curtains.

4. They therefore being thus conſtantly held out in a Doctrinal and ſignificative tenor, as Viſions and Hieroglyphicks are, they are to be expounded to ſuch a Doctrinal and Figurative ſenſe, and ſo is the whole body of Glory, as I may ſo call it, the whole viſionary Theatre or ſpectacle that is before us, to be taken.

And firſt to begin with the quadrature or four-ſquare poſture of the whole appearance, which was touched before, and now a little more to be conſidered on. There is intimation enough in Ezekiel, that the four living Creatures ſtood ſquare, with a fire in the midſt of them, and the Wheels in a ſquare on the outſide of the ſquare of the living Creatures: but in the Revelation it is yet more plain, for there it is ſaid, the four living Creatures ſtood round about the Throne, which could not be but in a quadrature, one before, another behind, and one of either ſide; for how elſe could four ſtand round about it? The Throne then meaning the Temple, as was ſhewed before, this double quadrature about it, doth call us to remember the double Camp that pitched about the Tabernacle upon the four ſides of it, Eaſt, Weſt, North, and South: When the Lord did firſt platform and order the incamping of Iſrael in the Wilderneſs.

1. He pitched his own Tabernacle in the middle, as that being the very Center, Heart, and Life of the Congregation, and they being all to attend upon it, and God thereby declaring himſelf to be in the midſt of them, Lev. XXVI. 11, 12.

2. He pitched the Tribe of Levi in four Squadrons on the four ſides of the Tabernacle next unto it: for they being the Miniſters that attended upon the Publick Service, and that drew near unto the Lord, and were Mediators 'twixt God and his People, the Lord cauſed them to Incamp next unto his Sanctuary, and betwixt the Camp of the People and Himſelf.

3. The outmoſt of all, in four main Bodies on the four ſides of the Tabernacle, and of the Levites Camp, did the whole Congregation pitch, and ſo there were two quadratures, the Levites about the Sanctuary, and the Congregation about the Levites. See Numb. II.

Anſwerable is the platform here, and the quadrangular poſture is in reference and alluſion to that, and from thence muſt we explain it. In the midſt was a Quadrangle of fire: and upon every ſide of that Quadrangle a Cherub, and on the outſide of the Cherubins even before every one of them was a Wheel. And in the Revelation, A Throne in the middle, four living Creatures next about it, and the twenty four Elders about them.

So that by this parallel to Iſraels Camp from whence the platform both in the Prophet and the Apocalyptick is taken, the four living Creatures did ſignifie the Prieſts and Miniſters of the Lord, and the Wheels in the one, and the twenty four Elders in the other did repreſent the People or the Congregation: And this will ariſe clearer and clearer ſtill to our obſervation, as we go along to conſider their Place, Actions and Deſcriptions.

1. I know it is conceived by ſome that the twenty four Elders in the Revelation were nearer the Throne than the Cherubins (and that Opinion muſt needs conclude the like in Ezekiel) but the contrary is apparent by theſe Obſervations.

Firſt, That (beſides what hath been ſaid upon verſ. 15.) in Ezek. X. 6. a man clothed in linnen, being bidden to take fire from between the Wheels, from between the Cherubins, he firſt goeth in within the compaſs of the Wheels, and then a Cherub taketh fire from the midſt of the Cherubins and reacheth it to him.

Secondly, It is ſaid there again at verſ. 9. that the four Wheels were by the Cherubins, whereas if the Wheels had been inmoſt, it had been proper to have ſaid, the Cherubins were by the Wheels.

Thirdly, And at verſ. 18. It is ſaid the Glory of the Lord ſtood over the Cherubins, and Chap. I. 22, 26. &c. it is ſaid the Throne of God was juſt over their Heads, and there is no mention of being over the Wheels, which ſhews it very unlikely that the Wheels were in the middle of the Cherubins.

Fourthly, In Rev. V. 6. the platform is named thus, In the midſt of the Throne, and of the four living Creatures, and in the midſt of the Elders; the Throne in the midſt, the living Creatures next, and the Elders outmoſt: and ſo again in verſ. 11. &c.

Fifthly, In Chap. IV. 4. It is ſaid, that about the Throne were four and twenty ſeats, and on them four and twenty Elders ſitting; and at verſ. 6. ἐν καὶ μέσῳ τοῦ θρόνου, καὶ κύκλῳ τοῦ θρόνου τέσσαρα ζῶα · which is a hard piece of Greek to conſtrue, becauſe there is an Ellipſis of a particle, which not obſerved, hath produced but harſh Interpretations of the place. The Syriack hath rendred it, In the midſt of the Throne, and about it, and before before it; the moſt Tranſlations, In the midſt of the Throne, and about the Throne, which how to make a ſmooth Expoſition of, is hard to find. The particle τῶ ſeemeth to be underſtood, which expreſſed, the ſentence would run thus, ἀ μέσῳ τῦ θρόνυ, ἢ τῦ κύκλῳ θρόνυ, that is, between the Throne and the incompaſſing that was about it (of twenty four ſeats and Elders on them) there were four living Creatures.

Thus then was the place of the living Creatures, next the Throne; and that being the place of the Levites next the Sanctuary, it ſheweth that theſe Cherubins or Creatures, did repreſent the Miniſters and the Wheels, and twenty four Elders did repreſent the Congregation.

And this will yet appear the clearer by obſerving that the living Creatures were the firſt agents and movers continually in any expedition or imploiment, as the Miniſters were in the Publick Service. In Ezek. I. and X. the Wheels moved or ſtood, according as the living Creatures did firſt. And in the Apocalypſe the living Creatures firſt praiſe and worſhip, and then the Elders, Chap. V. 14. The four living Creatures ſaid Amen, and the twenty four Elders fell down and worſhipped, &c. Chap. IV. 9, 10. When the living Creatures give Glory and Honour, &c. the twenty four Elders fell down, &c.

2. And now to come to the conſideration of their figure and reſemblance, and firſt to begin with their four Faces; the Jews acknowledge that theſe four Faces were ſeverally pictured in the four Standards of the ſquadrons of Iſraels Camp, as they pitched in the quadrangular form that hath already been ſpoken of. There were figures (ſaith * Aben Ezra) in every Standard and Standard: And our Ancients do ſay that in the Standard of Reuben, there was the picture of a Man, and in the Standard of Judah the picture of a Lion, in the Standard of Ephraim the picture of a Bullock, and in the Standard of Dan the picture of an Eagle, ſo that they were like the Cherubins which Ezekiel ſaw: With which aſſertion Ramban alſo agreeth, and Targum Jonathan doth not much diſſent, and this opinion was entertained as an ancient Tradition of the Nation: upon what ground, and upon what references of theſe Pictures to the Tribe and Standard to which they belonged, it is not much material to inſiſt upon, to debate here.

* Aben Ezra in Numb. XXII.

Upon the obſervation that theſe repreſentations were ſeverally in the Standards of Iſraels Camp, ſome have concluded, that therefore the four living Creatures which bare theſe repreſentations did ſignifie the Congregation or People, and not the Levites or Miniſters: which is unproper to conceive, becauſe ſuch a conſtruction allotteth all the four figures to every Standard, whereas all the four Standards did but make up and carry theſe four figures amongſt them all. But it is not improper to allot all theſe four figures to every one of the ſquadrons of the Levites, for every one of them, nay every particular one of the Prieſts and Levites had intereſt in and relation to the whole Congregation, as being Miniſters in their behalf: And as Aaron carried all the Tribes upon his Shoulders and Breaſt, ſo are the Miniſters in theſe Emblems of the living Creatures, decyphered as carrying the Faces of all the Standards of the whole Congregation: becauſe of their reference to the whole Congregation, they ſerving at the Temple for it. What allegorical Interpretations are made of theſe four Faces, I ſhall not trouble the Reader to produce, every one may find one ſuch application of them or other as his conception upon them ſhall lead him to it.

As for the reſt of the Proportion of theſe living Creatures, they are eſpecially remarkable for their Wings and Feet, for the reſt of their Bodies was like the Body of a Man: Two of their Wings were always erect over their Heads covering their Faces, from under which they ſpied, as it were, at their way they were to go, and at the Glory they attended on: which pertinently denoteth the reverential reſpect that the Miniſters of the Lord have to his Glory and to the Myſteries of his Counſel; compare 1 Pet. I. 12. With two other Wings they covered their ſecrets, in ſign of humble ſenſibleneſs of their own deformity; and with two they flew, in ſignification of ready activity and attendance for and upon the Lords Service; their Feet were in faſhion like to the Feet of a Bullock, and in colour like to burniſhed Braſs: according to which later character the Feet of our Saviour are deſcribed, Rev. I. 15. His Feet like unto fine Braſs as if they burned in a furnace. Every one will be ready to frame an allegorical application of theſe circumſtances, according to his own conception: It may be ſome (if they take thoſe living Creatures to repreſent the Miniſters, as I ſuppoſe they do) will when they read of their Feet like to the Feet of Bullocks, apprehend that it is, becauſe they trod out the Corn of the Word for the People; and as that was alſo done with a Wheel, ſo there are Wheels here in the like manner: It may be they will think they are deſcribed thus footed for the fitter ſetting them forth as the drawers of this Divine Charret: It may be they will ſuppoſe the beauty and ſhining brightneſs of their Feet, may ſignifie the holineſs of their ways, ſhining in ſanctity and burning in zeal: It may be they may think of the Prieſts Feet red for cold as they ſtood upon the bare Stones in their Service, and they ſeeming unſenſible of it, as are the Feet of Bullocks, and ſuch variety of apprehenſions will be ready to be taken up upon upon theſe things, that a Man may ſpeak his own thoughts and opinion in this matter, but not readily bring another to be of his mind.

The likeneſs of theſe living Creatures all over their Bodies, was as burning coals of fire, and like the appearance of Lamps, Ezek. I. verſ. 13. for the faithful Miniſters of the Lord are as a flame of fire, as Pſal. CIV. 4. ſhining in Life and Doctrine like Lamps and Lights, John V. 35. Matth. V. 14, 15, 16. and by the Word of the Lord even devouring the diſobedient, as Jer. V. 14. I will make my words in thy Mouth fire, and this People wood, and it ſhall devour them.

The fire that was in the midſt of theſe Creatures, which went up and down among them, and out of which proceeded Thundrings and Lightnings, Ezek. I. 14. Rev. IV. 5. may draw our thoughts to the Altar and fire there, and to obſerve the Prieſts ſtanding on the four ſides of it in their attendance on it (and ſo Eſay ſaith, one of the Seraphins took a fiery coal from the Altar and touched his Lips with it, Eſa. VI. 6, 7.) as theſe living Creatures ſtood on the four ſides of a Quadrangle of fire which was in the midſt of them, or rather it ſo plainly denoteth the Word of God among his Miniſters, and the Thundrings and Lightnings and Voices do ſo clearly relate to the giving of the Word at Sinai, that ſo to Allegorize it, is without any ſtraining at all, eſpecially conſidering how commonly the Word of God is compared to fire in the Scripture, as Deut. XXXIII. 2. Jer. V. 14. & XXIII. 29. & XX. 9. 1 Cor. III. 13.

Thus were theſe living Creatures which did reſemble and emblem the Lords Miniſters: the emblem of the People or the Congregation was two-fold; in Ezekiel, Wheels; in the Revelation, four and twenty Elders; and theſe later help to underſtand the meaning of the former. As the Ark and Cherubins upon it, and by it, are called the Charet of the Cherubins, 1 Chron. XXVIII. 18. the Lord there riding as it were in his Glory and Preſence, in the Cloud that dwelt upon it, even ſuch another compoſture doth Ezekiel deſcribe here, the Divine Charet of the Lord, of his Glorious and Triumphant riding and ſitting among his People in his Word and Ordinances, and his Preſence in them: And it is remarkable what is ſpoken by Ezekiel, in Chap. X. 4, 18. of which mention was made before, when he ſaith, That the Glory of the Lord went up from the Cherub and ſtood over the Cherubins: which meaneth but this, that that Glory which had dwelt upon the Ark in the moſt Holy place, did now depart and came to dwell upon this other Charet which he had deſcribed, of living Creatures and Wheels denoting this, that though the viſible Preſence of the Lord which had appeared in the Cloud of Glory upon the Ark were now departed, yet was his Preſence ſtill among his People, in that manner which he emblemed in that Scheme, namely his Miniſters and People attending him in his Word and Ordinances, and acting and moving according thereunto. And in the deſcription of this Divine Charet, you may obſerve, that the living Creatures or Miniſters, are charactered out, as both the Body of the Charet and they alſo that acted the Wheels: for the Lord rideth upon their Miniſtry (as it were) and his Name is thereby carried where he pleaſeth: and they are thoſe whom he uſeth by that Miniſtry to draw and move the People to Obedience, and Conforming to his Word: and there the Lord doth ride triumphantly among a People, as Pſal. XLV. 4. where Miniſters and People in joint and ſweet harmony and conſent, do agree and concur to carry up the Word, Name, and Glory of the Lord, and both do act in the Power of the Word and Ordinances: the Miniſters miniſtring, and the People moving or ſtanding according to the direction and influence of that Word.

What the Apocalyptick meaneth by the four and twenty Elders, he himſelf giveth ſome explanation of, in Chap. XXI. 12, 14. where he ſpeaketh of the Gates and Foundations of the New Jeruſalem, parallel to the Twelve Tribes of Iſrael, and the Twelve Apoſtles of the Lamb. And as theſe Twelve and Twelve, were the beginnings as we may call them, the one number of the Church under the Law, and the other number of the Church under the Goſpel; ſo under the ſum and number of both theſe united together, or under the notion of theſe four and twenty Elders he intendeth the whole Church or Congregation both of Jews and Gentiles. Both Wheels and living Creatures are deſcribed full of Eyes, in Ezek. I. 18. Rev. IV. 8. becauſe of the great meaſure of Knowledge the Lord vouchſafed to his People, and to denote the heedfulneſs of the Saints in their walking before him. The Lord himſelf is deſcribed dwelling upon them and among them, in Bright, Glorious, and Majeſtick repreſentations, but withal, incircled with the likeneſs of the Bow that is in the Cloud in the day of Rain, Ezek. I. 28. Rev. IV. 3. which was the Emblem of the Lords Covenant with his People, as Gen. IX. 13, 14, 15.

CHAP. XXXIX.

The motions and ſtations of the Ark and Tabernacle.

THE Tabernacle (which in its time was as a moving Temple) being brought into the Land of Canaan by Joſhua, a was firſt pitched and ſet up at Gilgal, the famous place of their firſt Incamping, Joſh. IV. 19. but the Ark and it were parted aſunder, immediately after the pitching of it: For that was carried into the field and marched with them in the Wars of Canaan, Joſh. VI. 12. & VIII. 33, &c. while the Tabernacle ſtood without it at Gilgal, and there the Sanhedrin ſat near unto it, with a ſtrong Camp as a Guard for defence of both, Joſh. IX. 6, 15. & XX. 43.

a Maym. in Beth habbech. per. 1. & Kal. hag. in Joſh. IV.

The time of the Tabernacles ſtanding there, was till the Land was conquered, and Judah and the Sons of Joſeph were ſeated, Joſh. XVIII. 1. which was ſeven years: though b ſome of the Jews do allot it fourteen: in which time, as they alſo aſſert, high places were lawful, and it was permitted to offer Sacrifices elſewhere than at the Tabernacle: becauſe in that time they were abroad in the Wars, and their condition was unſetled. Before the Tabernacle was firſt ſet up, c (ſay they) high places were permitted, and the Service was done by the firſt born: But after the Tabernacle was erected, high places were prohibited, and the Service was performed by the Prieſt-hood. The moſt Holy things were eaten within the curtains, and the leſs holy in any part of the Camp of Iſrael. When they came to Gilgal, high places were permitted again: and the moſt Holy things were eaten within the curtains, and the leſs holy in any place.

The memorable monuments that had been at Gilgal, did leave it as a place of honour and renown, and did prove occaſion in after times of exceeding much ſuperſtition, will-worſhip and Idolatry there: for there they ſacrificed Bullocks, Hoſ. XII. 11. and all their wickedneſs was there, and there the Lord hated them, Hoſ. IX. 15. d either becauſe they reſerved the Kingdom in Gilgal, 1 Sam. XI. 12. and refuſed the Lord to reign over them, or becauſe the Tabernacle had been firſt ſet up at Gilgal, and that was a choice place, therenpon the Prophets of Baal perſwaded them there to worſhip Baal.

d Kimch. in Hoſ. IX.

When the Land was conquered and now at peace, they removed the Tabernacle from Gilgal to a Town of Ephraim, for his birth-right ſake, and ſet it up there, and called the place Shiloh or Peaceable, becauſe the Lord had given them reſt from their Wars and from their Enemies round about. Here was built a Houſe of Stone for the Tabernacle, e as the Jews ſuppoſe, but only it was not roofed over with any thing, ſave with the curtains with which it had been covered from its firſt making: and this they ground from 1 Sam. I. 9. becauſe it is called a Temple, and 1 Sam. III. 15. becauſe it is ſaid to have doors.

e Talm. & Maym. ubi ſupr.

The time of the abode of the Tabernacle at Shiloh (Ephrata or in the Tribe of Ephraim, Pſal. CXXXII. 6.) was from the ſeventh year of the rule of Joſhua to the death of Eli three hundred forty and nine years, in which time occurred all the Story of the Book of Judges, and the tranſlation of the High Prieſt-hood from the line of Eleazar to the line of Ithamar, which is not there mentioned, and the cauſe of which alteration is not recorded.

f In this time high places were prohibited: and at Shiloh, there was no roof but a Houſe of Stone below and curtains above: and it was a place of reſt: the moſt Holy things were eaten within the curtains, and the leſs Holy and ſecond Tithe without, &c. In theſe times there is mention of a Sanctuary at Shechem, Joſh. XXIV. 1, 25, 26. which meaneth only the Houſe where the Ark was lodged for that preſent time: for all the Tribes meeting at Shechem, and being to make a Covenant with the Lord, they fetch the Ark of the Covenant thither, that the preſence and dread of the Lord might be more viſible among them, and the place where the Ark was ſet for that time was called the Sanctuary: as Moſes Tent was called the Tabernacle of the Congregation, becauſe the Glory of the Lord reſted upon it before the Tabernacle of the Congregation it ſelf was built, Exod. XXXIII. 7.

f Zevachim ubi ſupr.

From Shiloh, upon that fatal blow that Iſrael received by the Philiſtins, 1 Sam. IV. the Ark was captived, into the Land of theſe uncircumciſed, and the Tabernacle removed into another Tribe, and they ſo parted that they never met again, till they met together at Solomons Temple.

The Tabernacle was removed to Nob, a City of Prieſts, 1 Sam. XXII. 19. in the Tribe of Benjamin, Nehem. XI. 31, 32. and by the Jews Chorography, within the ſight or proſpect of Jeruſalem. The Chaldee Paraphraſt Gloſſeth, Eſay X. 32. where there is mention of this Town; thus, g He came and ſtood in Nob a City of Prieſts before the Wall of Jeruſalem: He anſwered and ſaid unto his Army, Is not this the City of Jeruſalem for which I have

have muſtered all my Army, and for which have I levied all my Province! Behold it is leſs and weaker than any of the Cities that I have ſubdued. He ſtood and nodded his Head and waved his Hand againſt the Mountain of the Houſe of the Sanctuary. For (ſaith Kimchi) from Nob he might ſee Jeruſalem, and when he ſaw it from thence, he ſhook his Hand at it as one deſpiſing it.

I ſhall not be curious to inquire whether Nob were any of the four Cities that were allotted at the firſt diviſion, to the Prieſts out of the Tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. XXI. 17, 18. or whether it were of a later poſſeſſion (as Ramah was to the Levites of the Stock of Samuel, 1 Sam. I. 1.) or if Nob were one of thoſe four Cities (and the ſame with Almon, for the other three are clearly diſtinguiſhed from it, Eſa. X. 29, 30. 2 Chron. I. 30.) whether it were Bahurim, which the Chaldee Paraphraſt conſtantly rendreth Alemeth, the ſame with Almon, 1 Chron. VI. 60. I ſhall only obſerve this, that when the Tabernacle had left the Tribe of Joſeph one of the Sons of Rachel, it betakes it to Benjamin another Son of the ſame Mother.

The warrant of its conveyance hither I doubt not was Divine, by ſome prophetical direction, though it be not expreſſed: I dare aver that the removal of it from hence to Gibeon was ſo, though that be not expreſſed neither, and I judge of the one by the other: and my reaſon is this; becauſe when David brings up the Ark to his own City and there ſettles the Prieſts and Levites in their attendance upon it, he alſo ſettles Prieſts and Levites in their attendance on the Tabernacle at Gibeon, 2 Chron. XVI. 39, 40, 41, &c. Now what reaſon can be given why David ſhould not rather have fetched up the Tabernacle to his own City as he did the Ark, than thus divide the Service of the Prieſts and Levites, but becauſe he knew the Tabernacle was placed in Gibeon by Divine warrant and direction, and he would not alter it?

If the Tabernacle removed to Nob preſently upon the captiving of the Ark from Shiloh, it reſided there about thirty ſeven years, all which time Samuel is alive, and ſeeth both the fall of Shiloh and the fall of Nob, and it may very well be, he was the director of the Tabernacle from Shiloh to Nob, and from Nob to Gibeon: In the time of its reſidence in both theſe places high places were permitted (as the Talmud conceiveth in the place cited even now) and the moſt holy things were eaten within the curtains, and the leſs Holy things in any City of Iſrael.

At Gibeon another place of the Tribe of Benjamin, did the Tabernacle ſtay from its firſt pitching there, till Solomon brought it up to the Temple when it was built: and whileſt it ſtood here, a memorable piece of Divine Juſtice againſt Saul cannot but be obſerved (to omit all other particulars) for as he had ſlain the Prieſts of the Lord, and had ruined the Tabernacle at Nob, ſo his Sons are hanged up before the Tabernacle in Gibeon, 2 Sam. XXI. 9. And now let us trace the Ark as we have done the Tabernacle till we bring them together.

The Ark being captived by the Philiſtins in the battel at Aphek, was detained in their Land ſeven months, rather becauſe they knew not what to do with it, than for any comfort or happineſs they found in it, for it was a Plague to their Gods, People and Country: At laſt it was reſtored: and firſt to Bethſhemeſh, a City of Prieſts, Joſh. XXI. 16. but there it proved alſo the deſtruction of the People: The Hebrew Commentators do ſcruple both at the cauſe of the ſlaughter, and at the number ſlain: The cauſe is not ſo very abſtruſe, for the Text ſaith, it was becauſe they looked into the Ark (though their various conſtruction of the words hath bred their doubting) but it is ſomething ſtrange that Bethſhemeſh a Town of no great note ſhould loſe fifty thouſand and ſeventy inhabitants at one time (beſide what eſcaped) a number of People anſwerable to the greateſt Cities. The Commentators ſpoken of, having obſerved this improbability, will heal the matter with as improbable a Gloſs: Seventy men (ſay they) which were valuable, every one to fifty thouſand; and others retaining the ſcruple ſtill, do raiſe it higher by their Interpretation; for the fifty thouſand men (ſay they) were every one of them valuable to the ſeventy men in the Sanhedrin. The Text doth plainly diſtinguiſh of the perſons, for it ſaith, That he ſmote of the men of Bethſhemeſh, becauſe they looked into the Ark, and he ſmote of the People: For the return of the Ark had occaſioned no doubt the concourſe of the People all about, beſides the Inhabitants of Bethſhemeſh (it was now upon the time of the Feaſt of Tabernacles when the Ark came up to them, and it may be that might cauſe the more conflux to the Ark when it was come) and the Lord for the boldneſs of Prieſts and People that would be looking into the Ark, breaketh out upon them with the Plague, and deſtroyeth ſo many thouſands of them.

The Prieſts of Bethſhemeſh that had eſcaped, ſent to the Men of Kiriathjearim to fetch up the Ark to them, and ſo they do. It is equally queſtionable, why they that were Prieſts ſhould ſend about ſuch a matter as this to the Men of Kiriathjearim, which were not, and that the Men of Kiriathjearim ſhould venture to fetch up the Ark, when they had ſeen the ſpeeding of Bethſhemeſh by it: But the Lord had now forſaken the Tribe of Ephraim, Ephraim, in which Tribe Shiloh stood, and had made choice of the Tribe of Judah, Psal. LXXVIII. 67, 68. of which Kiriathjearim was a chief City: and whether he used the counsel of Samuel to the People for a means to accomplish his determination, or what other way, is not determinable, but it is brought to pass, and the Ark now seated in the Tribe of Judah, out of which it never unsetled again whilest it was in being.

A long time whilest it stayed in Kiriathjearim it was under the curb of a Philistine Garrison, which was in that City, 1 Sam. X. 5. which might much damp the Peoples seeking and resorting to it, especially in this looseness and lukewarmness, or rather utter coldness of Religion that was amongst them. However, at the end of twenty years a general Reformation doth begin amongst them, and they begin to hearken after God, the Ark and Religion, and put away the strange gods that were among them, and God at that very instant doth grant them a miraculous Victory against the Philistins, 1 Sam. VII.

We read once of the Arks being within the compass of the Tribe of Benjamin before David fetched it up to Jerusalem, and that was with Saul at Gibeah, 1 Sam. XIV. 18. but it was restored from thence to Kiriathjearim at the place appointed for it as yet, by Divine direction, for otherwise it might as easily have been set up in Nob where the Tabernacle was now standing.

David about the second year of his Reign in Jerusalem, fetcheth it up from Kiriathjearim thither, and there pitched an habitation for it in Sion, where it resided till it was translated into Solomons Temple, save only that once it was taken out to have flitted with David in his flight from his son Absalom, but soon restored to its place again, 2 Sam. XV. At this Tabernacle in which the Ark was lodged in Sion, David sets up an Altar, 1 Chron. XVI. 2. for the offerings at that present time of the Arks bringing up thither, but not for continual sacrificing: And there he appointed a constant Musick to attend, of the Levites, but the Priests waited at Gibeon, where the Tabernacle was and the daily Sacrifice.

CHAP. XL.

The state and fate of the first Temple.

AT Naioth in Ramah where Samuel and David spent some time together, they platformed the buildings of the Temple and the manner of the Service: It was an unlikely time for David to think and contrive for such a thing at that time, when he knew not where to hide his own Head from the fury of Saul, yet so sure was the Promise to him, and so assured was his Faith in it, that even from that time he laid the Foundation of his thoughts towards the building of a Temple, setling of a Service, and even all his time after was preparing towards it. In all his Wars and Victories he still remembred to dedicate something of his spoils for that purpose, 2 Sam. VIII. 10, 11. 1 Chron. XVIII. 8, &c. so that at his death he left the greatest sums of Silver and Gold, and stock of Brass and Iron and such materials that is Recorded in any Story: And as he had his first instructions from Samuel, so did he ripen then by the Prophetick directions of Gad and Nathan the Prophets, 2 Chron. XXIX. 25. and so setled the Priests and Levites in their courses, and Carpenters and Masons to work, and had described the platform of all things so exactly, that he left to Solomon in a manner but the care to see the Work done, for he had prepared all things before.

About eleven or twelve years space was the Work of the Temple in Hand, before it was finished, namely, four years in hewing Stone and framing Timber, and seven years and an half in bringing up the building: For David in the last year of his Reign had gathered all the Proselytes in the Land to the number of one hundred fifty and three thousand, and had set them to work, and so they continued framing and preparing materials till the fourth year of the Reign of Solomon, in the second month of which year the Foundation of the House was laid, and in the eighth month of the eleventh year the Work was finished, 1 King. VI. 38. and so it was seven years and an half in building, which the Text for roundness of number doth count but seven.

It was a year within a month after that it was finished before the Dedication of it, in which time it is likely, they were getting away the rubbish, and preparing for its consecration, it lying useless all the while, for the Providence of the Lord disposed that it should be Dedicated at such a time, as that the time should carry a Mystery and Type with it, as well as the Temple it self: In the eleventh year of Solomons Reign in the month month Bull which is the eighth month it was finiſhed, 1 Kings VI. 38. and in his twelfth year in the month Ethanim which is the ſeventh month it was conſecrated: even at the time of the Feaſt of Tabernacles, 1 King. VIII 20. 2 Chron. V. 3. or the fifteenth day of that month: Concerning the title Ethanim, by which this month was named, the Jews have theſe Gloſſes: The Chaldee renders that verſe in the Book of Kings thus, And all the Men of Iſrael were gathered to the King in the old month, which they called the firſt month, but now the ſeventh. h Some of the Rabbins ſay, it was called Ethanim (which ſignifieth ſtrength, or ſtrong ones) becauſe the Fathers were born in it which were the mighty ones of the World: And others, i becauſe in it were the greateſt Feaſts: or k as others, becauſe in it the Fruits were gathered, which are the ſtrength of Mans life, &c. But whatſoever was the notation of the Name, certainly the remarkableneſs of that month was ſingular, in regard of many eminent occurrences that befel in it, of which we have ſpoken elſewhere; the moſt renowned of all which was, that our Saviour in that month was born into the World (and what if on that very day that the Temple was Conſecrated, namely the fifteenth day of the month) of whoſe Incarnation and Birth how lively a Type, the Temple and its Dedication were, I need not to illuſtrate: Thus was the Temple dedicate and the Service of it began, Anno Mundi three thouſand and one.

At the Dedication of it, both the Books of Kings and Chronicles inform us, that the Tabernacle of the Congregation, and all the Holy Veſſels that had been in the Tabernacle, were brought up thither, 1 Kings VIII. 4. 2 Chron. V. 5. But the queſtion is, What became of them there, were they uſed or were they laid up? There are that aſſert either way: and the later ſeemeth the more probable, namely, that theſe things of Moſes, upon the riſing of a greater and more eminent Glory, did decay and were laid aſide, as all his Ceremonies were to do upon the riſing of the Goſpel.

The Temple though it were of a Heavenly reſemblance, uſe and concernment, as figuring Chriſts Body, John II. 19. enjoying Gods preſence, 2 Chron. VII. 16. and Iſraels worſhip, Pſal. CXXII. 4, &c. yet being but an earthly building, it was ſubject to the univerſal condition of earthly things, caſualty and changing: Nay, there is hardly any State or Place in any Story, of which may be found more viciſſitudes and alterations of condition than of this: and there is hardly any Kings time of all thoſe that reigned in the time of the Temple, in which it received not ſome remarkable alteration of eſtate or other. In the time of Solomon that built it, it received that vile affront of an Idol Temple built by him in the face of it, and what became of the Service of the Temple in theſe times may be ſhrewdly ſuſpected: In his ſon Rehoboams time, it was firſt forſaken by the Ten Tribes, and afterward by Judah it ſelf, who fell to Idolatry, and then it was plundred by Shiſhak. How oft the Treaſuries of it were plundred, ſometimes by Forainers, ſometimes by their own Kings; how oft it ſelf prophaned, as by Athaliah, Ahaz, Manaſſeh; how the Service of it either totally ſlighted, or ſlightly performed; how Idols ſet up in it, and Altars to ſtrange gods; how the Blood of the High Prieſt ſhed, and the manners of the Prieſts corrupt, and the Houſe of Prayer made a Den of Thieves; as alſo how ſometimes again it was repaired, the Service reſtored, the Prieſts reformed, and matters amended with it, is ſo plainly and copiouſly deſcribed in the Books of Scripture, that it were but tranſcription of the Text to recite them in particular. At laſt it had run out its date, and it ſelf fired and all its precious Veſſels were Captived by the Babylonian: what became of the Ark the Scripture doth not mention, the Jews conceive that it was hid in ſome Vault, that they ſay Solomon had purpoſely made againſt ſuch a time, where it eſcaped the Conquerors fury: but this we leave to their own credit.

The time of the ſtanding of this firſt Temple from its finiſhing in the eleventh year of Solomon, to its firing by Nebuzaradan, was four hundred and twenty years.

SECT. I.

The ſtate of the ſecond Temple under the Perſian Monarchy.

ALthough between the return out of the Babylonian Captivity, and the final deſolation of Jeruſalem, there might ſeem to be ſtrictly and literally two Temples, that of Zorobabel, and that of Herod, (for Herod began his Temple from the very Foundation) yet do the Scriptures, and all Jewiſh Writers ſo unanimouſly and generally own them but for one Temple, calling it the Second Temple all the time there was a Temple after its firſt building under Cyrus, that it would be but needleſs labour and unwarrantable curioſity to take up any other notion or diſtinction of it. For though the Temple built by Zorobabel were pulled down to the very ground by Herod, when he built that Fabrick that ſtood to the laſt fate of Jeruſalem, yet ſince that demolition was not by deſtruction deſtruction and ruine, but for reparation and for its bettering, there is no reaſon to reckon theſe as two ſeveral Temples, but as one Temple firſt built and then repaired to a more excellent and glorious condition.

From the firſt year of Cyrus (in which he Proclaimed Redemption to the Captives, and gave Commandment to reſtore and build Jeruſalem) to the death of Chriſt, were four hundred and ninety years, as they be ſummed by an Angel, Dan. IX. and from the death of Chriſt to the fatal and final deſtruction of Jeruſalem were forty years more, five hundred and thirty years in all. In all which time it were endleſs to ſhew every particular occurrence, and change of condition that befel the Temple, and it would require a large Story and Volume: I ſhall therefore only touch upon the chiefeſt, diſtributing the times into thoſe ſeveral and remarkable periods that they fell into, and applying the Stories to the times accordingly.

The firſt parcel of this time was taken up by the Perſian Monarchy, which how long it continued, and for how many Kings Succeſſion, is a thing of as diſputable and controverted a nature, as any one thing in Chronology: I will keep to the number and names of the Kings of that Throne that we find in Scripture.

In Dan. XI. 2. there are theſe words, Behold there ſhall ſtand up yet three Kings in Perſia, and the fourth ſhall be far richer than they all: and by his ſtrength through his riches he ſhall ſtir up all againſt the Realm of Grecia. And a mighty King ſhall ſtand up, &c. And when he ſhall ſtand up his Kingdom ſhall be broken, and ſhall be divided toward the four Winds of Heaven, and not to his poſterity, &c. It is obſervable concerning this Propheſie and account about the Perſian Monarchy.

1. That this was told Daniel in the third year of Cyrus, Chap. X. 1. and ſo when he ſaith, There ſhall ſtand up yet three Kings, and the fourth, &c. he meaneth four beſides Cyrus, the firſt beginner of the Kingdom; and therefore ſome of the Jews do make but a croſs reckoning upon this place, who will have Cyrus which was the firſt, to be meant by this that is called the fourth.

2. The Propheſie ſpeaketh of the length of the Perſian Monarchy, till it brings it up to Alexander the Great, the deſtroyer of that Monarchy, of whom it ſpeaketh plainly, verſ. 3, 4. and of his Succeſſors afterwards, verſ. 5, &c.

3. There were therefore, by the account of the Angel here, but five Kings of Perſia, namely, Cyrus, and four more.

4. Theſe four are thus named in the Scripture, 1. Ahaſhueroſh, Ezra IV. 6. 2. Darius, Ezra IV. 24. & VI. 1. &c. 3. Artaxerxes, Ezra VI. 14. 4. Darius, Neh. XII. 22. To which may be added for the confirmation of this account,

5. That Nehemiah lived quite through the whole length of the Perſian Monarchy, being at Mans eſtate the firſt year of it, Ezra II. 2. and ſeeing Darius its laſt King, and probably his laſt times, Nehem. XII. 12. Nay Ezra who was born either before or in the firſt year of the Babylonian Monarchy, yet liveth near the expiration of the Perſian: by which it is eaſie to conclude how far the Heathen Hiſtories are out, who reckon fourteen Kings ſucceſſively in the Perſian Throne, and two hundred years of their rule, before its fall.

In the firſt year of Cyrus, the returned Captives out of Babel only built an Altar, and ſacrificed thereon for ſeven months together, having yet no Temple: but in this ſecond year, the ſecond month of that year they lay the foundation of the Houſe, Ezra 3. 8, &c. the progreſs of which work is ſoon oppoſed, and indeavoured to be made fruſtrate by the Samaritans all the time of Cyrus, Ezra IV. 5. but in his time they prevailed not.

In his third year Artaxerxes cometh to the Kingdom, who is alſo called Ahaſhueroſh, Ezra IV. 6, 7. he is perſwaded by evil Counſellors to interdict and prohibit the Temple building, and ſo it lay intermitted all his time, Dan. X. 1, 2, 3. Ezra IV. 23, 24.

Darius ſucceeded him, called alſo Artaxerxes, Ezra VI. 1. & VII. 1. &c. In his ſecond year the building goes on again, and is finiſhed in his ſixth, Hag. I. Ezra VI. 14. And thus had the Temple lien waſte and deſolate juſt ſeventy years, from the nineteenth of Nebuchadnezzar, in which year it was fired, to the ſecond of Darius, when it began to be wrought upon ſo as that it came to perfection, Zech. I. 12. & IV. 3, 5.

In the ſeventh year of this Darius, which was the year after the Temple was finiſhed, Ezra cometh up, Ezra VII. 8. and thirteen years after, namely, in the twentieth year of this Darius (called alſo Artaxerxes) Nehemiah cometh up to Jeruſalem, Neh. I. 1. and both help to repair, ſettle and rectifie, Temple, City, and People, as their Story is at large in their own Books.

In the two and thirtieth year of this Darius, Nehemiah having finiſhed what he had to do, about the building, beautifying, and ſettling of City, Temple and People, he he returneth again unto the King, Neh. XIII. 6. and here ends Daniels firſt parcel of his ſeventy weeks, namely, ſeven weeks, in which Street and Wall ſhould be built, and that in troublous times, Dan. IX. 25. By ſeven weeks he meaneth ſeven times ſeven years, which amounts to nine and forty: and ſo there were hitherto 3 namely, three of Cyrus, fourteen of Ahaſhueroſh, and thirty two of Darius.

After Darius there reigned Artaxerxes, commonly known in Heathen Stories by the name of Xerxes, the invader of Greece with his huge Army, &c. He was a favourer of the Jews at the leaſt for a while, as it appeareth by that paſſage, in Ezra VI. 14. They builded and finiſhed according to the Commandment of the Lord, and according to the Commandment of Cyrus, and Darius, and Artaxerxes: where this Artaxerxes is ſet in parallel equipage with Cyrus and Darius for favouring the Temple: It is true indeed the work was finiſhed in the time of Darius, as to the very building of the Houſe, yet were the buildings about it ſtill coming on and encreaſing, and this Xerxes did favour the work as well as thoſe Princes had done before him.

Yet did there an unhappy occurrence befal in this Kings time in the Temple it ſelf, which if it did not alienate and change his affection from well-willing to it, yet did it prejudice the Temple in the affection of him that was chief Commander under this King in thoſe parts, whoſe name was Bagoſes: The occaſion was this, a Jochanan who was then High Prieſt, upon ſome diſpleaſure againſt his own Brother Jeſus, did fall upon him and ſlay him in the very Temple: Bagoſes favoured this Jeſus, and intended to have made him High Prieſt, and it is like that Jochanan ſmelt the deſign, and out of jealouſie of ſuch a thing, thought to prevent it by his Brothers diſpatch: whatſoever was the cauſe of this his murder, the fruit of it was this: that Bagoſes violently preſſeth into the Temple, which he might not have done, and layeth a mulct upon the People, namely, forty Drachmes upon every Lamb that was to be Sacrificed: Ezra and Nehemiah were both now alive, and do but imagine how their piety would digeſt a thing ſo impious.

a Joſeph. Ant. lib. 11. cap. 7.

The next in the Throne after this Artaxerxes mentioned in Scripture, was Darius, Nehem. XII. 22. the Man with whom the Empire fell under the victorious Sword of Alexander the Great. In his time another occaſion from another Brother of an High Prieſt occurreth, which accrewed not a little to the prejudice of the Temple and Nation; and that was this, b Manaſſeh one of the ſons of Joiada the ſon of Eliaſhib the High Prieſt, had married Nicaſſo the Daughter of Sanballat, for which being driven from the Altar and Prieſthood, he betaketh himſelf to his Father-in-law to Samaria; and they betwixt them obtain a Commiſſion from Darius, and get it confirmed alſo by Alexander the Great, to build a Temple upon Mount Gerizim, John IV. 20. which being built in affront to the Temple of Jeruſalem, it proved no ſmall diſadvantage to it, and the Service there: for it not only cauſed a faction and defection in the Nation, but alſo it became the common refuge and ſhelter of all lawleſs and irregular deſpiſers of diſcipline and Government.

b ibid. cap. 8. Neh. XIII. 28.

In this Darius was the end of the Perſian State and Kingdom, having continued for the ſucceſſion of theſe Kings, but whether any more, and how many preciſe years is not eaſily determinable; what times went over the Temple in their Reigns beſides what is mentioned here, may be obſerved in the Books of Nehemiah, Ezra, Haggai, Zechary, and Malachi.

SECT. II.

The occurrences of the Temple under Alexander.

a ALEXANDER the Great, the Conqueror of Darius and overthrower of the Perſian Kingdom, did in his own Perſon viſit Jeruſalem and the Temple, coming towards it like a Lion, but he came into it like a Lamb. He had taken indignation at Jaddua the High Prieſt, Nehem. XII. 22. becauſe he denyed him aſſiſtance at the Siege of Tyrus (for Jaddua had ſworn fealty to Darius.) Hereupon he cometh up towards Jeruſalem breathing fire and fury againſt it, till he came within the ſight of the City: There he was met by Jaddua in the High Prieſts garments, and by all the Prieſts in their veſtments, and the People in white: whom when he came near, in ſtead of offering them violence, he ſhewed reverence to the High Prieſt and courteouſly ſaluted all the People.

a Joſ. Ant. ſup.

When his Commanders wondred at ſuch a change, he told them that in a dream in Macedon, he ſaw one in the very ſame Attire that the High Prieſt was in, who encouraged him to invade the Perſian Empire, and promiſed to lead his Army and to make him victorious. So he goeth with them into the City, offereth at the Temple, is ſhewed Daniels Propheſie concerning himſelf, granteth favourable priviledges to the Jews about their Religion, and ſo departeth.

b Vid. Juch. fol. 15.

b It is held by ſome of the Jews, that in the very year that Alexander came to Jeruſalem, Ezra, Haggai, Zechary and Malachi died, and the Spirit of Propheſie departed from Iſrael; which if we follow the computation of Heathen Stories is a thing of utter improbability, they prolong the Perſian Monarchy to ſo large a time; but if we follow the account of Scripture, it makes the improbability a great deal leſs, as might be ſhewed if we were following the purſuit of Chronology: And if it be queſtioned how it ſhould be poſſible, that all Heathen Stories that handle the ſucceſſion of the Perſian Kings, ſhould be ſo far wide as to double, nay, almoſt to treble the number of the Kings more than they were, theſe three things may be produced as thoſe that either ſeverally, or rather jointly might be the reaſons of ſuch a miſtake.

1. Becauſe every one of the Perſian Kings had a double, nay, ſome a treble name, and this multiplicity of Names might deceive the heedleſs Hiſtorian into an aſſertion of numerouſneſs of Perſons.

2. The Perſian Kingdom was a double Kingdom, Media and Perſia, the two Arms and Shoulders in Dan. II. now the King of Perſia and the Viceroy of Media might be likewiſe miſconceived in after-times for two differing Perſian Monarchs.

3. It was the manner of the Perſian Kings when they went into the Wars, to create a King to rule at home while they were abſent, and this might cauſe the accounting of ſo many Kings and of ſo long a time. And ſo Herodotus beareth witneſs, that c Δεῖ μὲν ἀποδείξαντα βασιλῆα καὶ τὸν Περσέων νόμιον οὕτω στρατεύεσθαι; when the King went to War, it was the Law of the Perſians that he ſhould appoint a King and ſo go his way on his expedition. And this cuſtom was that that made Cyrus his third year to be accounted for Artaxerxes his firſt, though Cyrus was yet alive, becauſe he left him King at home whileſt he himſelf went to Wars abroad.

c Herod. Polymn. vel lib. 7.

Alexander dying in the flower of his Age and Victories, his large Dominions obtained ſo ſuddainly by the Sword, were divided as ſuddainly again, in a manner by the Sword, amongſt four of his chief Commanders, according as was Propheſied, Dan. VIII. 8. & XI. 4. Two of them were Seleucus Nicanor, who obtained Syria, and Ptolomy Lagus, who obtained Egypt, whoſe families (the Houſe of the North and the Houſe of the South, Dan. XI.) being ill Neigbours one to another, did both of them prove ill Neighbours to Judea, and through and under them the People and Temple did undergo divers varieties of fortune, but moſt commonly the worſt.

The Kings of theſe Countries are reckoned theſe.

SECT.

SECT. III.

A Brief of the ſtate of the Temple in the times of theſe Kings.

IF we were to write a Story of the City and People, as we are of the Temple, here were a very large field before us, for exceeding much of the Story of Jeruſalem and Judea hath to do with the Story of theſe Kings: but ſince our confinement is to the Temple only, we ſhall make a ſhorter cut, becauſe the peculiar relations that we find about that, are but few in compariſon of the general Story of the City and Nation.

a Seleucus Nicanor, (or Nicator as ſome do call him) the firſt of theſe Kings of Syria, was a great favourer of the Jewiſh Nation, for he infranchiſed them in his Syrian Cities, yea even in Antioch the Metropolis it ſelf: and b he beſtowed benevolences upon the Temple, to an exceeding liberal and magnificent value.

But Ptolomy Lagus King of Egypt his contemporary, was as bitter to the Nation as he was favourable: He having his Army in the Country, took advantage one Sabbath day of the Jews ſtrict reſting on that day, and pretending to come into the City to Sacrifice, he ſurprized the City, and it is like the Temple ſped but indifferently with him, and he carried exceeding many thouſands away Captive.

c His ſon and ſucceſſor Ptolomy Philadelphus was again as favourable to the Nation, as he had been miſchievous: He ſent for the Seventy Elders to Tranſlate the Bible, and ſent exceeding great munificence to the Temple, which we have had ſome cauſe to ſpeak of before.

In the time of Ptolomy Euergetes the ſucceſſor of Philadelphus, the covetize of Onias the High Prieſt, had provoked the diſpleaſure of that King, and was like to have brought miſchief upon the place and people, but that it was wiſely appeaſed by Joſeph Onias his ſiſters ſon.

From the time that Ptolomy Lagus had ſo baſely ſurprized Jeruſalem, it was under homage to the Crown of Egypt, till Antiochus the Great releaſed it, or changed it rather into ſubjection to Syria; whether it were of his goodneſs and devotion, or whether rather out of his policy to make ſure the Jews to him d in the great Wars that he had, eſpecially with the Romans, he beſtowed many favours upon the People, and liberal Donations and Priviledges upon the Temple: And particularly this Edict in its behalf, That no ſtranger ſhould come into the virge of the Temple prohibited; which it may be firſt occaſioned thoſe Inſcriptions upon the Pillars at the entrance into the Chel that we have ſpoken of, that no ſtranger ſhould come there upon pain of death.

After him ſucceeded Antiochus Epiphanes (ſave only that Seleucus Philopater reigned twelve years between) a Man or a Monſter ſhall I call him? Of whom and of whoſe curſed actings are thoſe Propheſies, in Dan. VII. 21, 25. & VIII. 10, 11, 12, 24, 25. & 11. 28, &c. & 12. 1, &c. and Ezek. XXXVIII. & XXXIX. and who performed according to thoſe predictions to the utmoſt of wickedneſs.

He began his Reign by the account of the Book of the Maccabees in the one hundred thirty and ſeventh year of the Reign of the Seleucian family, 1 Mac. I. 10. And in the one hundred forty and third year, as both that Book and e Joſephus reckon, he came up to Jeruſalem, being invited thither by a wrethed faction of Onias, who was alſo called Menelaus the High Prieſt, and he taketh the City by their means, and ſlew many of the contrary party, and took away many of the Holy things and much ſpoil, and ſo returned to Antioch. This was the beginning of thoſe two thouſand and three hundred days mentioned in Dan. VIII. 13, 14. or the days of deſolation, when the Hoſt and the Sanctuary were both trodden under Foot. Two years and ſome months after, namely, in the year one hundred and forty five he cometh up again, and under colour of peaceableneſs obtaining entrance, he ſacketh Jeruſalem, plundreth the Temple, fireth the faireſt buildings of the City, pulls down the Walls, ſlayeth even ſome of thoſe that had invited him, taketh many thouſands priſoners, and ſetteth a Syrian Garriſon for a curb to the City and Temple. Here was the beginning of thoſe one thouſand two hundred and ninety days mentioned, Dan. XII. 11. The time that the dayly Sacrifice was taken away, and the abomination of deſolation was ſet up; which ſpace is called a time, times and half a time: which was three years and an half, and ſome twelve or thirteen days.

The miſchief that this Tyrant and Perſecutor wrought to the Temple, Nation and Religion is not expreſſible: how he forbad Circumciſion, aboliſhed Religion, burnt the Books of the Law, perſecuted the Truth, murdred thoſe that profeſſed it, and defiled the Sanctuary with all manner of abomination, inſomuch that the Holy Ghoſt hath ſet this character upon thoſe ſad times, that that was a time of trouble, ſuch as was not ſince they were a Nation even to that ſame time, Dan. XII. 1. And here began the Story and Glory of

f 1 Mac. II. 70. f but died in the next year, namely one hundred and forty sixth of the Seleucian Kingdom.
Judas Maccabeus succeeds him in his zeal and command, and prevaileth so gallantly against the Commanders appointed by the Tyrant, Apollonius Seron Gorgias and Lysias, that in the year one hundred forty eight he and his people return and purifie the Temple, erect a new Altar, restore the Service, and keep the Feast of Dedication for eight days, and ordain it for an annual solemnity, And from thence even till now (saith Josephus) we keep that Feast and call it φῶτα (Candlemas, if I may so English it) naming the Feast as I think from this, because such a restauration shone upon us unexpected. There is mention of this Feast, and it was honoured with Christs presence, Joh. X. 22. and what was the manner of its solemnity, especially by lighting abundance of Candles at it, I have shewed in another place.

Both Josephus and the Book of Maccabeus make it but exactly three years between the time of Antiochus his defiling of the Altar, with abomination, and Maccabeus his restoring and purifying it again: g Only the one of them saith, its defiling began on the 15 day
g 1 Mac. I. 54. Jos. ubi sup. of the month Cisleu in the one hundred forty and fifth year of the Seleucian Kingdom; and the other saith, it began on the five and twentieth day of the same month in the same year; but both agree that it was purified on the five and twentieth day of the same month, in the year one hundred forty and eight, which teacheth us how to distinguish upon that passage of Daniel forementioned, in Chap. XII. 11. namely, that the time the daily Sacrifice was taken away, was one thousand two hundred and ninety days, or three years and an half and some few days over; but the time that the abomination that maketh desolate was set up, that is, Idols in the Temple, and an Idol Altar upon the Lords Altar, was but three years.

Antiochus died in Persia, within forty five days after the restoring of the Temple, as Dan. XII. 12. seemeth to intimate, when it pronounceth him blessed that cometh to one thousand three hundred thirty and five days, for then he should see the Tyrants death.
h Id. ibid. cap. 15. h His son Antiochus Eupator who succeeded him, was invited into Judea by some Apostate Jews to come to curb Judas Maccabeus, who was besieging the Syrian Garrison that was in Jerusalem: He cometh with a mighty power, forceth Judas into the Temple, and there besiegeth him: But being straitned for provisions, and hearing of stirrings in his own Kingdom, he offereth the besieged honourable conditions, upon which they surrender. But he entring and seeing the strength of the place, and suspecting it might be troublesom to him again, he breaketh his Articles and his Oath, and putteth down the Wall that incompassed the holy ground down to the ground. And thus poor Judas and the Temple are in a worse condition than before, for the Antiochian Garrison in Jerusalem that was ready upon all occasions to annoy it, is not only not removed, but now is the Temple laid naked to their will and fury.

i Ibid. i This Antiochus put Menelaus the High Priest to death (and he rewarded him but justly for calling the Tyrant this Mans Father in) and he made Alcimus High Priest in his stead, one that was not of the High Priests line at all: which made Onias who was next to the High Priesthood indeed, to flee into Egypt, and there by the favour Ptolomy Philometor, he built a Temple parallel to that at Jerusalem: And thus hath Jerusalem Temple two corrivals, a Temple on Mount Gerizim in Samaria on the North, and a Temple in Egypt on the South. Of this Temple built by Onias in Egypt the Talmudical Writers k Succah. per. 5. do make frequent and renowned mention. They speak in the Treatise k Succah, of a great Synagogue or Sanhedrin here in the time of Alexander the Great, in which they say there were seventy golden Chairs, and a Congregation belonging to it of double the number of Israelites that came out of Egypt: And that Alexander destroyed them, to bring upon them the curse denounced by Jeremy against their going down into Egypt, Jer. XLIV. and the curse due to them for the violation of the command, Ye shall return thither (to Egypt) no more.

l Jos. Ant. lib 13 cap. 6. Juchas. fol. 14. l Yet would Onias venture to build a Temple here again, and that the rather, building upon that Prophesie, Esay XIX. 19. There shall be an Altar to the Lord in the Land of Egypt, &c. Upon which passage take the Gloss of R. Solomon: m We learn in Sedar Olam, that after the fall of Sennacherib, Ezekiah stood up, and let go all the multitudes, that he had brought with him from Egypt and Cush, and they took upon them the Kingdom of Heaven, and they returned to their own place, as it is said, In that day there shall be five Cities in the Land of Egypt, &c. They went and built an Altar to the Lord in the Land of Egypt, and offered upon it an offering to God to fulfill what was spoken, In that day there shall be an Altar to the Lord in the Land of Egypt, &c. But some of our Doctors in the Treatise Menacoth, do understand it of the Altar of the Temple of Onias the Son of Simeon the Just, who fled to Egypt and built there an Altar.
m R. Sol. in Esay XIX.

In the last Chapter of the Treatise Menacoth, the tract which our Rabbin citeth, the Talmudists have speech concerning this Temple of Onias, and particularly these passages;

n A man ſaith, Behold I undertake to offer a burnt-offering, he muſt offer it at the Sanctuary, and if he offer it at the Temple of Onias he is not diſcharged. If he ſay, I undertake for an offering in the Temple of Onias, he is to offer it at the Sanctuary, but if he offer it at the Temple of Onias he is diſcharged. If he ſay, I undertake to be a Nazarite, he is to poll his Head at the Sanctuary, and if he poll it at the Temple of Onias he is not diſcharged: But if he ſay, I will poll at the Temple of Onias, let him poll at the Sanctuary, yet if he do poll at the Temple of Onias he is quit: The Prieſts that ſerve at the Temple of Onias, ſhall not ſerve at the Sanctuary at Jeruſalem: So that it appeareth that there were Sacrifices offered and other Temple-rites uſed in this Temple in Egypt as were in the Temple at Jeruſalem, o and it ſo ſtood in great glory two hundred years according to the opinion of Rambam: But it ſeems (they are the words of Juchaſin) that it ſtood all the time of the Sanctuary: for Joſhuah the ſon of Perahiah fled thither, and ſo in the time of Hillel: and they were obedient to the wiſe Men of Jeruſalem and brought offerings, and ſo they brought their Wives eſpouſal writings to Hillel (for they ſaid they were baſtards) and he allowed them: And there was there a great Congregation double to the number that came out of Egypt, till after the deſtruction of the ſecond Temple, when Adrian the Emperor came up againſt them and ſlew them all at the time of the deſtruction of Bitter: Think of this great plantation of Jews in Egypt when ye read Matth. II. 13, 14.

o Juchaſ. ubi ſupra.

But let us return from this Temple in Egypt to the Temple at Jeruſalem where our buſineſs lies. Alcimus the High Prieſt (whoſe illegal induction to that Office, had occaſioned this Act of Onias) as he was the Creature of the Antiochian family, ſo was he ſerviceable to it to his utmoſt, even to the miſchief of that Religion and People, in and among which he took on him the High Prieſthood: He aſſiſts Demetrius (though he had ſlain Antiochus who had ſo favoured him) in the invaſion of Judea, and attempteth to pull down the Wall of the inner Court of the Sanctuary: but is ſuddainly ſtruck with a Divine ſtroke from Heaven, and ſo dieth.

p 1 Mac. IX. Joſ. Ant. lib. 12 cap. 17.

Nicanor a Commander of this Demetrius forced Judas Maccabeus to betake himſelf to a Garriſon in Jeruſalem: and he himſelf going up into the Temple, and there intertained fawningly by the Prieſts, who clawed him by ſhewing him the Sacrifices which they ſaid they offered for his Lord the King, he taunted them, and threatned miſchief to the place if Judas were not delivered to him: but ere long the proud boaſter and threatner was overthrown and ſlain.

Jonathan the Brother, and Succeſſor of Judas Maccabeus in his command, proved to be ſo in favour with Alexander the Succeſſor of Demetrius, and Demetrius again the Succeſſor of Alexander, and Antiochus that ſucceeded him, that though there were now and then ſome ſtirrings among them, yet the Temple, which is our ſcene that we are upon, did ſuffer little alteration or prejudice all his time; no more did it in the times of Simon his Brother and Succeſſor: nay, he in his firſt year, obtains the peoples liberties, diſmantles the Antiochian Garriſon in Jeruſalem, purifies the place, and appoints that day for a yearly rejoycing, and reſtores the Land to intire peace and proſperity.

Hyrcanus the Son and Succeſſor of Simon being ſtraitly beſieged in Jeruſalem by Antiochus; at the Feaſt of Tabernacles, deſires a ceſſation for the time and ſolemnity of the Feaſt: which he not only obtaineth, but many and coſtly Sacrifices alſo from Antiochus: which nobleneſs cauſeth Hyrcanus to ſeek for an agreement, and ſo the Siege is raiſed: He is reported to have heard a voice in the Temple whileſt he was offering Incenſe there, which told of the victory of his Sons who were then in battel with Antiochus Cyzicenus, and when he came out he told ſo much to the people. Joſephus ſticks not to ſtyle him a King, Prieſt and Prophet: or at leaſt he ſpeaketh but little ſhort of ſo much, when he ſaith, q that God vouchſafed him the three greateſt honours, the rule of the Nation, the honour of the High Prieſthood, and Propheſie. He caſt off the Syrian yoke and homage.

q Id. ib. lib. 13 cap. 18.

Alexander his Son proves an unhappy ſcourge to his own Nation, ſo much ſcorned and deſpiſed by them, that at the Feaſt of Tabernacles they pelted him with their Pomecitrons, whereupon he ſlays ſix thouſand of them, and troubles the Land with a ſix years civil War. He railed in the Court of the Prieſts, that none but the Prieſts might come in there for fear of the peoples diſturbance.

Ariſtobulus and Hyrcanus the Sons of this Alexander quarrel about the rule, and call in forrain aid, as firſt Aretas King of Arabia, who beſiegeth Ariſtobulus in the Temple: and then Pompey who cometh in, taketh the City, and Temple, bringeth the Nation under the Roman yoke, from under which it never delivered its neck, till City and Temple by that power was raked up in aſhes.

SECT. IV.

The ſtate of the Temple under the Romans.

SO ſad were the beginnings of the Temple under the Roman Power, that an Omen might have been taken from them, what would become of it, ere this Nation had done with it. Pompey coming up to Jeruſalem had the Gates ſhut againſt him, ſo that he preſently begirt it with a Siege: a But the taking of the City coſt him not much labour (ſaith Dion Caſſius) for he was let in by the party of Hyrcanus: But the Temple which Ariſtobulus party had poſſeſſed, coſt him ſome work. It was ſeated on a high pitch, and fenced with a Wall of its own. And if the defendants had guarded it all days alike, it had not been taken: but they intermitting to ſtand upon their defence on Saturdays (being their Sabbath) on which days they do no work, the Romans had opportunity on that day to batter the Wall. And when they had diſcovered this cuſtom of the beſieged, they did no great matter all the week long, till Saturday came again, and then they ſet upon them again; and ſo at the laſt the Jews not reſiſting were ſuprized and ſubdued. Great ſlaughter was made upon the Romans entrance, to the number of twelve thouſand Jews, as b Joſephus reckoneth; and yet even whileſt the Conqueror was killing as faſt as he could, the Prieſts at the Altar went on in the Service as inſenſibly and fearleſly, by the ſame Authors relation, as if there had been no ſuch danger and deſtruction at all, till the ſword came to their own ſides: Pompey being thus victor, he and divers other with him, went into the Temple, even into the moſt Holy place, and ſaw all its glory and riches, and yet was ſparing of offering any violence to it, but cauſed the place to be purged and the Service to be ſet a foot again.

b *Joſ. Ant. l.*14 *c.*8.

But what Pompey had ſpared, Craſſus ere long ſeized upon, plundering the Temple of exceeding much wealth, as he went on his expedition into Parthia. c That Parthian War was undertaken by him, as Dion tells us, more upon his covetouſneſs than upon any other warrantable or honourable ground, and he ſped accordingly, coming to a miſerable end anſwerable to ſuch principles and beginnings.

c Id. ibid. c. 22

In the beginning of the reign of Herod (which was not very long after) the City and Temple was again beſieged and taken by him and Soſius, and the Temple in danger again to be rifled, but prevented by Herod as much as he could: and now Antigonus the ſon of Ariſtobulus the laſt of Aſmonean Rulers is cut off by Antony.

Herod in the eighteenth year of his Reign, beginneth to repair the Temple, taking it down to the very foundations, and raiſing it again in larger dimenſions than it had been of before, and in that form and ſtructure that hath been obſerved and ſurveyed in the foregoing diſcourſe.

About ſome nine or ten years after the finiſhing of it, the Lord came to his own Temple, even the Meſſenger of the Covenant whom they deſired, Mal. III. 1. being preſented there by his Mother at forty days old, and owned by Simeon and Anna, Luke II. Twelve years after that, he is at the Temple again, ſet among the Doctors of one of the Sanhedrins, either in one of their Conſiſtories or in their Midraſh, and ſheweth his Divine Wiſdom to admiration: It is needleſs to ſpeak of the occurrences that befel in the Temple, about Chriſt and his Apoſtles, as his being on a Pinnacle of it in his temptations, his whipping out buyers and ſellers at his firſt and laſt Paſsover, his conſtant frequenting the place whenſoever he was at Jeruſalem, and his foretelling the deſtruction of it as he ſat upon Mount Olivet in the face of it, a little before his death: The Apoſtles reſorting thither to the Publick Service, and to take opportunity of Preaching in the concourſe there, their healing a Creeple there, and converting thouſands: Pauls apprehenſion there upon miſpriſion of his defiling it by bringing in of Gentiles, and other particulars which are at large related by the Evangeliſts, that it is but unneceſſary labour to inſiſt upon them, ſince any Reader may fetch them thence.

As for the paſſages there, that are not mentioned in the Scripture, but by Joſephus and others, as Pilates imbezelling the holy Treaſures of the Temple upon an Aquæduct, Petronius his going about to bring in Caligula's Image thither, a Tumult cauſed there by the baſe irreverence of a Roman Souldier, Agrippa's Sacrifices there, and Anathemata, Vitellius his favour to it and the people, a baſe affront and abuſe put upon the place by the Samaritanes, the horrid confuſions there in the time of the ſeditious, the ſlaughter of one Zacharias in it, and at the laſt the firing of it by the Romans, and the utter ruine of it and the City, they would require a larger Diſcourſe, than one Chapter or Paragraph will afford: It may be they will come to be proſecuted to the full in another Treatiſe, and therefore I ſhall but only name them here.

READER,

THE use and advantage of Indexes (or Alphabetical Tables) to large and Elaborate Volumes, is great, even in the Judgment of the most Learned and Industrious; among which number, One that speaks the meanest, says, That an Index is the Bag and Baggage of a Book, of more use than honour, even to such as seemingly slight it, secretly using it, if not for need, yet for speed of what they desire to find. --- The following Indexes, besides the common advantage and use of other Indexes,

1. Shew, where to find such Texts of Scripture, Hebrew and Greek words, as also such principal Matters or Things, as are not to be found by the Authors Titles, Chapters, Verses, &c. For as to Scriptures explained, It may be there is neither Chapter nor Verse, or but one of them, or not the words so explained, all which are supplied and made perfect in the Scriptural Index.

2. They put together such Scriptures, Words, and principal Matters or Things, as are explained or discoursed on in differing and far distant Places, so that at once all thats said to any one Place, Word, or Subject may be seen. This also every where presents the Reader with a Scheme or Body of Matter, Notions, or Explications, upon the same Topick put together; as in Antichrist, Apostles, Baptism, Christ, History, Kingdom of Heaven, Passover, Pentecost, Priest, Sabbath, Sanhedrim, Synagogue, Temple, &c.

3. These are much sooner read than the two Great Volumes; where the Reader may meet (as is in part intimated) with all the JEWISH Customs, Rites, Affairs, or History, &c. also with all the Chief Matters, concerning Christ, the Gospel, the Apostles, and the first Gospel Age and Church; And how great a help is this to them that have but little time, and cannot read the whole, much less put things of the same kind, which lie remote, altogether? Which was peremtorily necessary in order to knowledge, there being no Works or Writings in the World of the same kind beyond these for illustrating the Scriptures by Jewish Learning. Thus much for the Indexes.

Reader, I must further tell thee, That though this Learned Author seems several times to have the same Things over again, yet I think it is almost always with some improvement by adding new Matter.

I must also desire thee to correct the Errors of the Press, especially those that refer to the right Numbring of the Pages, which will be of high advantage and use referring both to the Book and the Indexes: Remembring that wherever a Star or Asterisk follows any Quotation, or Head in these Indexes, it shews it is to be sought for in the Postscript of the Temple, at the later end of the First Volume.

Apostles, were ordained by Christ in a Mount near Capernaum, to found, and carry on the Gospel Church. p. 223. Their number; three Ends of their appointment. ibid. After they were ordained, they remained about a year with Christ as Probationers, to see his Works, and learn his Doctrin. p. 223, 233. Apostles, one of the Titles of the Gospel Ministers. ibid. They had the Spirit given them to heal Diseases and cast out Devils, some considerable time before they had it given them with commission to preach the Gospel. p. 234. Why they were sent out unfurnished as to mony, &c. ibid. Upon Christs appearing to them at Supper after his Resurrection, they receive the Holy Ghost, to give them a power of Life and Death, distinct from what they had yet received, or were to receive on the day of Pentecost. p. 271. Then they receive a Commission to go to all Nations, whereas before they were confined to the Jews. p. 272. They were again filled with the Holy Ghost, so that now they had a power to bestow the same upon others. p. 277, 278. This power belonged only to the Apostles; which they gave only to such as were to be Ministers and Preachers of the Gospel, p. 281. Some of the Apostles were Ministers of the Circumcision, and others of the Uncircumcision, having Agents under them to carry on that work, and to shew their agreement and harmony therein p. 329, To three of them (viz. Peter, James and John) Christ did shew himself in his greatest Power, Glory and Combat above any of the others, the reasons why. p. 635. The Apostles could not ordain Apostles, as they did other Men, by laying on of Hands, but by Lot, which was an immediate Hand of Christ. p. 745. Apostles were an Order for ever unimitable in the Church, and so not Predecessors to, or Patterns of Bishops, as the Popish Writers plead. 787, 789

BALAAM, curseth Israels first and last enemy; he went to his place, signifies he went to Hell. Page 37

Baptism; It was used in the days of Jacob. p. 18. It was the way to admit Heathens into the Religion of the Jews; and by it John admitted the Jews into another Religion than their own, viz. the Gospel Religion. p. 208, 210, 408. Many Generations before the times of Christ or the Baptist, this was used for the admission of Proselytes into the Church, both Men, Women and Children. p. 209, 210, 450, 525, 526. 527. proved out of Jewish Writers. This shews why there is so little reason given in the New Testament for the Baptism of Infants, because it was so ordinary in the Jewish Church before Christs time. p. 210, 525, 526, 527. proved out of Jewish Writers. When the Sanhedrim send some Pharisees to question John about the authority by which he baptised, they say not a word of Baptism it self, that being no strange thing, but of long use amongst them. p. 212. Whether it may be administred by private men? p. 217. Whether inconsistent with Preaching? Paul saying, I came not to baptize, but to preach. p. 217. There was three forms of Baptism, — Of John who baptized in the Name of the Messias then ready to come, he not knowing for most of his course that Jesus of Nazareth was he. p. 276. — Of the Disciples who baptized into the Name of Jesus, such as believed Jesus of Nazareth to be the Messias. p. 277. — Of the Disciples again, among the Heathen, who baptized them in the Name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, because there was no controversie about Jesus of Nazareth being the Messias among them. p. 277. Believing gave admission to whole Households unto baptism. p. 294. Baptism not to be administred twice; none were rebaptized. p. 298, 299. Baptism was made a Badge or Mark of safety from that approaching vengeance that was a coming on the Jews and Jerusalem, both by the Baptist and Peter. p. 339. The difference of Baptism under the Law and under the Gospel. p. 455. Confession of sins was after, not before Baptism. p. 457. It was vastly differing from Circumcision, yet succeeded it, with the reasons of both. p. 465, &c.

It was practised among the Jews, even from the first use of Circumcision; proved from Scripture and Jewish Writers, p. 465. 466. 526, 527. The Baptism of John, and that since used in the Christian Church, were not differing at all, except in the form of words. p. 467. Baptizing with the Holy Ghost, what? p. 467, 468. Why Christ, who needed no cleansing, being purity it self, would be baptized; eight reasons. p. 472. Why John refused to admit Christ to baptism. p. 472. Whether Women were baptized by John; answered affirmatively. p. 476. So Jacob admitted Females into the Church by Baptism. p. 465, 466. The time when Christ was baptized. p. 476, 477, 478. the place where, and manner how. 478. As soon as any were baptized, they used to come out of the water and pray. p. 479. The Baptism of John tended to the manifesting of Christ, two ways especially. p. 530. Baptism is expressed by being born of water. p. p. 571, 572. Why Christ did not baptize. p. 581. The Apostles were baptized by John the Baptist, not by Jesus; so that his Baptism and theirs were the same. p. 581. What the manner of the baptizing of the Jews was before John Baptist came. p. 583, 584. How far the Baptist did imitate the Jews in their manner of baptizing. p. 584. Dipping in Baptism, not always practised in the beginning of the Gospel. p. 584, 585. The term Baptism is used to denote sharp sufferings, yea Death it self. 250

Barchochebas, and Cochebas, the same with Ben Coziba; he called himself the Messias, coyned mony with his own stamp; tortured the Christians to make them deny Christ; was at the Head of a most desperate Rebellion; and reigned two years and an half. 366,367

History, is put by it self, so is Prophesie in the Scriptures, in Chapters, as well as Books, notwithstanding they were not so delivered. p. 121, 134. History distant in time and place laid together. As the mentioning of the Institution of the Sabbath. p. 3, 220, 608. The Death of Noah. p. 9. Esaus going to Ismael before Jacob's Vision at Bethel. p. 16. Jethros History is Anticipated. p. 27. Moses brings in his own Exclusion out of Canaan thirty eight years before it was. p. 38. Aaron is said to dye forty years before he did. p. 38. Taking of Laish is mentioned by Anticipation before it was. p. 41. Thus Historical Accounts of time differ in Scripture, and yet upon good reasons. p. 43. Luke lays down Johns Imprisonment before Christs Baptism by Anticipation, that Johns story might come altogether. p. 214. Luke misseth a year in Christs ministerial History. p. 215. Differing Histories, said to be at that time, or in those days, do not always center in the same point, but sometimes have a Transition betwixt of such things as were at a good distance of time asunder. p. 222. Several Writers of Scriptures differ in telling the same Story, as Matthew speaks of two possessed, Luke of one; Matthew speaks of two blind Men begging, Mark but of one; Matthew speaks of both the Thieves mocking Christ, Luke speaks but of one doing so; harmonized. p. 230, 231. John saith that Mary Magdalene came to the Sepulchre while it was yet dark, Mark saith it was Sunrising: Matthew, and Mark mention but one Angel, Luke speaks of two at the Sepulchre. p. 269, 270. Thomas was not present when Christ appeared (at the Supper of the Apostles) after his Resurrection, yet Mark saith he appeared to the Eleven; so Luke 24. 3. Peter, and Cleopas found the Eleven; and 1 Corinth. 15. 5. He was seen of the twelve; the Title of the whole Chorus being used, though all was not present p. 271. The Holy Ghost useth to speak short in known Stories. p. 781. He seldom useth to speak out Stories to the full. Page 790

Holy Ghost, he only was to be given by the Apostles. p. 281. Where they gave only to such as were to be Preachers and Ministers; of which there was but two ends. p. 281. Holy Ghost, called The seven Spirits. p. 341. The being Baptized with the Holy Ghost what? p. 467, 468. It is received by the Gentiles, contrary to the Jewish opinion. p. 285. Why called Holy? p. 482. He had left the Jews for some time, but returned again at Christs Baptism, wherefore he did then return. p. 483, 484. Why he appeared in the shape of a Dove. p. 485. Holy Ghost is put for Prophetick Gifts, those extraordinary Gifts of the Spirit, which were bestowed upon Prophets, and Prophetick Men and Women. p. 499, 500. There was a difference of the fulness of the Holy Ghost in Christ, and the fulness which was in other men. p. 501. Holy Ghost was to be received after Christs departure at Jerusalem, the reasons of it. p. 737. The Holy Ghost was received, and the Gift of Tongues in likelyhood by all the rest of the hundred and twenty as well as the Apostles on the day of Pentecost. p. 750. Jews, a great number were all along in Egypt. p. 205. Their Language and Stile is much followed in the New Teſtament. p. 213, 214. They had three ways of oppoſing the Goſpel, — by a Prayer againſt Hereticks, — by Emiſſaries whoſe buſineſs were to cry it down, and preach every where againſt it, — by the uſe of Magick in doing ſtrange things; exceeding many of them being skilled therein. p. 290. They generally every where oppoſed the Goſpel. p. 294, 295, 296, 297. Both within and without Judea they were generally Judged by their own Magiſtracy. p. 302. They uſed to pray only for themſelves, and their own Nation. p. 309. In Babilon, in the days of Saint Peter, they were grown to ſo great and diſtinct a Nation (ſince the time of the Captivity) that they had a Prince of their own, and three Univerſities. 335. About Chriſts appearance, and eſpecially ſome little after, they were the moſt unquiet and tumultuous Nation under Heaven. p. 337. Beſides their common wickedneſs, they had four Additions monſtrous and unparalleld. p. 337. The cruelty of the Jews was moſt unparalleld, they murdered at one time of Greeks and Romans 460000 Men, eating their fleſh, devouring their Intrals, daubing themſelves with their Blood, and wearing their Skins, &c. p. 289, 366. After this multitude of thouſands of Jews were deſtroyed, 400000. Adrian walled a Vineyard ſixteen miles about with dead Bodies a Mans height; The Brains of three hundred of their Children were found upon one ſtone. p. 368. He deſtroyed fifty of their ſtrongeſt Gariſons, and nine hundred eighty five of their faireſt Towns, this was ſometime after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. 366, 367. They had five hundred Schools, and in every one five hundred Scholars; Rab. Akybah had 24000 Diſciples. p. 368. They were more mad of their Traditions, and Carnal Rites, after the fall of Jeruſalem than before. p. 370, 371. They were generally divided among themſelves, yet all of them oppoſed Chriſtianity to the utmoſt, when they themſelves were in their greateſt afflictions. p. 371. They deeply engage themſelves to ſtand by the Miſhnah and Talmud. p. 372. The Talmud of Babilon is their Standard for Rule and Religion to this day. 372.
